Softened with pleasure and voluptuous life. Milton.

Now to my charms
And to my wily trains! I shall ere long
Be well stock'd with as fair a herd as graz'd
About my mother Circe. Milton.

The practice begins of crafty men upon the simple and good; these easily follow and are caught, while the others lay trains and pursue a game. Temple.

2. The tail of a bird.

Costly followers are not to be liked, lest while a man makes his train longer he makes his wings shorter. Bacon.

Contrasting their body, and being forced to draw in their fore parts to establish the hinder in the elevation of the train, if the fore parts do part and incline to the ground, the hinder grow too weak, and suffer the train to fall. Brown.

The bird guideth her body with her train, and the ship is steered with the rudder. Hakewill.

Th' other, whose gay train
Adorn'd him colour'd with the florid hue
Of rainbows and starry eyes. Milton.

The train steers their flights, and turns their bodies like the rudder of a ship; as the kite, by a light turning of his train, moves his body which way he pleases. Ray.

3. The part of a gown that falls behind upon the ground.

A thousand pounds a year, for pure respect
That promises more thousands: honour's train
Is longer than his fore skirts. Shak. Hen. VIII.

4. A series; a consecution; either local or mental.

Rivers now stream, and draw their humid train. Milton.

Distinct gradual growth in knowledge carries its own light with it, in every step of its progress, in an easy and orderly train. Locke.

If we reflect on what is observable in ourselves, we shall find our ideas always passing in train, one going and another coming, without intermission. Locke.

They laboured in vain so far to reach the apostle's nearing, all along in the train of what he said. Locke.

Some truths result from any ideas, as soon as the mind puts them into propositions; other truths require a train of ideas placed in order, a due comparing of them, and deductions made with attention. Locke.

What wouldst thou have me do; consider well
Th' train of all our love would draw behind it. Addison.

The author of your beings can by a glance of the eye, or a word speaking, enlighten your mind, and conduct you to a train of happy sentiments. Watts.

5. Process; method; state of procedure.

If things were once in this train, if virtue were established as necessary to reputation, and vice not only loaded with infamy, but made the infallible ruin of all men's pretensions, our duty would take root in our nature. Swift.

6. A retinue; a number of followers or attendants.

My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That in the most exact regard support
The worships of their names. Shakespeare.

Our fire walks forth, without more train
Accompany'd than with his own complete Perfections. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Thou shouldst be seen
A goddess among gods, ador'd, and serv'd
By angels numberless, thy daily train. Milton.

He comes not with a train to move our fear. Dryden.

The king's daughter, with a lovely train
Of fellow nymphs, was sporting on the plain. Addison.

He would put a check to the fury of war, that a stop might be put to those sins which are of its

7. An orderly company; a procession.

Fairest of stars, last in the train of night,
If better thou belong not to the dawn. Milton.

Who the knights in green, and what the train
Of ladies dress'd with daisies on the plain? Dryden.

8. The line of powder reaching to the mine.

Since first they fall'd in their designs,
To take in heav'n by springing mines,
And with unanswerable barrels
Of gunpowder, dispute their quarrels:
Now take a course more practicable,
By laying trains to fire the rabble. Hud. br. n.
Shall he that gives fire to the train, pretend to wash his hands of the hurt that's done by the playing of the mine? L'Estrange's Fables.

9. TRAIN of artillery. Cannons accompanying an army.

With an army abundantly supplied with a train of artillery, and all other provisions necessary, the king advanced towards Scotland. Clarendon.

TRAINBANDS, n. f. [train and band: I suppose for trained band.] The militia; the part of a community trained to martial exercise.

He directed the trainbands, which consisted of the most substantial householders, to attend. Clar.

TRA

Give commission

To some bold man, whose loyalty you trust,
And let him raise the trainbands of the city. Dryd.
A council of war was called, wherein we agreed to retreat: but before we could give the word, the trainbands, taking advantage of our delay, fled first. Addison.

TRAINBANDER. n. s. [train and bearer.] One that holds up a train.

TRAINING. n. s. [train and oil.] Oil drawn by coction from the fat of the whale.

TRAINING. adj. [from train.] Belonging to train oil. A bad word.

Here stems ascend,
Where the huge hogheads sweet with trainy oil. Gay.

TO TRAIPE. v. a. [A low word. See TRAPE.] To walk in a careless or sluttish manner.

Two slipshod muses traipse along,
In lofty madrigals, meditating long. Pope.

TRAIT. n. s. [trait, Fr.] A stroke; a touch. Scarce English.

By this single trait Homer marks an essential difference between the Iliad and Odyssey, that in the former the people perished by the folly of their kings; in this, by their own folly. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.

TRAITOR. n. s. [traitre, Fr. traditor, Latin.] One who being trusted betrays.

The law laid that grievous punishment upon traitors, to forfeit all their lands to the prince, that men might be terrified from committing treasons. Spenser on Ireland.

If you flatter him, you are a great traitor to him. Bacon.

I'll put him thus far into the plot, that he should be secured as a traitor; but when I am out of reach, he shall be released. Dryd. Span. Friar.

There is no difference, in point of morality, whether a man calls me traitor in one word, or says I am one hired to betray my religion, and sell my country. Scuffi.

TRAITORLY. adj. [from traitor.] Treacherous; perfidious.

These traitorly rascals' miseries are to be smil'd at, their offences being so capital. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

TRAITOROUS. adj. [from traitor.] Treacherous; perfidious; faithless.

What news with him, that trait'rous wight? Daniel.

Pontinius knows not you,
While you stand out upon these traitorous terms. Ben Jonson.

The traitorous or treacherous, who have misled others, he would have severely punished, and the neutrals noted. Bacon.

More of his may God's friends have lost their lives in this rebellion than of his traitorous subjects. Addison's Freeholders.

TRAITOROUSLY. adv. [from traitorous.] In a manner suiting traitors; perfidiously; treacherously.

Good duke Humphry traitorously is murder'd. By Suffolk.

I thou biter swart whom I had laid
Next me, me traitorously hast betray'd,
And unsuspected halt a traitor. Donne.

At once fled into him, and stay'd with me. Donne.
They had traitorously endeavour'd to subvert the fundamental laws, deprive the king of his regal power, and to place on his subjects a tyrannical power. Clarendon.

TRAITRESS. n. s. [from traitor.] A woman who betrays.

What I am, by what I was, overcome:
I'll restore my beauty and my charms,
And my conquest with my proper arms. Dry.
The dire fury of a traitress' wife,
The sad evening of a stormy life. Pope's Od.

TRA

TRALATI'IOUS. adj. [from translatus, Lat.] Metaphorical; not literal.

TRALATI'IOUSLY. adv. [from tralati'ious.] Metaphorically; not literally; not according to the first intention of the word.

Language properly is that of the tongue directed to the ear by speaking, written language is tralati'iously so called, because it is made to represent to the eye the same words which are pronounced. Holder's Elements of Speech.

TO TRALI'NEATE. v. n. [trans and line.] To deviate from any direction.

If you tralineate from your father's mind,
What are you else but of a bastard kind?
Do then as your progenitors have done,
And by their virtues prove yourself their son. Dryden.

TRAMMEL. n. s. [trama, Fr. trama, trama, Lat.] A net in which birds or fish are caught.

The trammel differeth not much from the shape of the lunt, and serveth to such use as the wear and haking. Carew.

2. Any kind of net.

Her golden locks she roundly did uptry
In bridled trammels, that no looser hairs
Did out of order stray about her dainty ears. Spens.

3. A kind of shackles in which horses are taught to pace.

I may go shufflingly at first, for I was never before walked in trammels; yet I shall drudge at constancy, till I have worn off the hitching in my pace. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

TO TRAMMEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To catch; to intercept.

If th' assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch
With its surcussive success. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

TO TRAMPLE. v. a. [trampe, Danish.] To tread under foot with pride, contempt, or elevation.

Cast not your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet. Matt. vii. 6.
My strength shall trample thee as mine. Milton.

TO TRAMPLE. v. n. 1. To tread in contempt.

Diogenes trampled on Plato's pride with greater of his own. Government of the Tongue.

2. To tread quick and loudly.

I hear his thundering voice rebound,
And trampling feet that shake the solid ground. Dryden.

TRAMPLER. n. s. [from trample.] One that tramples.

TRANATION. n. s. [trano, Latin.] The act of swimming over.

TRANCE. n. s. [trans, Fr. transitus, Lat.] It might therefore be written trans. An ecstasy; a state in which the soul is wrapt into visions of future or distant things; a temporary absence of the soul from the body.

Gynecia had been in such a trance of musing, that Zelmene was fighting with the lion before she knew of any lion's coming. Sidney.

Rapt with joy resembling heavenly madnets,
My soul was ravish'd quite as in a trance. Spenser's Sonnets.

That Taliesin, once which made the rivers dance,
And in his rapture rais'd the mountains from their trance. Drayton.

Abstract as in a trance, methought I saw. Milt.
Sudden he starts,
Shook from his tender trance. Thompson's Spring.

TRA

TRANCED. adj. [from trance.] Lying in a trance or ecstasy.

His grief grew puffed, and the strings of life began to crack. Twice then the trumpets sound'd, And there I left him transc'd. Shak. King Lear.

TRANGRAM. n. s. [A cant word.] An odd intricately contrived thing.

What's the meaning of all these transgrams and gimcracks? what are you going about, jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds? Arbutnot.

TRANNEL. n. s. A sharp pin. Perhaps from trammel.

With a small trannel of iron, or a large nail grounded to a sharp point, they mark the brick. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

TRANQUIL. adj. [tranquille, Fr. tranquillus, Latin.] Quiet; peaceful; undisturbed.

I had been happy,
So I had nothing known. Oh now, for ever Farewel the tranquil mind! farewell content! Shak.

TRANQUILLITY. n. s. [tranquillitas, Lat. tranquillité, Fr.] Quiet; peace of mind; peace of condition; freedom from perturbation.

Leave off,
To let a weary wretch from her due rest,
And trouble dying souls tranquillity. Spenser.

How reverend is the face of this tall pile,
Whose aged pillars rear their marble heads
To bear aloft its arch'd and pond'rous roof,
By its own weight made steadfast and immovable, Looking tranquillity! Congrave.

You can scarce imagine any hero passing from one stage of life to another with so much tranquillity, so easy a transition, and so laudable a behaviour. Pope.

TO TRANSACT. v. a. [transactus, Lat.] 1. To manage; to negotiate; to conduct a treaty or affairs.

2. To perform; to do; to carry on.

It cannot be expected they should mention particulars which were transacted amongst some few of the disciples only, as the transfiguration and the agony. Addison.

TRANSACTION. n. s. [transactio, Fr. from transact.] Negotiation; dealing between man and man; management; affairs; things managed.

It is not the purpose of this discourse to set down the particular transactions of this treaty. Clarendon.

TRANSANIMATION. n. s. [trans and anima.] Conveyance of the soul from one body to another.

If the transanimation of Pythagoras were true, that the souls of men transmigrate into species answering the former nature, some men cannot escape that very brood whose sire Satan entered. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO TRANSCEND. v. a. [transcendo, Lat.] 1. To pass; to overpass.

It is a dangerous opinion to such popes as shall transcend their limits and become tyrannical. Bacon.
To judge herself, the most herself transcend,
As greater circles comprehend the less. Davies.

2. To surpass; to outgo; to exceed; to excel.

This glorious piece transcends what he could think;
So much his blood is nobler than his ink. Waller.

These are they Deserve their greatness and unenvy'd stand,
Since what they act transcends what they command. Deh'm.

High though her wit, yet humble was her mind,
As if she could not, or she would not find
How much her worth transcended all her kind. Dryden.

3. To surmount; to rise above.

Make disquisition whether these unusual lights be meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies. Howell.

To TRANSCEND. v. n.

1. To climb. Not in use.

To conclude, because things do not easily sink, they do not down at all, the futility is a frequent addition in human expressions, which of course give distinct accounts of proximity, and transcend from one unto another. Bacon.

2. To surpass thought.

The confidence of grace and free will, in this sense, is no such transcending mystery, and I think there is no text in scripture that founds any thing towards making it so. Hammond.

1. Excellence; unusual excellence; supereminence.

2. Exaggeration; elevation beyond truth.

It is true greatness to have in one the frailty of a man, and the security of a God: this would have done better in poetry, where transcendencies are more allowed. Bacon's Essays.

TRANSCENDENT. adj. [transcendens, Lat. transcendant, French.] Excellent; supremely excellent; passing others.

The title of queen is given by Ignatius to the Lord's-day, not by way of derogation or diminution, but to signify the eminent and transcendent honour of the day. White.

Thou, whose strong hand, with so transcendent worth,

Holds high the rein of fair Parthenope. Grashaw.
There is, in a law-giver, a habitual and ultimate intention of a more excellent and transcendent nature. Bishop Sandeford.

If thou beest he—But O! how tall'n, how chang'd

From him who in the happy realms of light,
Cloath'd with transcendent brightness, didst outline
Myriads, though bright! Milton.

Oh charming prince! O transcendent maid! A. Philips.

The right our Creator has to our obedience is of so high and transcendent a nature, that it can suffer no competition; his commands must have the first and governing influence on all our actions. Rogers's Sermons.

TRANSCENDENTAL. adj. [transcendentalis, low Lat.]

1. General; pervading many particulars.

2. Supereminent; passing others.

Though the Deity perceiveth not pleasure nor pain, as we do; yet he must have a perfect and transcendental perception of these, and of all other things. Greco's Cosmologia.

TRANSCENDENTLY. adv. [from transcendent.] Excellently; supereminently.

The law of Christianity is eminently and transcendently called the word of truth. South's Sermons.

To TRANSCOLATE. v. a. [trans and colo, Latin.] To strain through a sieve or colander; to suffer to pass, as through a strainer.

The lungs are, unless pervious like a sponge, unfit to imbibe and transcolate the air. Harvey.

To TRANSCRIBE. v. a. [transcribo, Lat. transcrire, French.] To copy; to write from an exemplar.

He was the original of all those inventions, from which others did but transcribe copies. Clar.

The most rigid exactors of mere outward purity do but transcribe the folly of him who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak. Decay of Piety.

If we imitate their repentance as we transcribe their faults, we shall be received with the same mercy. Rogers.

TRANSCRIBER. n. s. [from transcribo.]

A copier; one who writes from a copy.

A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and transcribers. Addison.

Writings have been corrupted by little and little, by unskilful transcribers. Watson.

TRANSCRIPT. n. s. [transcript, French; transcriptum, Lat.] A copy; any thing written from an original.

The Grecian learning was but a transcript of the Chaldean and Egyptian; and the Roman of the Grecian. Glanville.

The decalogue of Moses was but a transcript, not an original. South's Sermons.

Dictate, O mighty Judge! what thou hast seen
Of crimes and of courts, of books and men,
And deign to let thy servant hold the pen.
Through ages thus I may presume to live,
And from the transcript of thy prose receive What my own illot-lav'd verse can never give. Prior.

TRANSCRIPTION. n. s. [transcription, Fr. from transcriptus, Lat.] The act of copying.

The ancients were but men; the practice of transcription in our days was no monster in then's: plagiarism had not its nativity with printing, but began in times when thefts were difficult. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The corruptions that have crept into it by many transcriptions was the cause of so great difference. Brerewood.

TRANSCRIPTIVELY. adv. [from transcript.] In manner of a copy.

Not a few transcriptively subscribing their names to other men's endeavours, transcribe all they have written. Brown.

To TRANSCUR. v. n. [transcurro, Lat.]

To run or rove to and fro.

By fixing the mind on one object, it doth not spallate and transcur. Bacon.

TRANSCURSION. n. s. [from transcurro, Lat.] Ramble; passage through; passage beyond certain limits; extraordinary deviation.

In a great whale, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body instantly make a transcurSION throughout the whole. Bacon's Natural History.

I have briefly run over transcurSIONs, as if my pen had been posting with them. Wotton's Life of Buckingham.

His philosophy gives them transcurSIONs beyond the vortex we breathe in, and leads them through others which are only known in an hypothesis. Glanville's Steps.

I am to make often transcurSIONs into the neighbouring souls as I pass along. Howell.

If man were out of the world, who were then left to view the face of heaven, to wonder at the transcurSION of comets? Milton's Ant. against Atheism.

TRANSE. n. s. [trans, Fr. See FRANCE.]

A temporary absence of the soul; an ecstasy.

Abstract as in a trans, methought I saw,
Though sleeping, where I lay, and saw the shape
Still glorious before whom awake I stood. Milton.

TRANSELEMENTATION. n. s. [trans and element.] Change of one element into another.

Rain we allow; but if they suppose any other *trans*elementation, it neither agrees with Moses's philosophy nor St. Peter's. Burn's Theory of the Earth.

TRANSEXION. n. s. [trans and sexus, Lat.]

Change from one sex to another.

It much impeacheth the iterated *trans*exion of hairs, if that be true which some physicians affirm, that transmutation of sexes was only so in opinion, and that those *trans*sexed persons were really men at first. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To TRANSFER. v. a. [transfero, Fr. transfere, Latin.]1. To convey; to make over from one to another; with to, sometimes with upon.

He that transfers the laws of the Lacedemonians to the people of Athens, should find a great absurdity and inconvenience. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Was't not enough you took my crown away,
But cruelly you must my love betray?
I was well pleas'd to have transferr'd my right,
And better chang'd your claim of lawless might. Dryden.

The king,
Who from himself all envy would remove,
Left both to be determin'd by the laws,
And to the Grecian chiefs transferr'd the cause. Dryden.

This was one perverse effect of their sitting at ease under their vines and fig-trees, that they forgot from whence that ease came, and transferr'd all the honour of it upon themselves. Atterb. Scam.

Your sacred and religious monarchs own,
When first they merit, then ascend the throne:
But tyrants dread you, lest your just decree
Transferr the power, and set the people free. Prior.

By reading we learn not only the actions, and the sentiments of distant nations, but transfer to ourselves the knowledge and improvements of the most learned men. Watts.

2. To remove; to transport.

The king was much moved with this unexpected accident, because it was stirred in such a place where he could not with safety transfer his own person to suppress it. Bacon.

He thirty rolling years the crown shall wear,
Then from Lavinium shall the seat transfer. Dryden.

TRANSFER. n. s. A change of property; a delivery of property to another.TRANSFERER. n. s. He that transfers.TRANSFIGURATION. n. s. [transfiguration, French.]

1. Change of form.

In kinds where the dissimulation of sexes is obscure, their transformations are more common, and in some without commixture; as in caterpillars or silkworms, wherein there is a visible and triple transfiguration. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. The miraculous change of our blessed Saviour's appearance on the Mount.

It cannot be expected that other authors should mention particulars which were transfigured amongst some of the disciples; such as the transfiguration and the agony in the garden. Addison.

Did Raphael's pencil never chuse to fall?
Say, are his works transfigurations all? Blackmore.

To TRANSFIGURE. v. a. [transfigurer, French; trans and figura, Latin.]

To transform; to change with respect to outward appearance.

I am the more zealous to transfigure your love into devotion, because I have observed your passion to have been extremely impatient of confinement. Boyle.

The nuptial right his outrage strait attends,
The dow'r desir'd is his transfigur'd friends:

The incantation backward she repeats,
Inverts her rod, and what she did defeats. Garth.

To TRANSFIX. v. a. [transfixus, Lat.]

To pierce through.

Amongst these mighty-men were women mix'd;
The bold Sennamir, whose sides transfix'd
With son's own blade, her soul reproaches spoke. Spenser.

With linked thunderbolts
Transfix us to the bottom of this gulph. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Diana's dart
In an unhappy chase transfix'd her heart. Dryden's Homer.

Nor good Eurytion envy'd him the prize,
Though ne transfix'd the pigeon in the skies. Dryden.

Till fate shall with a single dart,
Transfix the pair: it cannot part. Fenton.

To TRANSFORM. v. a. [transformer, Fr. trans and forma, Latin.] To metamorphose; to change with regard to external form.

She demanded of him, whether the goddess of those woods had such a power to transform every body. Sidney.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy. Shakespeare.

As is the fable of the lady turn,
Which for her lust was turn'd into a cow;
When thirsty to a stream she did repair,
And saw herself transform'd the wist not how. Davies.

To TRANSFORM. v. n. To be metamorphosed.

His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet
In skinny films, and shape his oary feet. Addison.

TRANSFORMATION. n. f. [from transform.] Change of shape; act of changing the form; state of being changed with regard to form; metamorphosis.

Something you have heard
Of Hamlet's transformation, so I call it,
Since not the exterior, nor the inward man,
Resembles that it was. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

What beast couldst thou be, that were not subject to a beast?
—And what a beast art thou already, and feelst not thy loss in transformation! Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

The mensuration of all manner of curves, and their mutual transformation, are not worth the labour of those who design either of the three learned professions. Watts.

TRANSFRETATION. n. f. [trans and fretum, Latin.] Passage over the sea.

Since the old transfretation of King Richard the second, the crown of England never lent over numbers of men sufficient to defend the small territory. Darwin on Ireland.

To TRANSFUSE. v. a. [transfusus, Lat.]
To pour out of one into another.

Between men and beast, there is no possibility of social communion; because the well-being of that communion is a natural delight which man hath to transfuse from himself into others, and to receive from others into himself, especially those things wherein the excellency of his kind doth most consist. Hobbes.

Transfus'd on thee his ample spirit rests.
When did his muse from Fletcher's reines purloin,
As thou whole Eth'ridge dost transfuse to mine?
But his transfus'd, as oil and waters flow,
His airy flats above, thine sinks below. Dryden.

Where the juices are in a morbid state, if one could supply all the unbound juices taken away and sound juices immediately transfus'd, the sound juices would grow morbid. Arbuthnot.

TRANSFUSION. n. f. [transfusion, Fr. transfusio, Latin.] The act of pouring out of one into another.

The rouked part of the pine was placed in a box, to prevent the loss of the quicksilver that might fall aside in the transfusion from the vessel into the pipe. Baker.

Poetry is so subtle a spirit, that in the pouring out of one language into another it will all expate; and if a new spirit be not added in the transfusion, there will remain nothing but a caput mor-tuum. De Ham.

Something must be lost in all transfusion, that is, in all transitions, but the sense will remain. Dryden.

What noise have we had about transplanting of trees, and transfusion of blood! Baker on Learning.

TRANSGRESSION. v. a. [transgressor, Fr. transgresser, Latin.]
To pass over; to pass beyond.

Long stood the noble youth oppress'd with awe,
And stupid at the wondrous things he saw, Surpassing common faith, transgressing nature's law. Dryden.

2. To violate; to break.

Let no man doubt but that every thing is well done, because the world is ruled by so good a guide as transgress is not his own law, than which nothing can be more absolute, perfect, and just. Hook.

This sorrow we must repeat as often as we transgress the divine commandments.

Wake's Preparation for Death.

To TRANSGRESS. v. n. To offend by violating a law.

I would not marry her, though she were endowed with all Adam had left him before he transgress'd. Shakespeare.

Achan transgress'd in the thing accursed. 1 Chron. iii. 7.

He upbraideth us with our offending the law, and objecteth to our infamy the transgressings of our education. Wisdom.

TRANSGRESSION. n. f. [transgression, Fr. from transgress.]

1. Violation of a law; breach of a command.

Shall I abuse this consecrated gift.

Of strength, again returning with my hair
After my great transgression: so require Favour renew'd, and add a greater sin? Milton.

All accusation still is founded upon some law;
for where there is no law, there can be no transgression; and where there can be no transgression, there ought to be no accusation. South's Sermons.

2. Offence; crime; fault.

What's his fault?

—The flat transgression of a school-boy, who, being overjoyed with finding a bird's nest, shows it his companion, and he steals it.

—Wilt thou make a trust a transgression? The transgression is in the stealer. Shakespeare's Much Ado.
Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude transgression
Some fair excuse. Shakespeare's Love's Labour Lost.

TRANSGRESSIVE. adj. [from transgress.]
Faulty; culpable; apt to break laws.

Though permitted unto his proper principles, Adam perhaps would have sinned without the suggestion of Satan, and from the transgressive infirmities of his nature might have erred alone, as well as the angels before him. Brown.

TRANSGRESSOR. n. f. [transgresseur, Fr. from transgress.] Lawbreaker; violator of command; offender.

He intended the discipline of the church should be applied to the greatest and most splendid trans-gressors, as well as to the punishment of meaner offenders. Clarendon.

I go to judge

On earth these thy transgressors; but thou know'st
Whoever judg'd, the worst on me must light
When time shall be. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Ill worthy I, such guilt should belong
To me transgressor! What, for thee ordain'd
A whip, became thy share. Milton's Paradise Lost.

TRANSIENT. adj. [transiens, Latin.] Soon past; soon passing; short; momentary; not lasting; not durable.

How soon hath thy prediction, teer blest!
Measur'd this transient world, the race of time,
Till time stand fix'd. Milton.

He that rides post through a country, may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie. Locke.

Low, hitherto a transient guest,
Ne'er had possession in his breast.
What it look'd love? a transient guest,
A vapour fed from wild desire. Pope.

TRANSIENTLY. adv. [from transient.]
In passage; with a short passage; not with continuance.

I touch here but transiently, without any strict method, on some few of those many rules of imitating nature which Aristotle drew from Homer.

TRANSIENTNESS. n. f. [from transient.] Shortness of continuance; speedy passage.

It were to be wished that all words of this sort,
as they resemble the wind in fury and impetuoufness, so they might do also in transientness and sudden expiration. Decay of Poetry.

TRANSILIENCY. n. f. [from transilio, TRANSILIENCY. Latin.] Leap from thing to thing.

By unadvised transiliency leaping from the effect to its remotest cause, we observe not the connection of more immediate causalities. Glennville's Scripps.

TRANSIT. n. f. [transitus, Latin.] In astronomy, the passing of any planet just by or under any fixed star; or of the moon covering or moving close by any other planet. Harris.

TRANSITION. n. f. [transitio, Latin.]

1. Removal; passage from one to another.

Heat and cold have a virtual transition without communication of substance, but moisture not.

As for the mutation of sexes, and transition into one another, we cannot deny it in herbs, it being observable in man. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

I have given some intimations of the changes which happen in the interior parts of the earth, I mean the transitions and removes of metals and minerals there. Woodward.

2. Change; made of change.

The spots are of the same colour throughout, there being an immediate transition from white to black, and not declining gradually, and mixing as they approach. Woodward.

You can scarce imagine any hero passing from one stage of life to another with so easy a transition, and so laudible a behaviour. Pope.

As once inclin'd in woman's beauteous mould;
Thence, by a soft transition we repair
From earthly vehicles to these of air. Pope.

3. [Transition, French.] Passage in writing or conversation from one subject to another.

He with transition sweet new speech resumes.

Milton.

Covetousness was none of his faults, but described as a veil over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satirize his prodigality and voluptuousness, to which he makes a transition. Dryden.

TRANSITIVE. adj. [transitivus, Latin.]

1. Having the power of passing.

One cause of cold is the contact of cold bodies;
for cold is active and transitive into bodies adjacent, as well as heat. Bacon's Natural History.

2. [In grammar.]

A verb transitive is that which signifies an action, conceived as having an effect upon some object; as ferio terram, I strike the earth. Clarke's Lat. Gram.

TRANSITORILY. adv. [from transitory.]
With speedy evanescence; with short continuance.

TRANSITORINESS. n. f. [from transitory.]
Speedy evanescence.

TRANSITORY. adj. [transitoire, Fr. transitorius, from transire, Latin.] Continuing but a short time; speedily vanishing.

O Lord, comfort and succour all them who in this transitory life are in trouble. Common Prayer.

If we love things have sought; age is a thing
Which we are fifty years in compassing;
If transitory things, which to a decay,
Age must be loveliest at the latest day. Denne.

Religion prefers those pleasures which flow from the presence of God evermore, infinitely before the transitory pleasures of this world. Tillot's Sermon.

To

To TRANSLATE. v. a. [translatum, Lat.]

1. To transport; to remove.

Since our father is translated unto the gods, our will is, that they that are in our realm live quietly. 2 Mac. xi. 23.

By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death. Hebrews, xi. 5.

Those argent fields
Translated saints or middle spirits hold. Milton.

Of the same soil their nursery prepare
With that of their plantation, lest the tree
Translated should not with the soil agree. Dryden.

The gods their shapes to winter buds translute,
But both obnoxious to their former fate. Dryden.

To go to heaven is to be translated to that kingdom you have longed for; to enjoy the glories of eternity. Wake.

2. It is particularly used of the removal of a bishop from one see to another.

Fisher, bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him from that poor bishop-rick to a better, he refused, saying, he would not forfake his poor little old wife, with whom he had so long lived. Camden's Remains.

3. To transfer from one to another; to convey.

I will translate the kingdom from the house of Saul, and set up the throne of David. 2 Samuel, lii. 10.

Lucian affirms the souls of usurers, after their death, to be metempsychosed, or translated into the bodies of asses, there to remain for poor men to take their pennyworths out of their bones and sides with the cudgel and spur. Peacham.

As there are apoplexies from inveterate gout, the regimen must be to translate the moribund matter upon the extremities of the body. Arbuth.

Perverse mankind! whose wills, created free,
Charge all their woes on absolute decree;
All to the dooming gods their guilt translute,
And follies are miscall'd the crimes of fate. Pope.

4. To change.

One do I personate of Timon's frame,
Whom fortune with her iv'ry hand wasts to her,
Whose present grace to present slaves and servants
Translates his rival. Shakespeare's Timon.

Happy is your grace,
That can translate the stubbornness of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a style. Shakespeare's As you like it.

5. [Translator, old French] To interpret in another language; to change into another language retaining the sense.

I can contrive the Idiom of her familiar stile, and the hardest voice of her behaviour, to be englished right, is, I am Sir John Falstaff's.

—He hath studied her well, and translated her out of honesty into English. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Nor word for word too faithfully translate. Recommen.

Read this ere you translate one bit
Of books of high renown. Swift.

Were it meant that in despite
Of art and nature such dull clouds should write, Bavius and Mævius had been fav'd by fate
For Settle and for Shadwell to translate. Duke.

6. To explain. A low colloquial use.

There's matter in these sighs, these profound heaves
You must translate; 'tis fit we understand them. Shakespeare's Care.

TRANSLATION. n. f. [translatio, Latin.]

translation, French.]

1. Removal; act of removing.

His disale was an asthma; the cause, a metastasis or translation of humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey.

Translations of moribund matter arise in acute dilempers. Arbuthnot.

2. The removal of a bishop to another see.

If part of the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or cypers in the privation or translation. Bacon's War with Spain.

The king, the next time the bishop of London came to him, entertained him with the compella-tion, My lord's grace of Canterbury, you are very welcome, and gave order for all the necessary forms for the translation. Clarendon.

3. The act of turning into another language; interpretation.

A book of his travels hath been honoured with translation into many languages. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Nor ought a genius less than in his that wits,
Attempt translation; for transplanted wit
All the defects of air and soil doth share,
And colder brain-like colder climates are. Durh.

4. Something made by translation; version.

Of translations, the better I acknowledge that which cometh nearest to the very letter of the very original verity. Hosker.

TRANSLATIVE. adj. [translativus, Latin.] Taken from others.

TRANSLATOR. n. f. [translaturus, old Fr. from translate.] One that turns any thing into another language.

A new and nobler way thou dost pursue,
To make translations and translators too. Denham.

No translation our own country ever yet produced, hath come up to that of the Old and New Testament, and I am persuaded, that the translators of the Bible were masters of an English stile much fitter for that work than any we see in our present writings, the which is owing to the simplicity that runs through the whole. Swift.

TRANSLATORY. n. f. [from translate.] Transferring.

The translatory is a lie that transfers the merits of a man's good action to another more deserving. Arbuthnot.

TRANSLOCATION. n. f. [trans and locus, Lat.] Removal of things reciprocally to each other's places.

I here happened certain translocations at the deluge, the matter constituting animal and vegetable substances being dissolved, and mineral matter substituted in its place, and thereby like translo all n
of metals in some springs. Woodward.

TRANSLUCENCY. n. f. [from translucent.] Diaphaneity; transparency.

Lumps of rock crystal heated red hot, then quenched in fair water, exchanged their translu-cency for whiteness, the ignition and extinction having cracked each lump into a multitude of minute bodies. Boyle on Colours.

TRANSLUCENT. } adj. [trans and lucidus, Latin.] } Diaphanous; clear; giving a passage to the light.

In anger the spirits ascend and wax eager; which is seen in the eyes, because they are translucid. Bacon.

Wherever fountain or fresh current flows
Against the eastern rays, translucent, pure,
With touch ethereal of heaven's fiery rod,
I drank. Milton.

The golden ewer a maid obsequious brings,
Replenish'd from the cool translucent fountains. Pope's Odyssey.

TRANSMARINE. adj. [transmarinus, Latin.] Lying on the other side of the sea; found beyond sea.

She might have made herself mistress of Timaucania, her next transmarine neighbour. Houzel's Focal Fables.

To TRANSMUTE. v. a. [transmutare, Latin; transmuter, Fr.] To transmute; to transform; to metamorphose; to change.

Obsolete.

When him list the rascal transmut appall,
Men into stones therewith he could transmut,
And stones to dust, and dust to nought at all. Spenser.

TRANSMIGRANT. adj. [transmigrant, Lat.] Passing into another country or state.

Besides an union in sovereignty, or a conjunction in facts, there are other implicit confederations, that of colonies or transmigrants towards their mother nation. Bacon's Holy War.

To TRANSMIGRATE. v. n. [transmigro, Lat.] To pass from one place or country into another.

This complexion is maintained by generation;
so that strangers contract it not, and the natives which transmigrate omit it not without commix-ture. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If Pythagoras's transmigration were true, that the souls of men transmigrate into species answering their former natures, some men must live over many serpents. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Their souls may transmigrate into each other. Houzel.

Regard
The post of Luna, says our learned bard;
Who, in a drunken dream, beheld his foul
The fifth within the transmigrating roll. Dryden.

TRANSMIGRATION. n. f. [transmigration, Fr. from transmigrate.] Passage from one place or state into another.

The sequel of the conjunction of natures in the person of Christ is no abolishment of natural properties appertaining to either substance, no transition or transmigration thereof out of one substance into another. Hosker.

Seeing the earth of itself puts forth plants without seed, plants may well have a transmigration of species. Bacon.

From the opinion of the metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into the bodies of beasts, most suitable unto their human condition, after his death, Cyprius the musician became a swan. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Eating their passage hence, for intercourse
Of transmigration, as their lot shall lead. Milton.

'Twas taught by wise Pythagoras,
One soul might through more bodies pass:
Seeing such transmigration there,
She thought it not a fable here. Denham.

When thou wert young, heav'n did a man begin,
But the brute soul by chance was shuffled in:
In woods and wilds thy nonchancy maintain,
Where valiant beasts, by force and rapine, reign
In life's next scene, if transmigration be,
Some bear or lion is reserv'd for thee. Dryden's Aurengzeb.

TRANSMISSION. n. f. [transmissio, Fr. from transmittere, Latin.] The act of sending from one place to another, or from one person to another.

If there were any such notable transmission of a column higher out of Spain, the very chronicles of Spain would not have omitted to memorize a thing. Spenser on Ireland.

Operations by transmission of spirit is one of the highest secrets in nature. Bacon's Natural History.

In the transmission of the sea-water into the pits,
the water riseth; but in the transmission of the water through the vessels, it falleth. Bacon.

These move swiftly, but then they require a medium well disposed, and then transmission is easily stopped. Bacon.

The urea has a muscular power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it called the pupil, for the better moderating the transmission of light. Morre.

Languages of countries are lost by transmission of colonies of a different language. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

This enquiry will be of use, as a parallel discovery of the transmission of the English laws into Scotland. Hale.

The refraction or transmission depends on the constitution of the air and water behind the glass, and not the striking of the rays upon the parts of the glass. Newton's Opticks.

TRANSMISSION.

TRANSMISSIVE. adj. [from transmissus, Lat.] Transmitted; derived from one to another.

And still the fire inculcates to his son
Transmissive lessons of the king's renown. Prior.
Methinks a son; it with transmissive light Enlivens worlds deny'd to human sight. Prior.
'Then grateful Greece' with streaming eyes would taste

His quick marbles to record his praise;
His pure eternal, on the faithful stone,
Had rich transmissiv honour grac'd his son. Pope.

TRANSMIT. v. a. [transmitto, Latin; transmettre, French.] To send from one person or place to another.

By means of writing, former ages transmit the memorial of ancient times and things to posterity.

The sun orders to his friend in Spain to sell his estate, and trans it the money to him. Addison.

'Thus flourish'd love, and beauty reign'd in state,
Till the proud Spaniard gave this glory's date:
Faint is the gallantry, the same reigns,
Transmitted safe in Dryden's lofty scenes. Granville.
Shine forth, ye planets, with diffusing light;
Again transmit your friendly beams to earth,
As when Britannia joy'd for Anna's birth. Prior.

TRANSMITTAL. n. f. [from transmit.] The act of transmitting; transmission.
I know not that this word has any authority.

Besides the transmittal to England of two thirds of the revenues of Ireland, they make our country a receptacle for their supererogatory pretenders to offices. Swift.

TRANSMITTER. n. f. [from transmit.] One that transmits.

TRANSMUTABLE. adj. [transmutable, Fr. from transmute.] Capable of change; possible to be changed into another nature or substance.

It is no easy matter to demonstrate that air is so much as convertible into water; how transmutable it is unto flesh may be of deeper doubt.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The fluids and solids of an animal body are easily transmutable into one another. Arbutnot on Aliments.

TRANSMUTABLY. adv. [from transmute.] With capacity of being changed into another substance or nature.

TRANSMUTATION. n. f. [transmutation, Fr. transmutatio, from transmutato, Lat.]

1. Change into another nature or substance. The great aim of alchemy is the transmutation of base metals into gold.

Am not I old Sly's son, by birth a pedlar, by education a card-maker, by transmutation a bear-herd? Shakespeare.

The transmutation of plants one into another, is inter magna natura, for the transmutation of species is, in the vulgar philosophy, pronounced impossible; but being there appear some manifest instances of it, the opinion of impossibility is to be rejected, and the means thereof to be found out.

The conversion into a body merely new, and which was not before, as silver to gold, or iron to copper, is better called, for distinction sake, transmutation. Bacon.

The changing of bodies into light, and light into bodies, is very conformable to the course of nature, which seems delighted with transmutation. Water, which is a very fluid tasteless salt, the changes by heat into vapour, which is a sort of air, and by cold into ice, which is a hard, pellucid, brittle, fusible stone; and this stone returns into water by heat, and water returns into vapour by cold.

Newton.
The supposed change of worms into flies is no transmutation; but most of those members, which at last become visible to the eye, are existent at the beginning, artificially complicated together.

Bentley's Sermons.

2. Successive change. Not proper.

The same land suffereth sundry transmutations of owners within one term. Bacon's Office of Alienation.
TO TRANSMUTE. v. n. [transmuto, Latin; transmuier, Fr.] To change from one nature or substance to another.

Suidas thinks, that by the golden fleece was meant a golden book of parchment, which is of sheep's-skin, and therefore called golden, because it was taught therein how other metals might be transmuted. Rolag.

That metals may be transmuted one into another, I am not fatigued of the fact. Ray in the Creation.
TRANSMUTER. n. f. [from transmutare.] One that transmutes.

TRANSOM. n. f. [transenna, Lat.]

1. A thwart beam or lintel over a door.

2. [Among mathematicians.] The vane of an instrument called a crois staff, being a piece of wood fixed acrois with a square socket upon which it slides. Barley.

TRANSPARENCY. n. f. [transparence, Fr. from transparent] Clearness; diaphaneity; translucence; power of transmitting light.

A poet of another nation would not have dwelt so long upon the clearness and transparency of the stream; but in Italy one seldom sees a river that is extremely bright and limpid, most of them being muddy. Addison.

Another cause is the greater transparency of the vessels, occasioned by the thinness and delicacy of their coats. Aitkennot.

TRANSPARENT. adj. [transparent, Fr. trans and appareo, Lat.] Pervious to the light; clear; pellucid; diaphanous; translucent; not opaque.

Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright,
Through the transparent bosom of the deep,
As doth thy face through tears of mine give light:
Thou shin'st in every tear that I do weep. Shakespeare.

Wait upon him with whom you speak with your eye; for there be many vile men that have secret hearts and transparent countenances. Bacon's Essays.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within,
As through a crystal case the figur'd hours are seen;
And heav'n did this transparent veil provide,
Because he had no guilty thought to hide. Dryden.

Her bosom appeared all of crystal, and so wonderfully transparent, that I saw every thought in her heart. Addison.

Transparent forms, too fine for mortal sight,
Their fluid bodies half-dissolv'd in light. Pope.

TRANSPICUOUS. adj. [trans and specio, Lat.] Transparent; pervious to the sight.

What if that light,
Sent from her through the wide transpicuous air,
To the terrestrial moon be as a star? Milton.

Now thy wine's transpicuous, purg'd from all
Its earthy gross, yet let it feed awhile
On the fat refuse. Philips.

TO TRANSPIERCE. v. n. [transpercer, Fr. trans and pierce.] To penetrate; to make way through; to permeate.

A mind, which through each part infus'd doth pass,

Fashions and works, and wholly doth transpierce
All this great body of the universe. Raleigh.

His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks of jointed wood:

The sides transpierc'd return a rattling sound,
And groans of Greeks inclus'd came issuing through the wound. Dryden's Æneid.

TRANSPARATION. n. f. [transpiration, Fr.] Emission in vapour.

That a bullet dipped in oil, by preventing the transpiration of air, will carry farther, and pierce deeper, my experience cannot dissuade.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The transpiration of the obstructed fluids is imagined to be one of the ways that an inflammation is removed. Starb.

TO TRANSPIRE. v. a. [transpiro, Lat. transpirer, French.] To emit in vapour.

TO TRANSPIRE. v. n. [transpirer, Fr.]

1. To be emitted by insensible vapour.
The nuts I eat are full of a fat pulpy matter, which in time transpires and passes through the shell. Woodward.

2. To escape from secrecy to notice: a sense lately innovated from France, without necessity.

TO TRANSPLA'CE. v. a. [trans and plate.] To remove; to put into a new place.

It was transplaced from the left side of the Vatican into a more eminent place.

Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.
TO TRANSPLANT. v. a. [trans and planto, Latin; transplanter, French.]

1. To remove and plant in a new place.
The noblest fruits transplanted in our isle,
With early hope and fragrant blossoms smile

Roscommon.

Salopian acres flourish with a growth Peculiar, still'd the Orley; be thou first
This apple to transplant. Philips.

2. To remove and settle.
It may transplant themselves into plantations abroad, who are schismatics or outlaws, such are not fit to lay the foundation of a new colony.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

3. To remove.
Of light the greater part he took
Transplanted from her cloudy shrine, and plac'd
In the sun's orb. Milton.

He prospered at the rate of his own wishes, being transplanted out of his cold barren diocese of Saint David's into a warmer climate. Clarendon.

TRANSPANTATION. n. f. [transplantation, Fr.]

1. The act of transplanting or removing to another soil.

It is confessed, that love changed often doth nothing; nay, it is nothing; for love, where it is kept fixed to its first object, though it burn not, yet it warms and cherishes, so as it needs no transplantation, or change of soil, to make it fruitful.

Suckling.

2. Conveyance from one to another.

What notice have we had for some years about transplantation of diseases, and transfusion of blood!

3. Removal of men from one country to another.

Most of kingdoms have thoroughly felt the calamities of forcible transplantations, being either overwhelmed by new colonies that fell upon them, or driven, as one wave is driven by another, to seek new seats, having lost their own.

This appears a replication to what Menelaus had offered concerning the transplantation of Ulysses to Sparta. Broome.

TRANSPLA'NTER. n. f. [from transplant.] One that transplants.

TO TRANSPORT. v. a. [trans and porto, Lat. transporter, French.]

1. To convey by carriage from place to place.

I came hither to transport the tidings. Shakespeare.
Why should she write to Edmund? might not you

Transport her purposes by word? Shakespeare.

Rivers from one end of the world to the other which, among, other uses, were made to transport men.

Raleigh.

A subterranean wind transports a bill Torn from Pylorus.

Cæsar found the seas betwixt France and Britain
So ill furnished with vessels that he was fain to make ships to transport his army.

In the disturbances of a state, the wife Pompeius transported all the remaining wisdom and virtue of his country into the sanctuary of peace and learning.

2. To carry into banishment as a felon.

We return after being transported, and are ten times greater rogues than before.

3. To sentence as a felon to banishment.

4. To hurry by violence of passion.

You are transported by calamity
Thither where more attends you, and you slander
The helms o' th' state.

They laugh as if transported with some fit
Of passion.

I shew him once transported by the violence of a sudden passion.

If an ally not immediately concerned contribute more than the principal party, he ought to have his share in what is conquered; or, if his roman-tick disposition transport him so far as to expect little or nothing, they should make it up in dignity.

5. To put into ecstacy; to ravish with pleasure.

Here transported I behold, transported touch,
Those on whom Christ bestowed miraculous cures were so transported with them, that their gratitude supplanted their obedience.

TRANSPORT. n. f. [transport, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Transportation; carriage; conveyance.

The Romans neglected their maritime affairs, for they stipulated with the Carthaginians to turn-ish them with ships for transport and war.

2. A vessel of carriage; particularly a vessel in which soldiers are conveyed.

Not dares his transport vessel cross the waves,
With such whole bones are not compos'd in graves.

3. Rapture; ecstacy.

A truly pious mind receives a temporal blessing with gratitude, a spiritual one with ecstacy and transport.

4. A felon sentenced to exile.

TRANSPORTANCE. n. f. [from transport.]

Conveyance; carriage; removal.

O, be thou my Chænon,
And give me swift transportance to those fields,
Where I may wallow in the lily beds
Propos'd for the deserver!

TRANSPORTATION. n. f. [from transport.]

1. Conveyance; carriage.

Cottingham and Porter had been sent before to provide a vessel for their transportation.

2. Transmission or conveyance.

the plague, as to know whether we had it from the malignity of our own air, or by transportation.

3. Banishment for felony.

4. Ecstacy violence of passion.

All pleasures that affect the body must needs weary, because they transport, and all transportation is a violence; and no violence can be lasting,
but determines upon the falling of the spirits.

TRANSPORTER. n. f. [from transport.]

One that transports.

The pilchard merchant may reap a speedy benefit by dispatching, saving, and selling to the transporters.

TRANSP'AL. n. f. [from transpo.] The act of putting things in each other's place.

To TRANSP'OSE. v. a. [transposer, Fr.
transpositum, Latin.]

1. To put each in the place of other.

The letters of Elizabetha regina transposed thus, Anglie Hero, be still, signify, O England's sovereign! thou hast made us happy.

Transpose the propositions, making the medius terminus the predicat of the first, and the subject of the second.

2. To put out of place.

That which you are my thoughts cannot trans-
pose;

Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell.

TRANSP'OSITION. n. f. [transposition, Fr.
from transpo.]

1. The act of putting one thing in the place of another.

2. The state of being put out of one place into another.

globe is steady, and not liable to any accidental transposition, nor hath it ever shifted its station.

To TRANSSH'APE. v. a. [trans and shape.]

To transform; to bring into another shape.

I'll tell thee how Beatrice prais'd thy wit: I said thou hadst a fine wit, right, said she, a fine little one: nay, said I, he hath the tongue; that he ev, said she; for he swore a thing to me on Monday night, which he forswore on Tuesday morning; there's a double tongue: thus did the transshape thy particular virtues.

To TRANSSUBSTANTIATE. v. a.

[transubstantier, Fr.] To change to another substance.

O self-traitor, I do bring
The spider love, which transubstantiates all,
And can convert me into a gall.

Nor seemingly, but with keen dispatch
Of real hunger, and concocitive heat
To transubstantiate; what redounds, transpires
Through spirits with ease.

TRANSSUBSTANTIATION. n. f. [transub-stantiation, Fr.] A miraculous operation believed in the Romish church, in which the elements of the eucharist are supposed to be changed into the real body and blood of Christ.

How is a Romanist prepar'd easily to swallow, not only against all probability, but even the clear evidence of his senses, the doctrine of transubstantiation?

TRANSDU'ATION. n. f. [from transjud.]

The act of passing in sweat, or perspirable vapour through any integument.

The drops proceeded not from the transudation of the liquors within the galls.

To TRANSUDE. v. n. [trans and sudo,
Latin.] To pass through in vapour.

Purulent fumes cannot be transmitted throughout the body before the maturation of an aposthem, nor after, unless the humour break; because they cannot transude through the bag of an aposthem.

trans and versalis, Lat.] Running crosswise.

An ascending line, direct, as from son to father, or grandfather, is not admitted by the law of England; or in the transversal line, as to the uncle or aunt, great-uncle or great-aunt.

TRANSV'ERSALITY. adv. [from transversal.] In a cross direction.

There are divers subtle enquiries and demonstrations concerning the several proportions of twist-ness and distance in an arrow shot virtually, horizontally, or transversally.

To TRANSV'ERSE. v. a. [transversus,
Latin.] To change; to overturn.

Nothing can be believed, to be religion by any people, but what they think to be divine; that is, sent immediately from God: and they can think nothing to be so, that is in the power of man to alter or transverse.

TRANSV'ERSE. adj. [transversus, Lat.]
Being in a cross direction.

His violent touch

Flid and pursu'd transverse the resonant fuge.

Part in straight lines, part in transverse are found,
One form a crooked figure, one a round;

The entrails these embrace in spiral strings,
Those clasp th' arterial tubes in tender rings.

What natural agent could impel them so strongly with a transverse side blow against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are a falling?

TRANSV'ERSELY. adv. [from transverse.]
In a cross direction.

At Stonehenge the stones lie transversely upon each other.

In all the fibres of an animal there is a contractile power: for if a fibre be cut transversely, both the ends shrink, and make the wound gape.

TRANSM'PTION. n. f. [trans and sumo, Lat.] The act of taking from one place to another.

TRAN'TERS. n. f. Men who carry fish from the sea-coasts to sell in the inland countries.

TRAP. n. f. [trappe, Saxon; trape, Fr.
trappola, Ital.]

1. A snare set for thieves or vermin.

Die as thou shouldst; but do not die impatiently, and like a fox caught in a trap.

The trap springs, and catches the ape by the fingers.

2. An ambush; a stratagem to betray or catch unawares.

And lurking silently, in await now lay,
How he might any in his trap betray.

God and your majesty Protect mine innocence, or I fall into
The trap is laid for me.

They continually laid traps to ensnare him, and made mistaken interpretations of all the good he did.

He seems a trap for charity to lay,
And come by night his lesson for the day.

3. A play at which a ball is driven with a stick.

Unuly boys learn to wrangle at trap, or rook at span-furthing.

He that of feeble nerves and joints complains,
From nine-pins, coits, and from trap-ball abstain.

To TRAP. v. a. [trappan, Saxon.]

1. To ensnare; to catch by a snare or ambush; to take by stratagem.

My brain, more busy than the lab'ring spider,
Weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies.

If you require my deed, with ambush'd arms
I trapp'd the loc, or ur'd with false alarms.

2. [See TRAPPING.] To adorn; to decorate.

The steed that bore him
Was trapp'd with polish'd steel, all shining bright,
And cover'd with th' achievements of the knight.

To spoil the dead of weed is facile;
But leave these reliques of his living might
To deck his hearth, and trap his tomb black steel.
Spenser.

Lord Lucius presented to you four milk-white horses trap in silver. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.
Steeds with scarlet *trap*d. Cervely.

TRAPDOOR. n. f. [trap and door.] A door opening and shutting unexpectedly.

The arteries which carry from the heart to the several parts have valves which open outward like traps, and give the blood a free passage; and the veins, which bring it back to the heart, have valves and traps which open inward, so as to give way unto the blood to run into the heart. Ray.

TRAPE. v. a. [commonly written to trap] probably of the same original with trah.] To run idly and fluttily about. It is used only of women.

external, superficial, and trifling decoration.

These indeed seem,
But I have that within which passeth shew;
These but the trappings and the suits of woe. Shak.
He has fair words, rich trappings, and large pin miles, but works only for his master. L'Estrange
The points of honour poets may produce,
Trappings of life, for ornament, not use. Dryden.
Such pageantry he to the people shown;
Then boast thy horse's trappings, and thy own.
Dryden.

Draw him strictly for,
That all who view the piece may know
He needs no trappings of fictitious fame. Dryden.
In ships decay'd no mariner confides,
Lur'd by the gilded stern and painted sides;
Yet, at a ball, unthinking fools delight
In the gay trappings of a birth-day night. Swift.

TRAPSTICK. n. f. [trap and stick.] A stick with which boys drive a wooden ball.

A foolish swoop between a couple of thick bandy legs and two long trapsticks that had no call.

German.]

1. Any thing worthless; dross; dregs.
Lay hands upon these trashes, and th' trash.
Shaksp. Lear.

Look what a wardrobe here is for thee!
—Let it alone, thou fool, it is but trash. Shaksp.
Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something,
nothing;

'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thou sands.

But he that filches from me my good name,

Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed. Shakspere's Othello.
More than ten Hollands, or Halls, or Stows,
Of trivial household trash he knows; he knows
When the queen frown'd or smil'd. Dunne.

The collectors only consider, the greater fame a writer is in possession of, the more trash he may bear to have tacked to him. Swift.

Weak foolish man! will heav'n reward us there with the same trash mad mortals wish for here?
Pope.

2. A worthless person.

I suspect this trash
To be a party in this injury. Shakspere's Othello.

3. Matter improper for food, frequently eaten by girls in the green sickness.

Garth.

4. I believe that the original signification of trash is the loppings of trees, from the verb.

TRASH. v. a.

1. To lop; to crop.

Being once p'sented how to grant suits,
How to deny them; when to advance, and whom
To trash for overtopping. Shakspere's Tempest.

2. To crush; to humble.

Not such as was fit to be imposed on hard-hearted Jews, to encumber and trash them, but such as becomes an ingenious people.
Hammond's Practical Catechism.

TRASHY. adj. [from trash.] Worthless; vile, useless.

A judicious reader will discover in his closet that trashy stuff, whose glittering deceived him in the action. Dryden.

TRAVAIL. v. n. [travailler, Fr.]

1. To labour; to toil.

2. To be in labour; to suffer the pains of childbirth.

I travail not, nor bring forth children.

tion is to bring down the child, but not too fast.
Bacon's Natural History.

TRAVE, TRA'VE, or TRA'VISE. n. f.
A wooden frame for shoeing unruly horses. Ainsworth.

TRA'VE. v. n. [This word is generally supposed originally the same with travail, and to differ only as particular from general: in some writers the word is written alike in all its senses; but it is more convenient to write travail for labour, and travel for journey.]

1. To make journeys: it is used for sea as well as land, though sometimes we distinguish it from voyage, a word appopropriated to the sea.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard;
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle.
Shakspere's

In the forest shall ye lodge, O ye travelling companies of Dedanum. Isaiah, xxi. 13.

Raphael deign'd to travel with Tobias. Milton.

Pain would I travel to some foreign shore,
So might I to myself myself restore. Dryden.

knowledge of their uses, it proves at least that he travell'd there. Pope.

2. To pass; to go; to move.

By th' clock 'tis day;
And yet dark night shrouds the travelling lamp.
Shakspere.

Time travels in divers paces with divers persons; I'll tell you when time ambles with it, when time trots with it. Shakspere.

Thus flying east and west, and north, and south,
News travell'd with increase from mouth to mouth.
Pope.

3. To make journeys of curiosity.

Nothing tends so much to enlarge the mind as travelling, that is, making a visit to other town, city, or countries, beside those in which we were born and educated. Watts.

4. To labour; to toil. This should be rather travail.

If we labour to maintain truth and reason, let not any think that we travel about a matter not needful. Hooker.

TO TRA'VE. v. a.

1. To pass; to journey over.

Thither to arrive,
I travel this profound. Milton.

2. To force to journey.

There are other privileges granted unto most of the corporations, that they shall not be charged with garrisons, and they shall not be travell'd forth of their own franchises. Spenser.

TRA'VE. n. f. [travail, Fr. from the noun.]

1. Journey; act of passing from place to place.

Love had cut him short,
Confin'd within the purlieus of his court.
Three miles he went, nor farther could retreat,
His travels ended at his country-seat. Dryden.

Mingled send into the dance
Moments fraught with all the treasures
Which thy eastern travel views. Prior.

2. Journey of curiosity or instruction.

Let him spend his time no more at home,
Which would be great impeachment to his age,
In having known no travel in his youth. Shaksp.

Travel in the younger sort is a part of education;
in the elder, a part of experience. Bacon's Essays.
In my travels I had been near their setting out in Thebais, and at the place of their landing in Carniola. Brown's Travels.

A man not enlightened by travel or reflexion, grows as fond of arbitrary power, to which he hath been used, as of barren countries, in which he has been born and bred. Addison.

3. Labour; toil. This should be travail:
as in Daniel.

He wars with a retiring enemy,
With much more travail than with victory. Daniel.
What think'st thou of our empire now, though earn'd

With travel difficult? Milton.

4. Labour in childbirth. This sense belongs rather to travail.

Thy mother well deserves that short delight,
The nauseous qualms of ten long months and travel to requite. Dryden's Virgil.

5. TRA'VLS. Account of occurrences and observations of a journey into foreign parts.

A book of his travels hath been honoured with the translation of many languages.

Histories engage the soul by sensible occurrences; as also voyages, travels, and accounts of countries.

TRAVELLER, n. f. [travailleux, Fr. from travel.]

1. One who goes a journey; a wayfarer.

The weary traveller wand'ring that way,
Therein did often quench his thirst by heat.

At the olive roots
They drew them then in heaps, most far from foot
Of any traveller.

A little ease to these my torments give,
Before I go where all in silence mourn,
From whose dark shores no travellers return.

This was a common opinion among the Gentiles, that the gods sometimes assumed human shape, and conversed upon earth with strangers and travellers.

If a poor traveller tells her, that he has neither strength, nor food, nor money left, the never bids him go to the place from whence he came.

2. One who visits foreign countries.

Farewell, monsieur traveller; look you up and wear strange suits, and disable all the benefits of your own country.

Thief, travellers for cloaths, or for a meal,
At all adventures, any eye will tell.
The traveller into a foreign country know, more by the eye, than he that travels at home can by relation of the traveller.
They are travellers newly arrived in a strange country; we should therefore not mislead them.

TRAVELTAINTED, adj. [travel and tainted.] Harassed; fatigued with travel.

I have wandered nine score and odd posts;
and here, traveltaunted as I am, have, in my pore and immaculate valour, taken Sir John Coleville.

TRAVERS, adv. [French.] Athwart; across. Not used.

He wears brave oaths, and breaks them bravely, quite travers, athwart the heart of his lover.

TRAVERSE, adv. [à travers, French.] Crosswise; athwart.

The paths cut with traverse trenches much encumbered the carriages until the pioneers levelled them.

Oak being strong in all positions, may be trusted in cross and traverse work for summers.

TRAVERSE, n. f.

1. Any thing laid or built cross.

The Tirdan cometh with all his generation; and if there be a mother from whom the whole lineage descended, there is a traverse placed in a loft where she sitteth.

2. Something that thwarts, crosses, or obstructs; cross accident; thwarting obstacle. This is a sense rather French than English.

A just and lively picture of human nature in its actions, passions, and traverses of fortune.
He sees no defect in himself, but is satisfied that he should have carried on his designs well enough, had it not been for unlucky traverses nor in his power.

TRAVERSE, v. a. [traverser, French.] It was anciently accented on the last syllable.]

1. To cross; to lay athwart.

Myself, and such
As slept within the shadow of your power,
Have wander'd with our traverse arms, and breath'd
Our sufferance vainly.

The parts should be often traversed or crossed by the flowing of the folds which too closely encompass them, without sitting too straight.

2. To cross by way of opposition; to thwart with obstacles.

This treatise has, since the first conception thereof, been often traversed with other thoughts.

John Bull thought himself now of age to look after his own affairs; Frog resolved to traverse this new project, and to make him uneasy in his own family.

3. To oppose; to cross by an objection.

A law term.
You save th' expence of long litigious laws,
Where suits are travers'd, and so little won,

That he who conquers is but lost undone.
Without a good skill in history, and a new geography to understand him aright, one may lose himself in traversing the decree.

4. To wander over; to cross.

He many a walk travers'd
Of stateliest covert, cedar, pine, or palm.
He that shall traverse over all this habitable earth, with all those remote corners of it, reserved for the discovery of these later ages, may find some nations without cities, schools, houses, garments, coin; but not without their God.

The lion smaring with the hunter's spear,
Though deeply wounded, no way yet dismay'd,
In sudden fury traverse the plains,

To find the vent'rous inc.

Believe me, prince, there's not an African
That traverse our vast Numidian deserts
In quest of prey, and liver upon his bow,
But better practices these boasted virtues.

What seas you traverse'd, and what fields you sought!

5. To survey; to examine thoroughly.

My purpose is to traverse the nature, principles, and properties, of this detestable vice, ingratitude.

TRAVERSE, v. n. To use a posture of opposition in fencing.

TRAY, n. f. [tray, Swedish.] A shallow wooden vessel in which meat or fish is carried.

Sift it into a tray, or bole of wood.

No more her care shall fill the hollow tray,
To fat the guzzling hogs with floods of whey.

TRAYTRIP, n. f. A play, I know not of what kind.

I shall play my freedom at traytrip, and become thy bond slave.

TRACHEROUS, adj. [from treachery.] Faithless; perfidious; guilty of deserting or betraying.

He had the lion to be remitted
Unto his seat, and those same tracherous vile
Be punished for their presumptuous guile.

Desire in rapture gar'd awhile,
And saw the tracherous goddess smile.

TRACHEROUSLY, adv. [from treachery.] Faithlessly; perfidiously; by treason; by dishonest stratagem.

Then 'gan Caraculus tyrannize anew,
And him Alcides tracherously slew,
And took on him the robe of emperor.

The flower of Europe for his chivalry,
And tracherously had thou vanquish'd him.

Let others freeze with angling rods,
Or tracherously poor fish betel
With strangling snare, or winding net.

I treated, trusted you, and thought you mine;
When, in requital of my best endeavours,
You tracherously practis'd to undo me,
Seduc'd my only child, and stole her.

They bid him strike, to appease the ghost
Of his poor father tracherously lost.

TREACHEROUSNESS, n. f. [from treachery.] The quality of being treacherous; perfidiously.

TREACHERY, n. f. [tricherie, French.]

TREACHITOR, n. f. [from tricher, trichour, Fr.] A traitor; one who betrays; one who violates his faith or allegiance. Not in use.

Good Christus with him in battle fought,
In which the king was by a treachitor

Disguised slain.

Where may that treachitor then be found,
Or by what means may I his footing cross?

TREACLE, n. f. [triacle, Fr. triacle, Dut. theriaca, Latin.]

1. A medicine made up of many ingredients.

The physician that has observed the medicinal virtues of treacle, without knowing the nature of each of the sixty odd ingredients, may cure many patients with it.

Treacle water has much of an acid in it.

2. Melasses; the spume of sugar.

TO TREAD, v. n. pret. trod, part. pass. trod-den, [trudan, Gothick; tpeban, Saxon; treden, Dutch.]

1. To set the foot.

He ne'er drinks,
But Timon's silver treads upon his lip.

Those which perfume the air most, being trodden upon and crushed, are burnet, wild thyme, and water mint; therefore let whole alleys of them, to have the pleasure when you walk or tread.

Th'ise dropping gums
Ask riddance, if we mean to tread with ease.

Where'er you tread, the blushing flow'rs shall rise.

2. To trample; to set the feet in scorn or malice.

Thou Must, as a trampling retreatant, be led
With manacles along our street, or else
Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin,
And bear the palm.

Thou shalt tread upon their high places.

3. To walk with form or state.

When he walks, he moves like an engine,
And the ground thrills before his treading.

Ye that stately tread, or lowly creep.

4. To copulate as birds.

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws;

To TREAD. v. a.

1. To walk on; to feel under the foot.
Would I had never trod this English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it! Shakespeare.
He dy'd obedient to severest law;
Forbidden to tread the promis'd land he saw. Prior.

2. To press under the foot.

Tread the snuff out on the floor to prevent flinking. Swift.

3. To beat; to track.

Full on treads is thus working w<sup>d</sup>.
—They're out but as if we walk not in the tread- den paths, our very petticoats will catch them.
Shakespeare's As you like it.

4. To walk on in a formal or stately manner.

He thought the tread the ground with greater gait. Dryden.

5. To crush under foot; to trample in contempt or hatred.

The angry tread will we tread them under that the tread us. Pf. in xlv. 5
Why do I tread the meteor of the tread,
Hung in the tread, of blazing as I travel'd, Till all my tread a tread and then call downward.

6. To put in action by the feet.

Thy tread their wine-presses, and tread their tread.
Job, xxiv.

7. To love as the male bird the female.

He feather'd her and trod her. Dryden's Fables.

TRE. v. f. [from the verb.]

1. Footing; step with the foot.
If the tread were pay'd with thin eyes,
Her feet were much too dainty for such tread.
Shakespeare.

The tread mazes in the wanton green,
For want of tread, are undistinguishable. Milton.
High above the ground

Then tread was, and the passive air upbore
Their tread more tread. Milton.

The tread on the rope, with doubtful tread,
Cautious tread to tread and buy him bread.

How tread thou went to walk with cautious tread,
A tread of tread, like milk tread, on thy head! Swift.

2. Way; track; path.

Cromwell is the king's secretary; further, Stands in the gap and tread for more prefacement. Shakespeare.

3. The cock's part in the egg.

TREADER. v. f. [from tread.] He who treads

The treaders shall tread out no wine in their pitches. Isaiab.

TRI. v. f. [from tread.]

1. A part of an engine on which the feet act to put it in motion.

The farther the tread end of the treadle reaches out beyond the fore-side of the lathe, the greater will the sweep of the fore-end of the treadle be,
and consequently the more revolutions are made at one tread. M. & N's Mechanical Exercises.

2. The sperm of the cock.

Whether it is not made out of the germe, or treadle of the egg, treadle of treadle doubt.

At each end of the egg is a treadle, formerly thought to be the treadle's sperm. Darwin.

TREASON. n. f. [from treason, French.]

An offence committed against the dignity and majesty of the commonwealth: it is divided into high treason and petit treason. High treason is an offence against the security of the commonwealth, or of the king's majesty, whether by imagination, word, or deed; as to compass or imagine treason, or the death of the prince, or the queen consort, or his son and heir-apparent; or to deflower the king's wife, or his eldest daughter unmarried, or his eldest son's wife; or levy war against the king in his realm, or to adhere to his enemies by aiding them; or to counterfeit the king's great seal, privy seal, or money; or knowingly to bring false money into this realm counterfeited like the money of England, and to utter the same; or to kill the king's chancellor, treasurer, justice of the one bench or of the other;

justices in eyre, justices of assize, justices of oyer and terminer, when in their place and doing their duty; or forging the king's seal manual, or privy signet; or diminishing or impairing the current money; and, in such treason, a man forfeits his lands and goods to the king; and it is called treason paramount. Petit treason is when a servant kills his master, a wife her husband; a clerk secular or religious kills his prelate; thus treason gives forfeiture to every lord within his own fee: both treasons are capital.

He made the overture of thy treason to us.
Shakespeare.

Man disobeying,
Disloyal breaks his fealty, and sins
Against the high supremacy of heaven:
To exalt his treason hath nought left.
Milton.
This being a treason against God, by a commence with his enemy.
Hayday.
Athalieh cried, Treason, treason. 2 Kings, xl. 14.

TREASONABLE. adj. [from treason.]
TREASONOUS. } Having the nature or guilt of treason. Treasonous is out of use.

Him by proofs as clear as founts in July
I know to be corrupt and treasonous.

Against the undivulged pretence I fight
Of treasonous malice. Shakespeare's Mucheb.
Most men's heads had been intoxicated with imaginings of treason and treasonous practices.

Were it a treason for Juno when she banquets,
I would not taste the treasonous offer. Milton.
A credit to run ten millions in debt without parliamentary security is dangerous, illegal, and perhaps treasonous. Swift.

TREASURE. n. f. [treasor, Fr. thesaurus, Lat.] Wealth hoarded; riches accumulated.

An inventory, importing
The several parcels of his plate, his treasures, Rich stuffs. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

He used his laws as well for collecting of treasure, as for correcting of manners. Bacon.
Gold is treasures as well as silver, because not decaying, and never sinking much in value. Locke.

To TREASURE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To hoard; to deposit; to lay up.

After thy hardness and impenitent heart, thou treasures up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath. Romans, ii. 5.

Practical principles are treasured up in man's mind, that, like the candle of the Lord in the heart of every man, discovers what he is to do, and what to avoid. South.

Not my remembrance treasures honest thoughts,
And holds not things like thee; I scorn thy friendship. Rowe.

Some thought it mounted to the lunar sphere,
Since all things lost on earth are treasured there.
Pope.

TREASUREHOUSE. n. f. [treasure and house.] Place where hoarded riches are kept.

Let there be any grief or disease incident to the soul of men, for which there is not in this treasure-house a present comfortable remedy to be found.
Hooker.

Thou silver treasure-house,
Tell me once more, what riddle dost thou bear?

Gather together into your spirit, and it's treasure-house the harmony, not only all the promises of God, but also the former senses of the divine favours. Taylor's Holy Living.

TREASURER. n. f. [from treasure; treas-urier, French.] One who has care of money; one who has charge of treasure.

This is my treasurer, let him speak
That I have reserv'd nothing.

Before the invention of laws, private affections in supreme rulers made their own fancies both their treasures and hangmen, weighing in this balance good and evil. Raleigh.

TREASURERSHIP. n. f. [from treasurer.]
Office or dignity of treasurer.

He pretenced a base fellow, who was a sutor for the treasurership, before the most worthy. Hakew.

TREASURY. n. f. [from treasure; treasorerie, French.]

1. A place in which riches are accumulated.

And yet I know not how conceit may rob
The treasury of life, when life itself Yields to the treasure. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Ulysses' goods. A very treasure
Of brass, and gold, and steele of curious frame.

He had a purpose to furnish a fair case in that university with choice collections from all parts, like that famous treasury of knowledge at Oxford.

The state, of the treasury the king best knows.
Temple.

Physicians, by treasures of just observations grow to skill in the art of healing. Watts.

It is used by Shakespeare for treasure.
And make his chronicle as rich with prize,
As is the ozy bottom of the sea
With sunken wreck and sumless treasures. Shak.

Thy sumptuous buildings
Have cost a mass of publick treasures.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

To TREAT. v. a. [traiter, Fr. tracō, Lat.]

1. To negotiate; to settle.
To treat the peace, a hundred senators Shall be communioned. Dryden's Æneid.

2. [Tracō, Latin.] To discourse on.

3. To use in any manner, good or bad.
He treated his prisoner with great harshness.

Since living virtue is with envy cur'd,
And the best men are treated like the worst;
Do thou, just goddess, call our merits forth,
And give each deed th' exact, intrinsic worth.

4. To handle; to manage; to carry on.
Zeuxis and Polygnatus treated their subjects in their pictures, as Homer did in his poetry. Dryd.

5. To entertain without expence to the guest.

To TREAT. v. n. [traiter, Fr. trahian, Saxon.]

1. To discourse; to make discussions.
Of love they treat till th' evening star appear'd.

Absence, what the poets call death in love, has given occasion to beautiful complaints in those authors who have treated of this passion in verse.

2. To practise negotiation.
The king treated with them. 2 Mac. xiii. 22.

3. To

3. To come to terms of accommodation.
You, Master Dean, frequent the great,
Inform us, will the emp'or treat? Swift.
4. To make gratuitous entertainments.
If we do not please, at least we treat. Prior.

TREAT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An entertainment given.
This is the ceremony of my fate;
A parting treat, and I'm to die in state. Dryden.
He pretends a great concern for his country,
and insight into matters: now such professions, when recommended by a treat, dispose an audience to hear reason. Collier.
What tender maid but must a victim fall
For one man's treat, but for another's bail? Pope.
2. Something given at an entertainment.
D'y figs and grapes, and wrinkle'd dates were set
In canisters to enlarge the little treat. Dryden.
The king of gods revolving in his mind
Lycæon's guile, and his inhuman treat. Dryden.

TREATABLE. adj. [treatable, Fr.] Moderate; not violent.

A virtuous mind should rather wish to depart this world with a kind of treatable dissolution, than be suddenly cut off in a moment, rather to be taken than snatched away. Hook.
The heats or the colds of seasons are less treatable than with us. Temple.

TREATISE. n. f. [tractatus, Lat.] Discourse; written tractate.

The time has been, my tell of his
Would at a dismal treatise rouse, and stir
A life were in't. Shakespeare.
Besides the rules given in this treatise to make a perfect judgment of good pictures, there is required a long conversation with the best picture.
Dryden's Dunciad.

TREATMENT. n. f. [traitement, French.] Usage; manner of using good or bad.

Such an humour or character which they have not used, all comes waited to us: and were they so entertain this age, they could not now make such plentiful treatment. Dryden.
Accept such treatment as a swain affords. Pope.

TREATY. n. f. [traité, French.]

1. Negotiation; act of treating.
She began a treaty to procure,
And establish terms betwixt both their requests. Spenser.
He cast by treaty and by trains
Her to persuade. Spenser.

2. A compact of accommodation relating to public affairs.
A peace was concluded, being rather a bargain than a treaty. Eaton's Henry VII.

Echion then
Lets fall the guiltless weapon from his hand,
And with the rest a peaceful treaty makes. Addison's Ovid.

3. [For entreaty.] Supplication; petition; solicitation.

I must
To the young man send humble treaties, dog,
And palter in the shift of lowness. Shakespeare.

TREBLE. adj. [triple, Fr. triplus, triplex, Lat.]

1. Threefold; triple.
Some I see,
That twofold balls and treble sceptres carry. Shak.
Who can
His head's huge doors unlock, whose jaws with great
And dreadful teeth in triple ranks are set? Sandys.
All his malice serv'd but to bring forth
Infinite goodness, grace, and mercy shewn
On man by him seduc'd; but on himself
Treble confusion, wrath, and vengeance pour'd. Malton.
A lofty tow'r, and strong on ev'ry side
With treble walls. Dryden's Æneid.

The pious Trojan then his jav'lin sent,
The shield gave way; through treble plates it went
Of solid brass. Dryden's Æneid.

2. Sharp of sound. A musical term.
The sharper or quicker percussion of air causeth the more treble sound, and the lower or heavier the base sound. Bacon.

To TREBLE. v. n. [from the adjective; triplico, Latin; tripler, French.] To multiply by three; to make thrice as much.

She conceiv'd, and tripling the due time,
Brought forth this monstrous mass. Spenser.
I would not be ambitious in my wish,
To wish myself much better; yet for you,
I would be tripl'd twenty times myself,
A thousand times more fair. Shak. Merch. of Ven.
Aquarius shines with fiercer rays,
Four years he trebles, and doubles six score days. Grech.

To TREBLE. v. n. To become threefold

Sometime we see a cloud that's dragonish,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory

With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,
And mock our eyes with an. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.
Who can bid the tree unfix his earth-bound root?
Shakespeare.

It is pleasant to look upon a tree in blossom covered with green leaves, decked with blossoms, or laden with fruit, and casting a pleasant shadow;
but to consider how this tree spring from a little seed, how nature shaped and fed it till it came to this greatness, is a more rational pleasure. Bacon.

Trees shoot up in one great stem, and at a good distance from the earth spread into branches; thus gooseberries are shrubs, and oaks are trees. Leclerc.

2. Any thing branched out.
Vain are their hopes who fancy to inherit,
By trees of pest green, or time or wealth,
Though plucking heralds the night each branch may trace
Old captains and dictators of their race. Dryden.

TREE gum under. n. f. A plant.

Under the standing he was teen,
Loutling low like a forlorn green,
He knows his tackle and his tree. Bunyan's Pilgrimage.

TREEN. adj. Wooden; made of wood.
Obsolete.

St. Thomas Rokeby being contrived for first suffering himself to be seized in teen cups, answered, These humble cups pay truly for that they contain: I had rather drink out of teen and pay gold and silver, than drink out of gold and silver and make wooden payments. Camden.

TREFOIL. n. f. [trifolium, Lat.] A plant.
Miller.

Hope, by the ancients, was drawn in the form of a sweet and beautiful child standing upon tiptoes, and a trifol on three-leaved grass in her hand.

shiver; to quake; to shudder.

My compassionate heart
Will not permit my eyes once to behold
The thing, where it is trembled by miracle. Shak.
God's name

And power thou tremblest at. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
Shew your slaves how choleric you are,
And make your bondmen tremble.

When he heard the king, he fell into such a trembling that he could hardly speak. Clarendon.
Frighted Turnus trembled as he spoke.
Dryden's Æneid.

He shook the sacred honours of his head,
With terror trembled heav'n's subsiding hill,
And from his shaken curls ambrosial dew distill.
Dryden.

Ye pow'rs, revenge your violated altars,
That they who with unhallow'd hands approach
May tremble. Rowe.

2. To quiver; to totter.

Sinai's grey top shall tremble.
We cannot imagine a mass of water to have stood upon the middle of the earth like one great drop, or a trembling jelly, and all the places about it dry. Burset.

3. To quaver; to shake as a found.

Wines make a noise unequally, and sometimes,
when vehement, tremble at the height of their blast.
Bacon.

He fell into an universal tremour of all his joints,
that when going his legs trembled under him.
Harvey.

By its styrrick and stimulating quality it affects the nerves, occasioning tremours. Arbuthnot on Alim.

2. Quivering or vibratory motion.

These stars do not twinkle when viewed through telescopes which have large apertures: for the rays
of light which pass through divers parts of the aperture tremble each of them apart, and by means of their various, and sometimes contrary tremours, fall at one and the same time upon different points in the bottom of the eye. Newton.

TREMULOUS. adj. [tremulus, Latin.]

Trench'd in ice, which with an hour's heat
Dissolves to water, and doth lose his form. Shak.

2. To cut or dig down pits or ditches.

Trench the ground, and make it ready for the spring. Boylston.
First draw thy scutcheon, and on every side
Trench the black earth a cubit long and wide. Pope.
The trenching plough or coulter is useful in pasture-ground, to cut out the sides of trenches or drains. Mortimer.

3. To fortify by earth thrown up.

Pioneers with spades and pickaxe arm'd,
Foreman the royal camp to trench a field. Milton.

TRENCH. n. f. [tranche, Fr.]

1. A pit or ditch.

On that coast built,
And with a trench enclose the fruitful field.

When you have got your water up to the highest part of the land, make a small trench to carry some of the water in, keeping it always upon a level.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. Earth thrown up to defend soldiers in their approach to a town, or to guard a camp.

The citizens of Coroli have issued forth,
And given to Lartius and to Marcius battle:
I saw our party to the trench driven,
And then I came away. Shakspere's Coriolanus.
William carries on the trench,
Till both the town and castle yield. Prior.

TRENCHANT. adj. [tranchant, Fr.] Cutting; sharp.

He fiercely took his trenchant blade in hand,
With which he struck so furious and so fell,
That nothing seem'd the puissance could withstand.
Spryer.

Against a vanquish'd foe, their swords
Were sharp and trenchant, not their words. Hud.

TRENCHER. n. f. [from trench; trenchoir, French.]1. A piece of wood on which meat is cut at table.

No more I'll scrape trencher, nor wash dish. Shak. Tempest.

When we find our dogs, we for the dish or trencher on the ground. More's Antidote against Disdain.
Their homely fare dispatch'd; the hungry kind Invade their trenchers next, and soon devour. Dryd.
Many a child may have the idea of a square trencher, or round plate, before he has any idea of infinity. Locke.

2. The table.

How often hast thou,
Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board
When I have feasted! Shakspere's Henry VI.

3. Food; pleasures of the table.

It could be no ordinary declaration of nature that could bring some men, after an ingenious education, to place their summum bonum upon their trenchers, and the greatest felicity in wine. South.

TRENCHERMAN. n. f. [trencher and man.]

One that haunts tables; a parasite.
He found all people came to him promiscuously, and he tried which of them were friends, and which only trenchers and spungers. L'Estrange.

TRENCHERMAN. n. f. [trencher and man.]

1. A cook. Obsolete.
Palissius assured him, that he had already been more fed to his liking than he could be by the

2. A feeder; an eater.
You had musty victuals, and he hath help to eat it; he's a very valiant trencherman; he hath an excellent stomach. Shakspere.

TRENCHERMATE. n. f. [trencher and mate.] A table companion; a parasite.

Because that judicious learning of the ancient sages doth not in this case serve the turn, these trenchermates frame to themselves a way more pleasant; a new method they have of turning things that are serious into mockery, an art of contradiction by way of scorn. Hobbes.

To TREND. v. n. To tend; to lie in any particular direction. It seems a corruption of trend.

The floods to several parts divide their way,
To learn the natives names, their towns, explore
The coasts and trendings of the crooked shore.
Dryden.

TRENDLE. n. f. [tzenbel, Saxon] Any thing turned round. Now improperly written trundle.TRENTALS. n. f. [treinta, Fr.]

Trentals or trentals were a number of masses, to the tale of thirty, said on the same account, according to a certain order instituted by Saint Gregory. Alfage's Paragon.

TREPA'N. n. f. [trapan, Fr.]1. An instrument by which chirurgeons cut out round pieces of the skull.

2. A snare; a stratagem by which any one is ensnared. [Of this signification Skin-nar assigns for the reason, that some English ships in queen Elizabeth's reign being invited, with great shew of friendship, into Trapani, a part of Sicily, were there detained.]

But what a thoughtless animal is man,
How very active in his own trapan! Recommen-
Can there be any thing of friendship in snares, hooks, and trapan? South.

During the commotion of the blood and spirits, in which passion consists, whatsoever is offered to the imagination in favour of it, tends only to deceive the reason: it is indeed a real trapan upon it, feeding it with colours and appearances instead of arguments. South.

To TREPA'N. v. a. [from the noun; tre-paner, Fr.]

1. To perforate with the trepan.

A putrid matter flowed forth her nostrils, of the same smell with that in trepanning the bone.
Wifeman's Surgery.
Few recovered of those that were trepanned.
Arbuthnot.

2. To catch; to ensnare.

They trepanned the state, and fac'd it down
With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras.
Those are but trepanned who are called to govern, being invested with authority but bereaved of power, which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magisterial way of being ridiculous. South.

TREPPINE. n. f. A small trepan; a smaller instrument of perforation managed by one hand.

I shew'd a trepan and treppine, and gave them liberty to try both upon a skull. Wifeman's Surgery.

TREPIDATION. n. f. [trepidatio, Lat.]

1. The state of trembling, or quivering.

The bow tortures the string continually, and holdeth it in a continual trepidation. Bacon's Natural History.

All objects of the senses which are very offensive, cause the spirits to retire; upon which the parts, in some degree, are destitute; and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Bac. Nat. Hist.

Moving of th' earth brings harms and fears,
Men reckon what it did and meant;
But trepidation of the spheres,
Though greater far, is innocent. Donne.
They pass the planets sev'n, and pass the fix'd,
And that crystalline sphere whose balance weighs
The trepidation talk'd, and that first mov'd. Milt.

2. State of terror.

Because the whole kingdom stood in a zealous trepidation of the absence of such a prince, I have been the more desirous to research the several passages of the journey. Wotton.

His first action of note was in the battle of Le-panto; where the success of that great day, in such trepidation of the state, made every man meritorious. Wotton.

To TREPASS. v. n. [trespasser, Fr.]

1. To transgress; to offend.

If they shall condemn their trespass which they trespassed against me, I will remember my covenant.
Leviticus, xxi. 43.

They not only contradict the general design, and particular expressions of the gospel, but trespass against all logic. Norris.

2. To

2. To enter unlawfully on another's ground.

Their morals and economy
Most perfectly they made agree;
Each virtue kept its proper bound,
Nor trespass'd on the other's ground.

TREPASS. n. f. [trespas, Fr.]

1. Transgression; offence.

Your purpos'd law correction

Is such, as banish and the meanest wretches
For pilf'nings, and most common trespasses, Are punish'd with. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Will God incense his ire
For such a petty trespass?

2. Unlawful entrance on another's ground.

TREPASSER. n. f. [from trespass.]

1. An offender; a transgressor.

2. One who enters unlawfully on another's ground.

If I come upon another's ground without his licence, or the licence of the law, I am a trespasser; for which the owner may have an action of trespass against me.

TRESED. a. f. [from treffe, Fr.] Knotted or curled.

Nor this nor that so much doth make me mourn,
But for the lad, whom long I lov'd to dear,
Now love a life that all his love doth turn,
He plung'd in pain his treffed locks doth tear.

TRISSES. n. f. without a singular. [trèss, Fr. treccia, Italian.] A knot or curl of hair.

Hung be the heav'ns with black, yield day to night!

Comets, importing change of times and states,
Brandish your crystal trèsses in the sky! Shakespeare.

Her swelling breast

Naked, met his under the flowing gold
Of her loose trèsses hid.

Adam had wove

Of choicest flow'rs a garland to adorn
Her trèsses, and her rural labours crown.

Fair trèsses man's imperial race ensnare,

And beauty draws us with a single hair.

Then cease, bright nymph! to mourn the ravish'd hair,

Which adds new glory to the shining sphere!
Not all the trèsses that fair hair can boast Shall draw such envy as the lock you lost.

TRETTLE. n. f. [trèteau, French.]

1. The frame of a table.

2. A moveable form by which any thing is supported.

TRET. n. f. [Probably from tritius, Lat.]

An allowance made by merchants to retailers, which is four pounds in every hundred weight, and four pounds for waste or refuse of a commodity. Bailey.

TRETHINGS. n. f. [trethingi, low Latin, from trethu, Welsh, to tax.] Taxes; imposts.

TREVEY. n. f. [trueret, Saxon; trepiet, Fr.] Any thing that stands on three legs: as, a stool.

TRİY. n. f. [trèi, Lat. trèis, Fr.] A three at cards.

White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.

—Honey, milk and sugar; there is three.

—Nay then, two trèys; methaglin, wort, and malmsey. Shakespeare's Love's Labour Lost.

TRIABLE. adj. [from try.]

1. Possible to be experimented; capable of trial.

For the more easy understanding of the experiments triable by our engine, I insinuated that notion, by which all of them will prove explicable.

2. Such as may be judicially examined.

No one should be admitted to a bishop's chancellorship without good knowledge in the civil and canon laws, since triale causes triale in the spiritual court are of weight.

TRIAD. n. f. [trias, Lat. triade, Fr.] Three united.

TRIAL. n. f. [from try.]

1. Test; examination.

With trial fire touch me his finger and;
If he be chaste, the flame will bark descend,
And turn him to no pain; but if he flirt,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

2. Experiment; act of examining by experience.

I leave him to your gracious acceptance,
Whose trial shall better publish his commendation.

Skillful gardeners make trial of the seeds by putting them into water gently boiled; and if good, they will sprout within half an hour.

There is a mixed kind of evidence relating both to the senses and understanding, depending upon our own observation and repeated trials of the issues and events of actions or things, called experience.

3. Experience; experimental knowledge.

Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings.

4. Judicial examination.

Trial is used in law for the examination of all causes, civil or criminal, according to the law, or our realm's trial is the issue, which is tried upon the indictment, not the indictment itself.

He hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall turn him further trial.
Than the severity of publick power.

A canon of the Jews required, in all suits and judicial trials between rich and poor, that either each should stand, or both should sit.

They shall come up in their trial, have all their actions strictly examined.

5. Temptation; test of virtue.

Left our trial, when least sought,
May find us both perhaps far less prepar'd,
The willing I go.

No such company as thou saw'st Intended thee; for trial only brought,
To see how thou could'st judge of fit and meet.

Every station is exposed to some trials, either temptations that provoke our appetites, or disquiet our fears.

6. State of being tried.

Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.
—It is to be all made of sighs and tears;
It is to be made all of faith and service,
All humbleness, all patience and impatience;
All purity, all trial, all observance.

TRIANGLE. n. f. [triangle, Fr. trian-gulum, Latin.] A figure of three angles.

The three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones.

TRIANGULAR. adj. [triangularis, Lat.] Having three angles.

The frame thereof seem'd partly circular,
And part triangular; O work divine!
These two the first and last proportions are.

Though a round figure be most capacious for the honey, and convenient for the bee; yet did she not chuse that, because there must have been triangular spaces left void.

TRIBE. n. f. [tribus, Lat. from treu, British; b and v being labials of promiscuous use in the ancient British words: treu from tir of, his lands, is supposed by Mr. Rowland to be Celtick, and used before the Romans had any thing to do with the British government. This notion will not be much recommended, when it is told, that he derives centurio from

treu, supposing it to be the same with our centuro, importing a hundred treus or tribes.]

1. A distinct body of the people as divided by family or fortune, or any other characteristic.

I ha' been writing all this night unto all the tribes And centuries for their voices, to help Cassile In his election.

If the heads of the tribes can be taken off, and the misted multitude will see their error, such extent of mercy is honourable. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Who now shall rear you to the sun, or rank Your tribes, and water from th' ambrosial fount?

Teach straggling in untainers, for publick good,
To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood,
Houses to build.

I congratulate my country upon the increase of this happy tribe of men, since, by the present parliament, the race of freeholders is spreading into the remotest corners.

2. It is often used in contempt.

Folly and vice are easy to describe,
The common subjects of our scribbling tribe.

TRIBLET OR TRIBOU'LET. n. f. A goldsmith's tool for making rings.

TRIBULATION. n. f. [tribulation, Fr.] Persecution; distress; vexation; disturbance of life.

Tribulation being present causeth sorrow, and being imminent breedeth fear.

The just shall dwell,
And, after all their tribulations long,
See golden days, fruitful of golden deeds.

Death becomes
His final remedy; and after life
Try'd in sharp tribulation, and refin'd
By faith, and faithful works.

Our church taught us to pray, that God would, not only in all time of our tribulation, but in all time of our wealth, deliver us.

TRIBUNAL. n. f. [tribunal, Latin and French.]

1. The seat of a judge.

I th' market place, on a tribunal silver'd,
Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold
Were publickly enthron'd.

He sees the room
Where the whole nation does for justice come,
Under whose large roof flourish the gown,
And judges grave on high tribunals frown.

There is a necessity of standing at his tribunal, who is infinitely wise and just.

He, who for our sakes stood before an earthly tribunal, might therefore be constituted judge of the whole world.

2. A court of justice.

Summoning arch-angels to proclaim Thy dread tribunal.

TRIBUNE. n. f. [tribun, tribunus, Lat.]

1. An officer of Rome chosen by the people.

These are the tribunes of the people,
The tongues of th' common mouth: I do despise them.

2. The commander of a Roman legion.

TRIBUNITIAL. } adj. [tribunitius, Lat.]

TRIBUNITIUM. } Suiuing a tribune; relating to a tribune.

Let them not come in multitudes, or in a tribunitius manner; for that is to clamour countless, not to inform.

Oh happy ages of our ancestors!
Beneath the kings and tribunitius powers,
One jail did all their criminals restrain.

TRIBUTARY. adj. [tributarius, Fr. tributarius, Lat.]

1. Paying tribute as an acknowledgment of submission to a master.

The success

Thenceforth this land was tributary made
 To ambitious Rome, and d d their rule they,
 Till Ae bur all that reckoning did defray;
 Yet oft the Briton kings against them strongly Sway'd. Spenser.

Whilst Malve'n, king of hills, fair Severn over-look'd.

Attended on in state with tributary brooks. Drayt.

The two great empires of the world I know;
 And since the earth none larger does afford,

'Till Charles is some poor tributary lord. Dryden.

Around his throne the sea-born brothers stood,
 That swell with tributary urns his flood. Pope.

2. Subject; subordinate.

Thou lie, to grace his tributary gods,
 By curie commits to federal governments,

And gives them leave to wear their saphire crowns,
 And wield their little tridents. Milton's Comus.

O'er Judah's king ten thousand tyrants reign,
 Regions of lust, and various pow'rs of ill

Insult the master's tributary will. Prior.

3. Paid in tribute.

Nor flattery tunes these tributary lays. Conaen.

TRIBUTARY. n. f. [from tribute.] One who pays a stated sum in acknowledgment of subjection.

All the people therein shall be tributaries unto thee, and serve thee. Deut. xx. 11.

The Irish lords did only promise to become re-tributaries to king Henry the second: and such as only pay tribute are not properly subjects, but sovereigns. Davies.

TRIBUTE. n. f. [tribut, Fr. tributum, Lat.] Payment made in acknowledgment; subjection.

They that received tribute money said, Dath not your master pay tribute? Matthew, xvii. 2.

She receives
 As tribute warmth and light. Milton.

To acknowledge this, was all he did exact;
 Small tribute, where the will to pay was act. Dryd.

TRICE. n. f. [I believe this word comes from trait, Fr. corrupted by pronunciation.] A short time; an instant; a stroke.

If they get never so great spoil at any time, the time they waste in a trice, as naturally delighting

in spoil, though it do themselves no good. Spenser.

Just in the nick the cook knock'd thrice,
 And all the waiters in a trice

His summons did obey;
 Each serving man with oish in hand

March'd boldly up like our train'd band, Presented, and away. Suckling.

He could raise scupples dark and nice,
 And after solve them in a trice. Hudibras.

So when the war had rais'd a storm,
 I've seen a snake in human form,

All stain'd with infamy and vice,
 Leap from the dunghill in a trice. Swift.

It seems incredible at first, that all the blood in our bodies should circulate in a trice, in a very few minutes; but it would be more surprising if we knew the short periods of the great circulation of water. Bentley's Sermons.

A man shall make his fortune in a trice,
 If blest with pliant, though but slender sense,

Feign'd modesty, and real impudence. Young.

TRICHO'TOMY. n. f. [trichos, Gr. trichos, Division into three parts.

Some distinguish order of nature by dichotomies, trichotomies, &c. twelve: let the subject, with the design you have in view, determine the number of parts into which you divide it. Watts.

TRICK. n. f. [track, Dutch.]

1. A fly fraud.

Sir Thomas More said, that a trick of law had no less power than the wheel of fortune, to lift men up, or cast them down. Raleigh.

A bantering droll took a journey to Delphos, to cry if he could put a trick upon Apollo. L'Estrange.

Such a one thinks to find some shelter in my friendship, and I betray him: he comes to me for counsel, and I shew him a trick. South.

He swore by Styx,
 Whate'er he would desire, to grant;

But wife Andella knew his tricks. Swift.

2. A dexterous artifice.

Gather the lowest, and leaving the top,
 Shall teach thee a trick for to double thy crop. Tupper.

And now, as oft in some distemper'd state,
 On one nice trick depends the gen'ral fate. Pope.

3. A vicious practice.

Suspicion shall be stuck full of even;
 For treason is but trusted like a five

Who never to tame, so christen'd, and back'd up,
 Will have a wild track of his ancestors, Shakespeare.

I entertain you with what more worthy than the itale exploded trick of famous panegyrics. Dryden.

Some friends to vice pretend,
 That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryden.

4. A juggle; an antick; any thing done to cheat jocosely, or to divert.

As a friend prize stopp'd his coach and fix,
 To laugh a little at our Andrew's tricks. Prior.

5. An unexpected circumstance.

So fellst thou when I take their sleep,
 To take the one the other, by some chance,

Summ'd this not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

6. A practice; a manner; a habit. Not in use.

I spoke it but according to the trick: if you'll hang me, you may. Shakespeare.

The trick of that voice I well remember. Shak.

Belshazzar,
 Although the print be little, the whole matter

And copy of the fatter; eye, hole, lip,
 The trick of a frown, his forehead. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

7. A number of cards laid regularly up in play: as, a trick of cards.

To TRICK. v. a. [from the noun; tricker, French.]

1. To cheat; to impose on; to defraud.

It is impossible that the whole world should thus conspire to cheat themselves, to put a delusion on mankind, and trick themselves into belief. Stephens's Sermons.

2. To dress; to decorate; to adorn; properly, to knot. [Trica, in low Latin, signifies a knot of hair; treccia, Italian:

 hence trace. Matt. Westminsteriensis says of Godwin of Coventry, that the rode tricas capitis & crines dissolvens.]

And trick them up in knotted curls anew. Drayt.

They turned the imposture upon the king, and gave out, that to defeat the true inheritor he had trick'd up a boy in the likeness of Edward Planta-genet. Bacon's Henry VII.

Wondrously trick'd
 With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons,

Bak'd and impasted with the parching fire. Shak.

This pillar is but a medley, or a mass of all the precedent ornaments, making a new kind by stealth;

and though the most richly trick'd, yet the poorest
 in this, that he is a borrower of all his beauty. Watts's Architecture.

Their heads are trick'd with tassels and flowers. Saunders.

Woeful shepherds, weep no more,
 For Lycidas, your sorrow, is not dead;

Sunk though he be beneath the wat'ry floor,
 So sinks the day-star in the ocean bed,

And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
 And tricks his beams, and with new-spangled ore

Flames in the forehead of the morning sky. Mil.

Not trick'd and frown'd as he was wont
 With the Attick boy to hunt. Milton.

A daw that had a mind to be sparkish, trick'd himself up with all the gay feathers he could mu-
 sti. L'Estrange.

Love is an aley good opinion makes,
 That tricks and dresses up the gaudy dream. Dryd.
 People lavish it profusely in tricking up their children in fine cloaths, and yet starve their minds. Locke.

3. To perform with a light touch; though it may here mean to dress.

Come, the colours and the ground prepare:
 Dip in the rainbow, trick her off in air;

Chuse a firm cloud before it fall, and in it
 Catch ere she change the Cynthia of this minute. Pope.

To TRICK. v. n. To live by fraud.

Thus they jog on, still tricking, never thriving,
 And murthering plays, which still they call reviving. Dryden.

TRICKER. n. f. [This is often written nigger; I know not which is right.]

The catch which being pulled disen-gages the cock of the gun, that it may give fire.

Pulling aside the tricker, we observed that the force of the spring of the lock was not sensibly abated by the absence of the air. Boyle.

As a goose
 In death contracts his talons close;

So did the knight, and with one claw
 The tricker of his pistol drew. Hudibras.

TRICKING. n. f. [from trick.] Dress; ornament.

Get us properties and tricking for our fairies. Shakespeare.

TRICKISH. adj. [from trick.] Knavishly artful; fraudulently cunning; mischievously subtle.

All he says is in a loose, slippery, and trickish way of reasoning. Pope.

To TRICKLE. v. n. [Of this word I find no etymology that seems well authorized or probable.] To fall in drops; to rill in a slender stream.

He, prick'd with pride,
 Forth spurred fast; adown his courser's side

The red blood trickling, stain'd the way. Spenser.

Fatt beside there trickled softly down
 A gentle Arcam, whose murr'ring wave did play

Arduous the pumy stones, and made a found
 To lust him soft asleep that by it lay. Spenser.

Some noises help sleep; as, the blowing of the wind, and trickling of water, as moving in the spirits a gentle attention, which filleth the discurive motion. Bacon.

He wakened by the trickling of his blood. W'stm.

Beneath his ear the fasten'd arrow stood,
 And from the wound appear'd the trickling blood. Dryden.

He lay stretch'd along, his eyes fixt upward,
 And ever and anon a silent tear

Stole down, and trickled from his hoary beard. Dryden.

The emblems of honour wrought on the front in the brittle materials above-mentioned, trickled away under the first impressions of the heat. Addison's Freeholder.

Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henry stands, Tuning his voice and balancing his hands;

How fluent consensie trickles from his tongue!
 How sweet the periods, neither said nor sung! Pope.

They empty beads console with empty sound.
 No more, alas! the voice of fame they hear,

The balm of dulness trickling in their ear. Pope's Dunciad.

TRICKSY. adj. [from trick.] Pretty. This is a word of endearment. Obsolete.

This fool hath planted in his memory
 An army of good words; and I do know

A many fools that stand in better place,
 Garnish'd like him, that for a tricksy word

Defy the matter. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

All this service have I done since I went.
 —My tricksy spirit! Shakespeare's Tempest.

TRICKS.

TRICORPORAL. adj. [tricorpus, Lat.] Having three bodies.

TRIDE. adj. [among hunters; tride, Fr.] Short and ready. Bailey.

TRIDENT. n. s. [trident, Fr. trident, Lat.] A three-forked sceptre of Neptune. His nature is too noble for the world; He would not flatter Neptune for his trident. Shak. Canst thou with figs pierce him to the quick? Or in his skull thy barbed trident stick?

Sandy's on Job. He lets them wear their sapphire crowns, And wield their little tridents. Milton. Several find a mystery in every tooth of Neptune's trident. Addison on Ancient Medals.

TRIDENT. adj. Having three teeth.

TRIDING. n. s. [tridunga, Saxon; rather tridung.] The third part of a county or shire. This division is only used in Yorkshire, where it is corrupted into riding.

TRIDUAN. adj. [from triduum, Lat.]

1. Lasting three days.
2. Happening every third day.

TRIENNIAL. adj. [triennus, Lat.; triennial, French.]

1. Lasting three years. I passed the bill for triennial parliaments. King Charles. Richard the Third, though he came in by blood, yet the short time of his triennial reign he was without any, and proved one of my best lawgivers. Howell's England's Tears.
2. Happening every third year.

TRIER. n. s. [from try.]

1. One who tries experimentally. The ingenious triers of the German experiment found, that their glass vessel was lighter when the air had been drawn out than before, by an ounce and very near a third. Boyle.
2. One who examines judicially. Courts of justice are bound to take notice of acts of parliament, and whether they are truly pleaded or not; and therefore they are the triers of them. Hale.

There should be certain triers or examiners appointed by the state to inspect the genius of every particular boy. Spettator.

3. Test; one who brings to the test. You were used

To say, extremity was the trier of spirits; That common chances common men could bear. Shakespeare.

To TRI'FALLOW. v. a. [tres, Latin, and gallowa, Sax. a harrow.] To plow land the third time before sowing. Bailey.

TRINAL. adj. [trinus, Latin.] Three-fold.

Like many an angel's voice,
Singing before th' eternal majesty,
In their trinal triplicity, on high. Spenser.

That far-beaming blaze of majesty,
Wherewith he wont at heav'n's high council table
To sit the midst of trinal unity,
He laid aside. Milton.

TRINE. n. f. [trinit, Fr. trinus, Latin.]

An aspect of planets placed in three angles of a trigon, in which they are supposed by astrologers to be eminently benign.

Other five,
Their planetary functions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Now frequent trines the happier lights among,
And high Jove from his dark prison freed,
Those planets took off that on his planet hung,
Will gladden the new-laid works succeed. Dryd.

From Aries right-ways draw a line, to end
In the same round, and let that line subtend
An equal triangle; now since the lines
Must three times touch the round, and meet three signs, Where'er they meet in angles those are trines. Creech.

TRINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in a trine aspect.

This advantage age from youth has won,

TRITHEISM. n. f. [tritheisme, Fr. trithéisme and Seis.] The opinion which holds three distinct gods.

TRITURABLE. adj. [triturable, French; from trituration.] Possible to be pounded or comminuted.

It is not only triturable and reducible to powder by confusion, but will not submit in a violent fire.

Brown.

TRITURATION. n. f. [trituration, Fr. trituro, Latin.] Reduction of any substances to powder upon a stone with a muller, as colours are ground: it is also called levigation.

He affirmeth, that a punice stone powdered is lighter than one entire; that abatement can hardly be avoided in trituration. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

TRIVET. n. f. [See TRIVET.] Any thing supported by three feet.

The best at horse-race he could find a lady for his prize,

Generally praiseful; fair and young, and skill'd in triferies

Of all kind fitting, and withal a trivet, that enclosed

Twenty-two measures. Chapman's Iliad.

The trivet table of a foot was lame;

A blot which prudent Baucis overcame,

Who thrust beneath the limping leg a trivet. Dry.

TRIVIAL. adj. [trivialis, French; trivialis, Latin.]

1. Vile; worthless; vulgar; such as may be picked up in the highway.

Be subjects great, and worth a poet's voice,
For men of sense do prize a trivial choice. Rojem.

2. Light; trifling; unimportant; inconsequential. This use is more frequent, though less just.

This argues confidence in your grace,
But the respects the real me need and trivial

All circumstances well considered. Shak. Rich. III.

The way of measuring felicity was so natural to him, that it would occur even in the most trivial instances.

Ellis.

Heaven and fools, who, for some trivial rights,
Fought, or for mistaken honour, fight. Dryden.

There they cry some light and trivial indifference, to which the example of the world exposed us, it might perhaps not much concern our religion.

Rogers.

In every work regard the writer's end;
And if the means be just, the conduct true,
Applause, in spite of trivial faults, is due. Pope.

The ancient poets are like many modern ladies;
let an action be never so trivial in itself, they always make it appear of the utmost importance.

Pope.

TRIVIALITY. adv. [from trivial.]

1. Commonly; vulgarly.

Money is not the sinew of war, as is trivially said, where the sinews of men's arms, in effeminate people, fail.

Bacon.

2. Lightly; inconsiderably.

TRIVIALNESS. n. f. [from trivial.]

1. Commonness; vulgarity.

2. Lightness; unimportance.

TRIUMPH. n. f. [triumphus, Latin; trionphe, Fr.]

1. Pomp with which a victory is publicly celebrated.

Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels
Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave;
And there cut off thy most obnoxious head,
Which I will beat in triumph to the king. Shaksp.

In ancient times the triumphs of the generals from victory, and the great donations upon dilating the armies, were things able to enflame all men's courage.

Bacon.

2. State of being victorious.

Sublime with expectation when to see
In triumph issuing forth their glorious chief. Milt.

Heracles from Spain,

Antioch in triumph, from Cayon slain. Dryd. Æn.

3. Victory; conquest.

Eros has

Pack'd cards with Cæsar, and false play'd my glory Unto an enemy's triumph. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

Each order bright

Sung triumph, and him sung victorious king. Milt.

If fools admire, or whining coxcombs boast,
The vain coquets the trifling triumphs boast. Logie.

4. Joy for success.

Great triumph and rejoicing was in heaven. Milt.

5. A conquering card now called trump.
See TRUMP

TRIUMPH. v. n. [triumpho, Latin; trionpher, Fr. This word is always accented in prose on the first syllable, but in poetry sometimes on the last.]

1. To celebrate a victory with pomp; to rejoice for victory.

The triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment.

Job, xx. 5.

Your victory, alas! begets my fears;
Can you not then triumph without my tears? Dry.

2. To obtain victory.

This great commander fought many times to persuade Solymon to forbear to use his forces any farther against the Christians, over whom he had sufficiently triumphed, and turn them upon the Persians.

Kroll's History of the Turks.

Then all this earthy grossness quit,
Attir'd with stars, we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over death, and chance, and time.

Milton.

There fix thy faith, and triumph o'er the world;
For who can help, or who can save besides? Rowe.

While blooming youth and gay delight
Sit on thy rosy cheeks content,

'Tis thou hast, my dear, undoubted right
To triumph o'er this destin'd breast. Prior.

3. To insult upon an advantage gained.

How ill becoming is it in thy sex
To triumph, like an Amazonian traitor! Shaksp.

Snrow on all the pack of you,
That triumph thus upon my misery! Shakspare.

Our grand foe,

Who now triumphs, and in th' excess of joy
Sole reigning holds the tyranny of heaven. Milt.

TRIUMPHAL. adj. [triumphal, Fr. triumphalis, Lat. from triumph.] Used in celebrating victory.

He left only triumphal garments to the general,

Bacon.

Ye so near heaven's door,

Triumphal with triumphal act have met. Milton.

Steel could the works of mortal pride confound,
And new triumphal arches to the ground. Pope.

Let us should for honour take

The drunken quarrel of a rake;

Or think it seated in a fear,

Or on a proud triumphal car. Swift.

TRIUMPHAL. n. f. [triumphalia, Latin; triumphal ornaments.] A token of victory. Not in use.

He to his crew, that sat consulting, brought Joyless triumphs of his hop'd success. Milton.

TRIUMPHANT. adj. [triumphans, Latin; triumphant, French.]

1. Celebrating a victory.

Captives bound to a triumphant car. Shaksp.
It was drawn as a triumphant chariot, which at the same time both follows and triumphs.

South's Sermons.

2. Rejoicing as for victory.

Think you, but that I know our state secure,
I would be so triumphant as I am? Shak. Rich. III.

Off with the traitor's head;

And now to London with triumphant march,
There to be crowned. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Successful beyond hope, to lead ye forth
Triumphant out of this infernal pit. Milton.

3. Victorious; graced with conquest.

As in the militant church men a e excommunicate, not so much for their offence, as for their obstinacy; so shall it be in the church triumphant: the kingdom of heaven shall be barred against men, not so much for their sin committed, as for the r lying therein without repentance.

Parkins.

He speedily through all the hierarchies
Intends to pass triumphant, and give laws. Milton.

Athena, war's triumphant maid,
The happy son will, as the father, ind. Pope's Od.

TRIUMPHANTLY. adv. [from triumphant.]

1. In a triumphant manner in token of victory; joyfully as for victory.

Victory with little loss doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French;

Who are at hand triumphantly display'd. Shaksp.

He self in person went to seek the sacred cross
Whereon our Saviour died, which found, as it was sought,

From Salem unto Rome triumphantly she brought.

Drayton.

Through straddled ranks triumphantly she drives,
And with one glance commands ten thousand lives.

Granville.

2. Victoriously; with success.

Thou must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With minacies along our street; or else
Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin,
And bear the palm. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. With insolent exultation.

A mighty governing eye goes round the world, and has almost banished truth out of it; and to reigning triumphantly in its stead, is the source of most of those confusions that plague the universe.

South's Sermons.

TRIUMPHER. n. f. [from triumph.] One who triumphs.

These words become your lips, as they pass thro' them;

And enter in our ears, like great triumphers
In their applauding gates. Shak. Timon of Athens.

August was dedicated to Augustus by the senate, because in the same month he was the first time created consul, and thrice triumpher in Rome.

Pearson on Drawing.

TRIUM-

TRIUMVIRATE. n. f. [triumviratus, or triumviri, Latin.] A coalition or concurrence of three men.

Lepidus of the triumvirate

Should be dep'n'd. Shaksp. Antony and Cleopatra.
The triumviri, the three corner cap of society.

Shakspere.

During that triumvirate of kings, Henry the eighth of England, Francis the first of France, and Charles the fifth emperor of Germany, none of the three could win a palm of ground but the other two would balance it. Bacon's Essays.

With these the Piercies them confederate,
And, as three heads, conjoin in one intent,
And, instituting a triumvirate,
Do part the land in triple government.

Daniel's Civil War.

From distant regions fortune sends

An odd triumvirate of friends. Swift.

TRI'UNE. adj. [tres and unus, Latin.] At once three and one.

We read in scripture of a triune deity, of God made flesh in the womb of a virgin, and crucified by the Jews. Burnet.

TO TROAT. v. a. [with hunters.] To cry as a buck does at rutting-time. DiD.

TRO'CAR. n. f. [trocar, corrupted from trois quart, Fr.] A surgical instrument.

The handle of the trocar is of wood, the canula of silver, and the perforator of steel. Sharp's Surg.

TROCHAICAL. adj. [trochaïque, Fr. trochaicus, Lat.] Consisting of trochees.

TROCHAE'NTERS. n. f. [τροχαιντες, Gr.] Two processes of the thigh bone, called rotator major and minor, in which the tendons of many muscles terminate. DiD.

TRO'CHÉE. n. f. [trocheus, Lat. trochee, Fr. τροχαιος, Gr.] A foot used in Latin poetry, consisting of a long and short syllable.

TROCHI'LICKS. n. f. [τροχίλιον, Gr. τροχός, a wheel.] The science of rotatory motion.

There succeeded new inventions and horologies, composed by trochilicks, or the artifice of wheels, whereof some are kept in motion by weight, others without. Brown.

It is requisite that we rightly understand some principles in trochilicks, or the art of wheel instruments; as chiefly, the relation betwixt the parts of a wheel and those of a balance, the several proportions in the round ameter of a wheel being answerable to the sides of a balance. Wilkins's Dæd.

TROCHI'SCH. n. f. [τροχισκος; trochisque, Fr. trochiscus, Latin] A kind of tablet or lozenge.

The trochisks of vipers, so much magnified, and the flesh of snakes some ways solidified and corrected. Bacon.

TROD. } participle passive of tread.

TRO'DDEN. }
Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles. Luke, xxi.

Thou, infernal serpent, shalt not long
Rule in the clouds; like an autumnal star,
Or lightning, thou shalt fall from heav'n trod down Under his feet. Milton's Paradise Regained.

Ev'n the rough rocks with tender myrtle bloom,
And trodden weeds send out a rich perfume. Add.

TRODE, the preterite of tread.
They trode the grapes, and made merry. Judges, ix. 27.

TRODE. n. f. [from trode, pret. of tread.] Footing.

The trode is not so tickle.
They never set foot on that same trode,
But baulk their right way, and strain abroad. Spenser.

Spenser.

TRO'GLODYTE. n. f. [τρογλοδιτης, Gr.] One who inhabits caves of the earth.

Procure me a troglydite footman, who can catch a roe at his full speed. Arbutnot and Pope.

TO TROLL. v. a. [trollen, to roll, Dutch; perhaps from trochlea, Lat. a thing to turn round.] To move circularly; to drive about.

With the phant'ies of hey troll,
Troll about the bridal bowl,
And divide the broad-br'd cake,
Round about the bride's stake. B. Jorf. Underw.

TO TROLL. v. n.

1. To roll; to run round.

How pleasant, on the banks of Styx
To troll it in a coach and six! Swift.

2. To fish for a pike with a rod which has a pulley towards the bottom, which I suppose gives occasion to the term.

Nor drain I ponds the golden carp to take,
Nor troll for pikes, dispoilers of the lake. Gay.

TRO'LLOP. n. f. [A low word, I know not whence derived.] A flatteringly loose woman.

TRO'LMYDAMES. n. f. [Of this word I know not the meaning.]

A fellow I ha'e known to go about with trolmydames: I knew him once a servant of the prince. Shakspere's Winter's Tale.

TRO'NAGE. n. f. Money paid for weighing.

TROOP. n. f. [troupe, Fr. troppa, Italian; troope, Dutch; trop, Swedish; troppa, low Latin.]

1. A company; a number of people collected together.

That which should accompany old age,
As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,
I must not look to have. Shakspere's Macbeth.

Saw you not a blessed troop

Invite me to a banquet, whose bright faces

Cast thousand beams upon me like the sun? Shak.

As the mind, by putting together the repeated ideas of unity, makes the collective mode of any number, as a score, or a gross; so by putting together several particular substances, it makes collective ideas of substances, as a troop, an army. Locke.

2. A body of soldiers.

Aeneas seeks his absent foe,
And sends his slaughter'd troops to shades below. Dryden.

3. A small body of cavalry.

TO TROOP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To march in a body.

I do not, as an enemy to peace,
Troop in the throngs of military men,
But rather shew a while like fearful war. Shakspere.

They troop

With hundreds, and with thousands, trooping came.

Attended. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Armies at the call of trumpet

Troop to their standard. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. To march in haste.

Yonder shines Aurora's harbingers,

At whose approach ghosts, wand'ring here and there,

Troop home to churchyards. Shakspere.

The dry streets flow'd with men,

That troop'd up to the king's capacious court. Chapman.

3. To march in company.

I do invest you jointly with my power,
Preeminence, and all the large effects
That troop with majesty. Shakspere's King Lear.

TRO'OPER. n. f. [from troop.] A horse-soldier. A trooper fights only on horse-back; a dragoon marches on horseback, but fights either as a horseman or foot-man.

Custom makes us think well of any thing: what can be more indecent than for any to wear boots but troopers and travellers? yet not many years since it was all the fashion. Greene.

TROPE. n. f. [τροπή; trope, Fr. tropus, Latin.] A change of a word from its original signification; as, the clouds foretell rain, for forebears.

For rhetoric he could not ope

His mouth, but out there flew a trope. Hudib.

If this licence be included in a single word, it admits of trope; it is a sentence, of figures. Dryd.

TRO'PHIED. adj. [from trophy.] Adorned with trophies.

Some greedy minion, or imperious wife,
The trophied aches, Rory'd halls invade,
And haunt their slumbers in the pompous shade. Pope.

TRO'PHY. n. f. [trophæum, trophæum, Lat.] Something shewn or treasured up in proof of victory.

What trophy then shall I most fit devise,
In which I may record the memory

Of my love's conquest, peerless beauty's prize
Adorn'd with honour, love, and chastity? Spenser.

To have borne

His bruised helmet and his bended sword

Before him through the city, he forbids;

Giving all trophy, signal, and ostent,

Quite from himself to God. Shakspere's Henry V.

There lie thy bones,

Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb. Shakspere.

Twice will I not review the morning's rise,

Till I have torn that trophy from thy back,

And split thy heart for wearing it. Shakspere.

In ancient times, the trophies erected upon the place of the victory, the triumphs of the generals upon their return, the great donations upon the disbanding of the armies, were things able to inflame all men's courage. Bacon's Essays.

Around the posts hung helmets, darts, and spears,

And captive chariots, axes, shields, and bars,

And broken beaks of ships, the trophies of their war. Dryden.

The tomb with manly arms and trophies grace,

To shew posterity Elpenor was. Pope's Odyssey.

Set up each senseless wretch for nature's boast,

On whom praise shines, as trophies on a post. Tennyson.

TRO'PICAL. adj. [from tropa.]

1. Rhetorically changed from the original meaning.

A strict and literal acceptance of a loose and tropical expression was a second ground. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The words are tropical or figurative, and import an hyperbole, which is a way of expressing things beyond what really and naturally they are in themselves. South.

The foundation of all parables is, some analogy or similitude between the tropical or allusive part of the parable, and the thing intended by it. South's Sermons.

2. [From tropick.] Placed near the tropick; belonging to the tropick.

The pine-apple is one of the tropical fruits. Newton.

TROPICK. n. f. [τροπικη, Fr. tropique, Lat.] The line at which the sun turns back, of which the north has the tropick of Cancer, and the south the tropick of Capricorn.

Under the tropick is our language spoken,
And part of Flanders hath receiv'd our year. Spenser.

Since on ev'ry sea, on ev'ry coast,

Your men have been direct'd, your navy too,

Seven times the sun has either tropick view'd,

The winter banish'd, and the spring renew'd. Dryden.

TROPOLO'GICAL. adj. [τροπολογικη, Fr. tropologique and Μητρ.] Varied by tropes; changed changed from the original import of the words.

TROPOLOGY. n. f. [τρόπος and λόγος.] A rhetorical mode of speech including tropes, or a change of some word from the original meaning.

Not attending to the deuterology and second intension of words, they omit their superconsequences, coherence, figure, or tropologies, and are not persuaded beyond their literalities.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TROUSERS. n. f. [trousser, Fr.] Breeches; hose. See TROUSE.

You rode like a king of Ireland; your French hose felt, and in your trousers. Shaksp. Hen. V.

TROT. v. n. [troter, French; trotten, Dutch.]

1. To move with a high jolting pace.

Poor Tom, that hath made him proud of heat, to ride on a jolting horse, over four-inch'd bridges, to court his own shadow for a traitor.

Shaksp. earl's King Lear.

Whom doth time trot withal?

—He trots hard with a young maid, between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemnized: if the interim be but a few night, time's pace is so hard, that it seems the length of seven years.

Shaksp. earl's As you like it.

Take a gentle trotting horse, and come up and see your old friends.

Dennis.

2. To walk fast; or, to travel on foot: in a ludicrous or contemptuous sense.

TROT. n. f. [trot, French, from the verb.]

1. The jolting high pace of a horse.

His honesty is not

So loose or easy, that a ruffling wind

Can blow awry, or glitting look it blind:

Who rides his fate and even trot,

While the world now rides by, now lags behind.

Herbert.

Here lieth one who did most truly prove,
That he could never die while he could move;
So hang his destiny, never to rot
While he might still jog on and keep his trot.

Milton.

The virtuous's sad life will amble when the world is upon the barbed trot.

Dryden.

2. An old woman, in contempt. I know not whence derived.

Give him gold enough, and marry him to an old trot with no teeth in her head: why, nothing comes gratis, so money comes withal.

Shaksp. earl's Taming of the Shrew.

How now, bold-face! cries an old trot; sirrah, we eat our own hens, and what you eat you trot.

Le Strange.

TROTH. n. f. [trouth, Old English; træð, Saxon.]

1. Belief; faith; fidelity.

Savat Withold met the night-mare,

Bid her light and her trouth plight. Shaksp.

Stephen afflicts the ready obtains the crown,

Such tumults raising as torment them both:

'Tis afflicted state, divided in their trouth

And partial faith, most miserable grown,

Endures the while. Daniel's Civil War.

2. Truth; verity.

In trouth, thou'rt able to instruct grey hairs,

And teach the wily Afric's devious trouth. Shaksp.

TROUBLELESS. adj. [from troub.] Faithless; treacherous.

I shall to the faithless waves and troubless sky.

TROUBLELIGHT. adj. [troub and plight.]

Betrothed; affianced.

'Tis you, you son in law,

Are troubled to your daughter.

Shaksp. earl's Winter's Tale.

TROTTER. n. f. [from trot.]

1. One that walks a jolting pace.

2. A sheep's foot.

TO TROUBLE. v. a. [troubler, French.]

1. To disturb; to perplex.

An hour before the worshipp'd sun

Peer'd through the golden window of the east,

A madd'd mind drew me to walk abroad. Shaksp.

But think not here to trouble holy rest. Milton.

Never trouble yourself about those faults which age will cure. Locke on Education.

2. To afflict; to grieve.

It would not trouble me to be slain for thee, but much it torments me to be slain by thee. Sidney.

They passionately maintain, that afflictions are no real evil, and therefore a wise man ought not to be troubled at them. Tillotson.

Though it is as vain to be troubled for that which I cannot chuse, yet I cannot chuse but be afflicted. Tillotson.

3. To distress; to make uneasy.

He had credit enough with his master to provide for his own interest, and troubled not himself for that of others. Clarendon.

He not dissuay'd not troubled at these tidings. Milton.

He was too troubled in mind, and much distressed. Mac.

4. To busy; to engage overmuch.

Martha, thou art careful, and troubled about many things. Luke x. 41.

5. To give occasion of labour to. A word of civility or slight regard.

I will not trouble myself to prove that all terms are not definable, from that progress in infinitum which it will lead us into. Locke.

6. To tease; to vex.

'Tis he boy so troubles me;

Shaksp.

'Tis past enduring.

7. To disorder; to put into agitation or commotion.

A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled;

Muddy, ill seeming, thick, beneath of beauty. Shaksp.

Shaksp.

An angel went down into the pool and troubled the water; whosoever first after the troubling stepped in was made whole. John v. 4.

God looking forth will trouble all his host. Milt.

Hear how she the ear employs;

Their office is the troubled air to take. Dryden.

Seas are troubled when they do revoke

Their flowing waves into themselves again. Davies.

It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water. South.

The best law in our days is that which continues our judges during their good behaviour, without leaving them to the mercy of such who might, by an undue influence, trouble and pervert the course of justice. Addison's Guardian.

Thy force alone their fury can restrain,

And smooth the waves, or swell the troubled main, Dryden.

8. [In low language.] To sue for a debt.

TROUBLE. n. f. [trouble, French.]

1. Disturbance; perplexity.

They all his host derided, while they stood

A while in trouble. Milton.

2. Affliction; calamity.

Double, double, toil and trouble,

Fire burn, and cauldron bubble. Shaksp. Macbeth.

3. Molestation; obstruction; inconvenience.

Take to thee from among the cherubim

Thy choice of flaming warriors, lest the fiend

Somewhat trouble thee. Milton.

4. Uneasiness; vexation.

I have dream'd

Of much of hence and trouble, which my mind

Knew never till this inlame night. Milton.

TROUBLER. n. f. [from trouble.] Disturber; confounder.

Unhappy falls that hard necessity,

Quoth he, the troubler of my happy peace,

And vowed foe of my felicity. Spenser.

Heav'n's hot down their indignation
On thee, thou troubler of the poor world's peace!

Shaksp.

The best temper of minds desireth good name and true honour; the lighter, popularity any; the more depraved, subjection and tyranny; as is seen in great conquerors and troubler of the world, and more in arch-heretics. Bacon.

He knowing well that nation must decline,

Whose chief support and sinews are of coin,

Our nation's solid virtue did oppose

To the rich troubler of the world's repose. Waller.

The sword justly drawn by us can scarce safely be sheathed, till the power of the great troubler of our peace be pared, as to be under no apprehensions for the future. Atterbury.

TROUBLESOME. adj. [from trouble.]

1. Vexatious; uneasy; afflictive.

Heav'n knows

By what bye-paths and indirect crook'd ways

I met this crown; and I myself know well

How troublesome it sat upon my head:

To thee it shall defend with better quiet. Shaksp.

He must be very wise that can forbear being troubled at things very troublesome. Tillotson.

2. Full of molestation.

Though our passage through this world be rough and troublesome, yet the trouble will be but short, and the rest and contentment at the end will be an ample recompence. Atterbury.

3. Burdensome; tiresome; wearisome.

My mother will never be troublesome to me. Pope.

4. Full of teasing business.

All this could not make us accuse her, though it made us almost pine away for sight, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness. Sidney.

5. Slightly harassing.

They, ev'n the putting off

These troublesome disguises which we wear. Milton.

Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,

Being so troublesome a bedfellow? Shaksp. Hen. IV.

6. Unseasonably engaging; improperly importuning.

She of late is lightened of her womb,

That her to see should be but troublesome. Spenser.

7. Importunate; teasing.

Two or three troublesome old nurses never let me have a quiet night's rest with knocking me up. Arbutnot.

TROUBLESOMELY. adv. [from troublesome.] Vexatiously; wearisomely; unseasonably; importunately.

Though men will not be so troublesomely critical as to correct others in the use of words; yet, where truth is concerned, it can be no fault to desire their explication. Locke.

TROUBLESOMENESS. n. f. [from troublesome.]

1. Vexatiousness; uneasiness.

The lord treasurer complained of the troublesomeness of the place, for that the exchequer was so empty: the chancellor answered, Be of good cheer, for now you shall see the bottom of your business at the first. Bacon.

2. Importunity; unseasonableness.

TROUBLE-STATE. n. f. [trouble and state.] Disturber of a community; public makebate.

Those fair baits these trouble-states still use,

Pretence of common good, the king's ill course,

Must be cast forth. Daniel's Civil War.

TROUBLOUS. adj. [from trouble.] Tumultuous; confused; disordered; put into commotion. An elegant word, but disused.

He along would fly

Upon the streaming rivers, sport to find;

And oft would dare to tempt the troubloous wind. Spenser.

Soon as they this mock king did espy,

Their troubloous strife they staid by and by. Spenser.

N.

No oth' of noise, nor people's troublous cries,
As still are wont t' annoy the walled town,
Might there be heard. Spenser.
As a tall ship tossed in troublous seas,
When raging winds threaten to make the prey
Of the rough rocks. Spenser.
Then, masters, look to see a troublous world. Shakespeare.

Only one supply
In four years troublous and expensive reign. Daniel.
TROUVER. n. f. [trouver, French.] In the common law, is an action which a man hath against one that having found any of his goods refuseth to deliver them upon demand. Cowel.

TROUGH. n. f. [troog, troh, Saxon; trach, Dutch; trou, Danish; traug, Islandick;
truogo, Italian.] Any thing hollowed and open longitudinally on the upper side.

The bloody boar
That spoil'd your summer fields and fruitful vines, Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough. Shakespeare. Richard III.

In your embowel'd bowels. Shakespeare. Richard III.
They had no ships but big troughs, which they call canoes. Abbot's Description of the World.

Where there is a good quick fall of rain-water, lay a half trough of stone, of a good length, three foot deep, with one end upon the high ground, the other upon the low; cover the trough with brakes a good thickness, and cast sand upon the top of the brakes, the lower end of the trough will run like a spring of water.

Bacon's Natural History.
Some log, perhaps, upon the water swim,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.
That also is account'd virgin quicksilver, which, having no need to pass the fire, is separated by water first in a sieve, and afterwards in a long trough.

Brown's Travels.
The water dissolves the particles of salt mixed in the sand, and is conveyed by long troughs and canals from the mines to Hall, where it is received in vast cisterns, and boiled off. Addis.

To TROUL. v. n. [trollen, to roll, Dutch.]
See TROLL.

1. To move volubly.
Bred only, and completed, to the taste
Of lustful appetite, to sing, to dance,
To dress, and troul the tongue, and toll the eve. Milton.

2. To utter volubly.
Let us be jocund. Will you troul the catch
You taught me while ere? Shakespeare's Tempest.

To TROUNCE. v. a. [derived by Skinner from trunc or tronson, French, a club.]
To punish by an indictment or information.

More probable, and like to hold
Than hand, or seal, or breaking gold;
For which so many, that renounc'd
Their plighted contracts, have been trounc'd. Hudibras.

If you talk of peaching, I'll peach first: I'll trounce you for offering to corrupt my honesty. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

TROUSE. } n. f. [trouffe, French; truiffo,
TROUSERS. } Erse.] Breeches; hose. See TROUSERS.

The leather quilted jack serves under his shirt of mail, and to cover his trouse on horseback. Spenser on Ireland.

The unsightliness and pain in the leg may be helped by wearing a laced stocking; a laced trouse will do as much for the thigh. Wesmar's Surgery.

TROUT. n. f. [truite, Sax. irosta, truta,
trutta, Lat.]

1. A delicate spotted fish, inhabiting brooks and quick streams.

The pond will keep trout and salmon in their feasonable plight, but not in their reddish grain. Carew.

Worse than the anarchy at sea,
Where fishes on each other prey;
Where e'ry trout can make as high rant
O'er his inferiours as our tyrants. Swift.

2. A familiar phrase for an honest, or perhaps for a silly fellow.

Here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling. Shakespeare.

To Trow. v. n. [treodian, Saxon; troe,
Danish]

1. To think; to imagine; to conceive. A word now disused, and rarely used even in ancient writers but in familiar language.

What handfomeness, trou you, can be observed in that speech, which is made one knows not to whom? Sidney.

Is there any reasonable man, trou you, but will judge it meet that our ceremonies of Christian religion should be Popish, than Turkish or Heathenish? Hooker.

To-morrow next
We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trou. Shak.
O rueful day! rueful indeed, I trou. Gay.

2. To believe.
Lend less than thou owest,
Learn more than thou trouest. Shak. King Lear.

Trow. interject. [for I trou, or trou you.]
An exclamation of inquiry.
Well, if you be not turn'd Turk, there is no more trouing by the star.

—What means the fool, trou you? Shakespeare.

Trowel. n. f. [trulle, Fr. trulla, Lat.]

1. A trouel is a tool to take up the mortar with and spread it on the bricks; with which also they cut the bricks to such lengths as they have occasion, and also stop the joints. Moxon.

This was dextrous at his trouel,
That was bred to kill a cow well. Swift.

2. It is used for any coarse instrument.
How shall I answer you?
—As wit and fortune will.
—Or as the destinies decree.
—Well said, that was laid on with a trouel. Shakespeare.

The most accurate engravings or embossments seem such rude, bungling, deformed works, as if they had been done with a trouel. Wilkins.

Trow-weight. } n. f. [from Troies, Fr.]

Troy. } A kind of weight by which gold and bread are weighed, consisting of these denominations: a pound = 12 ounces; ounce = 20 penny-weights; pennyweight = 24 grains.

The English physicians make use of troy-weight after the following manner:

Grains	Scruple	Drachm	Ounce	Pound.
20
60	3
480	24	8
5760	288	96	12

The Romans left their ounce in Britain, now our averduupois ounce, for our troy ounce we had elsewhere. Arbuthnot.

TRUANT. n. f. [truand, old Fr. trouvant, Dutch, a wagabond.] An idler; one who wanders idly about, neglecting his duty or employment. To play the truant is, in schools, to stay from school without leave.

For my part, I may speak it to my shame;
I have a truant been to chivalry. Shakespeare.

Though myself have been an idle truant,
Omitting the sweet benefit of time,
To clothe mine age with angel-like perfection;
Yet hath Sir Proteus made fair advantage of his days. Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Providence would only illustrate mankind into the knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers and truants. Moor.

Our ships are laden with the Trojan store,
And you like truants come too late ashore. Dryden's Æneid.

TRUANT. adj. Idle; wandering from business; lazy; loitering.

What keeps you from Wertemberg?
—A truant disposition, good my lord. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

He made a blushing cital of himself,
And chid his truant youth with such a grace,
As if he master'd there a double spirit,
Of teaching, and of learning instantly. Shakespeare.

Where thou test a single sheep remain
In shades aloof, or couch'd upon the plain,
Or late to lag behind with truant pace,
Revenge the crime. Dryden.

To TRUANT. v. n. [truander, to beg about a country, French; truwanten, old German.] To idle at a distance from duty; to loiter; to be lazy.

'Tis double wrong to truant with your bed,
And let her read it in thy looks at board. Shakespeare.

TRUANTSHIP. n. f. [truallie, old French; from truant: truandise in Chaucer is beggary.] Idleness; negligence; neglect of study or business.

The master should not chide with him if the child have done his diligence, and used no truantship. Ascham.

TRUERS. n. f. [truber, Lat.] A sort of herb.
Ainsworth.

TRU'TAIL. n. f. A short squat woman.
Ainsworth.

TRUCE. n. f. [truga, low Lat. tragua, Ital.
truce, old French.]

1. A temporary peace; a cessation of hostilities.

Language and truces made between superstitious persons, and such as serve God aught. Hooker.

They pray in vain to have sin pardoned, which seek not also to prevent sin by prayer, even every particular sin, by prayer against all sin, except men can name some transgression wherewith we ought to have truce. Hooker.

All this utter'd
With gentle breath, calm look, knees humbly bent,
Could not make truce with the unruly spleen
Of Tybalt, dead to peace. Shakespeare.

This token serveth for a flag of truce
Betwixt ourselves, and all our followers. Shakespeare.
Men shall be lovers of their own liver, without natural affection, truce breakers. Tim. iii. 3.

Let the truce with treason should be mixt,
'Tis my concern to have the truce break. Dryden.
Shadwell till death truce dulness would maintain,
And in his father's right, and calm's defence, Ne'er would have peace with wit, nor truce with sense. Dryden.

2. Cessation; intermission; short quiet.

There he may find
Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The idle hours. Milton.

Sicknesses, which in the latter years of his life gave him but short and seldom truce. Fall.

TRUCIDATION. n. f. [from trucido, Lat.]
The act of killing.

To TRUCK. v. n. [troquer, Fr. truccare, Ital. trocar, Spanish; deduced by Sal-mafus from trayru, to get money.] To traffick by exchange; to give one commodity for another. Is.

To TRUCK, v. a. To give in exchange; to exchange.

The Indians truck gold for glass. L'Estrange.
Go, miler! go, for I have sell thy soul.
Truck wares for wares, and tudge from pole to pole;
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See, what a wait estate he left his son! Dryden.
I see nothing left us, but to truck and barter our goods, like the wild Indians, with each other. Swift.

TRUCK, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Exchange; traffick by exchange.

It is no less requisite to maintain a truck in moral offices, than in the common business of commerce. L'Estrange.
Love is covetous; I must have all of you: heart for heart is an equal truck. Dryden.

2. [τερχος.] Wooden wheels for carriage of cannon. Ainsworth.

To TRUCKLE, v. n. [This word is, I believe, derived from trucklebed, which is always under another bed.] To be in a state of subjection or inferiority; to yield; to creep.

Shall our nation be in bondage thus Unto a land that truckles under us? Cleaveland.
For which so many a legal cuckold
Has been run down in courts, and truckled. Hudibras.
Men may be stiff and obstinate upon a wrong ground, and ply and truckle too upon as false a foundation. L'Estrange.
Religion itself is forced to truckle to worldly policy. Norris.
His zeal was not to lash our crimes,
But discontent against the times;
For had we made him timely offers,
To raise his post or fill his coffers,
Perhaps he might have trucked down,
Like other brethren of his gown. Swift.
They were subdued and insulted by Alexander's captains, and continued under several revolutions a small trucking state, of no name till they fell under the Romans. Swift.

TRUCKLEBED, or trundlebed. n. f. [properly trucklebed; from truckle, Latin, or τερχος.] A bed that runs on wheels under a higher bed.

There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing bed and trucklebed. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
If he that is in battle slain
Be in the bed of honour lain;
He that is beaten may be laid
To lie in honour's trucklebed. Hudibras.

TRUCULENCE, n. f. [truculentia, Lat.]

1. Savageness of manners.
2. Terribleness of aspect.

TRUCULENT, adj. [truculentus, Latin.]

1. Savage; barbarous.
A barbarous Scythia, where the savage and truculent inhabitants transfer themselves from place to place in waggons, as they can find pasture, and live upon milk, and flesh roasted in the sun at the pumels of their saddles. Ray.
2. Terrible of aspect.
3. Destructive; cruel.
Pestilential femininity, according to their grossness or subtilty, cause more or less truculent plagues, some of such malignity, that they enerve in two hours. Harvey on the Plague.

To TRUDGE, v. n. [truggolare, Ital.] To travel laboriously; to jog on; to march heavily on.

No man is secure, but night-walking heralds,
That trudge between the king and mistress Shore. Shakespeare.
No sooner were they fit to trudge,
Than both were ready to dislodge. Hudibras.

Away they trudged together, and about midnight got to their journey's end. L'Estrange.
Once a poor rogue, 'tis true, I trod the street,
And trudged to Rome upon my naked feet:
Gold is the greatest god. Dryden's Farnas.
He that will know the truth must leave the beaten track, which none but servile minds trudge continually in. Locke.

TRUE, adj. [τερεα, τερεα, Saxon.]

1. Not false; not erroneous; agreeing with fact, or with the nature of things.
Of those he chose the tallest two,
And fitted for to forge true seeming lies. Spenser.
'Tis hard to find in thy head when thou wast born;
And, if the rest be true which I have heard,
Thou canst not into the world with thy legs forward. Shakespeare.
Hesperian fables true,
If true, false only. Milton.
What you said had not been true,
If spoke by any else but you. Cowley.

2. Not false; agreeing with our own thoughts.

3. Pure from the crime of falsehood; veracious.
A true witness delivereth souls, Proverbs.
4. Genuine; real; not counterfeit.

The dainties is past, and the true light now shineth. Jahn.
Among unequals what society
Can sort? What harmony or true delight? Milton.
Unbind the charms that in slight fables lie,
And teach that truth is true poetry. Cowley.
Religion, as it is the most valuable thing in the world, so it gives the true value to them who promote the practice of it by their example and authority. Atterbury.

5. Faithful; not perfidious; steady.
My revenge is now at Milford, would I had wings to follow it! come and be true. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

So young, and so untender?
—So young, my lord, and true.
—Let it be so; thy truth then be thy dower. Shakespeare.

Do not see
My fair rose wither; yet look up; behold,
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash his truth again with true love tears. Shakespeare.

I'll rather die
Deserted, than oblige thee with a fact Pernicious to thy peace, chiefly assur'd
Remarkably so late of thy so true,
So faithful, love unequal'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

The first great work
Is, that yourself may to yourself be true. Ruscon.
When this fire is kindled, both sides inflame it:
all regard of merit is lost in persons employed, and those only chosen that are true to the party. Temple.
Smil'd Venus, to behold her own true knight Obtain the conquest, though he lost the fight. Dryden.

True to the king her principles are found;
Oh that her practice were but half so found!
Stedfast in various turns of state she stood,
And seal'd her vow'd affection with her blood. Dryden.

The true hearts for Voltaire heav'd with sighs:
Voltaire was wept by all the brightest eyes. Pope.
True to his charge, the bard preserv'd her long
In honour's limits; such the power of song. Pope.

6. Honest; not fraudulent.
The thieves have bound the true men; now could thou and I rob the thieves, and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a week. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

If king Edward be as true and just,
As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely be mew'd up. Shakespeare.

7. Exactly; truly conformable to a rule.
If all those great painters, who have left us such fair platforms, had rigorously observed it, they had made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

He drew
A circle regularly true. Prior.
Ticckell's first book does not want its merit;
but I was disappointed in my expectation of a translation nicely true to the original; whereas in those parts where the greatest exactness seems to be demanded, he has been the least careful. Arbutnot.

8. Rightful.
They seize the sceptre;
Then lose it to a stranger, that the true
Anointed King Messiah might be born

TRUEN'AN, adj. [true and born.] Having a right by birth to any title.
Where'er I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish'd, yet a truenborn Englishman. Shakespeare.

Let him that is a truenborn gentleman,
And stands upon the honour of his birth,
From off this briar pluck a white rose with me. Shakespeare.

TRUBRE'D, adj. [true and bred.] Of a right breed.
Two of them I know to be as trubred cowards as ever turned back. Shakespeare.
Baudle do you call him? he's a substantial trubred beast, bravely forehanded. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

TRUEHEARTED, adj. [true and heart] Honest; faithful.
I have known no honest or truehearted man:
fare thee well. Shakespeare.

TRUELOVE, n. f. An herb.

TRUELOVEKNOT, n. f. [true, love, true and knot.] Lines drawn through each other with many involutions, considered as the emblem of interwoven affection.

I'll carve your name on barks of trees
With trueloveknots, and flourishes,
That shall infuse eternal spring. Hudibras.

TRUENESS, n. f. [from true.] Sincerity; faithfulness.

The even carriage between two factions proceedeth not always of moderation, but of a trueness to a man's self, with end to make use of both. Bacon's Essays.

TRUEPENNY, n. f. [true and penny.] A familiar phrase for an honest fellow.
Say'st thou so? art thou there, old truepenny?
Come on. Shakespeare.

TRUFFLE, n. f. [truffe, truffe, French.] In Italy, the usual method for the finding of truffles, or subterraneous mushrooms, called by the Italians tartufali, and in Latin tubera terræ, is by tying a cord to the hind leg of a pig, and driving him, observing where he begins to root. Ray.

TRUG, n. f. A hod for mortar.

TRULL, n. f. [trulla, Italian.]

1. A low whore; a vagrant strumpet.
I'm sure I scald'd the dauphin and his trull. Shakespeare.

A trull who sits
By the town wall, and for her living knits. Dryden.
So Marvins, when he drain'd his skull,
To celebrate some suburb trull;
His families in order set,
And ev'ry crumbo he could get;
Before he could his poem close,
The lovely nymph had lost her nose. Swift.

2. It seems to have had first at least a neutral sense: a girl; a lass; a wench.

Among the rest of all the route,
A passing proper lass,
A white-hair'd trull, of twenty years,
Or near about there was:
In stature passing all the rest,
A gallant girl for hew;
To be compar'd with tow'ns nymphs,
So fair she was to view. Turnbull.

TRUMP. v. a. [from trus.]

1. According to truth; not falsely; faithfully; honestly.

They said they might do it, not only willingly, but they loved him; and truly, because fact, indeed, was the mind of the people; but safely, because she who ruled the king was agreed thereto.
Sidney.

No man can avail the patron long; for truth is about truly are most behoovably spoken.
Hooker.

2. Really; without fallacy.

Wisdom alone is truly fair.
Such as are efficaciously called, justified, and sanctified, while they live, are truly holy, and, when they die, are perfectly holy.
Pemson.

3. Exactly; justly.

Right reason is nothing else but the mind of man judging of things truly, and as they are in themselves.
South.

4. Indeed: a slight affirmation, almost ex-pletive.

I have not undertaken it out of any wanton pleasure in mine own pen; nor truly without often pondering with myself beforehand what censures
I might incur.
Wotton.

TRUMP. n. f. [trompe, Dutch, and old French; tromba, Italian.]

1. A trumpet; an instrument of warlike music.

Whilst my trump did sound, o drum struck up,
His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field.
Shakespeare.

Yet first to those chain'd in sleep,
The wakeful trump of doom must thunder through the deep.
Milton.

I heard
The neighing couriers and the soldiers cry,
And sounding trumps that seem'd to tear the sky.
Dryden.

Beneath this tomb an infant lies,
To earth whose body lent,
Hereafter shall more glorious rise,
But not more innocent.
When the archangel's trump shall blow,
And souls to bodies join,
What crowds shall wish their lives below
Had been as short as thine!
Wesley.

2. [Corrupted from triumph. Latimer, in a Christmas sermon, exhibited a game at cards, and made the ace of hearts triumph. Fox.] A winning card; a card that has particular privileges in a game.

Him Ballo follow'd, but his fate more hard,
Gain'd but one trump and one plebeian card. Pope.
Now her heart with pleasure jumps,
She scarce remembers what is trumps. Swift.

3. To put to or upon the TRUMPS. To put to the last expedient.

We are now put upon our last trump, the fox is earthed, but I shall send my two terriers in after him.
Dryden.

To TRUMP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To win with a trump card.

2. To TRUMP up. [from tromper, Fr. to cheat.] To devise; to forge.

TRUMPERY. n. f. [tromperie, French, a cheat.]

1. Something fallaciously splendid; something of less value than it seems.

The trumpery in my house bring hither,
For state to catch these thieves. Shakespeare's Tempest.

2. Falshood; empty talk.

Breaking into parts the story of the creation, and delivering it over in a mystical sense, wrapping it up mixed with other their own trumpery, they have sought to obscure the truth thereof.
Raleigh's History of the World.

3. Something of no value; trifles.

Embrios and idiots, eremite and friars,
White, black, and grey, with all their trumpery.
Milton.

Another cavity of the head was stuffed with billdeaux, prick'd dances, and other trumpery of the fame nature.
Addison.

TRUMPET. n. f. [trompette, French and Dutch.]

1. An instrument of martial music founded by the breath.

What's the business,
That such a hidden trumpet calls to payley
The storers of the house?
Shakespeare.

If any man of quality will maintain upon Edmund Earl of Gloster, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear by the third sound of the trumpet.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

As different soldiers, at the trumpet's call,
Haste to their colours all.
Cowley.

He blew
His trumpet, heard in Oreb since he haps
When God descended, and perhaps once more To sound at general doom. The angelick blast Fill'd all the regions.
Milton.

The first loud trumpet's word'rous sound
Shall through the sounding tombs rebound,
And wake the nations under ground. R. Common.
Things of deep sense we may in prose unfold,
But they move more in lofty numbers told;
By the loud trumpet which our courage aids,
We learn that sound, as well as sense, persuades.
Walker.

The trumpet's loud clangor
Excites us to arms,
With shrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms.
Every man is the maker of his own fortune, and must be in some measure the trumpet of his fame.
Dryden.

I let the loud trumpet sound,
Till the roots lie around
The shrill echo rebound.
Pope.

2. In military style, a trumpeter.

He wisely desired, that a trumpet might be first sent for a pass.
Clarendon.

Among our forefathers, the enemy, when there was a king in the field, demanded by a trumpet in what part he resided, that they might avoid firing upon the royal pavilion.
Addison.

3. One who celebrates; one who praises.

Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy.
Bacon.

That great politician was pleased to have the great wit of those times in his interests, and to be the trumpet of his praises.
Dryden.

To TRUMPET. v. a. [trompeter, Fr. from the noun.] To publish by sound of trumpet; to proclaim.

That I did love the Moor to live with him,
My downright violence to form my fortunes
May trumpet to the world. Shakespeare's Othello.

Why so tart a favour

To trumpet such good tidings?
They went with sound of trumpet; for they did nothing but publish and trumpet all the re-proaches they could devise against the Irish.
Bacon's War with Spain.

TRUMPETER. n. f. [from trumpet.]

1. One who sounds a trumpet.

With brazen din blazeyn the city's ear,
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines. Shak.

the Scots overtook them.
Hayward.

Then when he securely intrench'd in a cloud,
And a trumpeter hornet to battle sounds loud.
Dryden.

An army of trumpeters would give a great strength as this confederacy of tongue warriors, who, like those military musicians, content themselves with animating their friends to battle.

Addison's Freeholders.

2. One who proclaims, publishes, or denounces.

Where there is an opinion to be created of virtue or greatness, these men are good trumpeters.
Bacon's Essays.

How came so many thousands to fight, and die in the same rebellion? why were they deceived into it by those spiritual trumpeters, who followed them with continual alarms of damnation if they did not venture life, fortune, and all, in that which those impostors called the cause of God?
South.

Cymochies twice, that twice him tore'd his foot revoked.
Spenser.

Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser;
Thy hand is but a finger to my fist;
Thy leg is a stick compared with this truncheon.
Shakespeare.

The English slew divers of them with plummetts of lead tied to a truncheon or staff by a cord.
Hayward.

One with a broken truncheon deals his blows.
Dryden.

2. A staff of command.

The hand of Mars
Beckon'd with fiery truncheon my retire. Shakspeare.
No ceremony that to great ones 'longs,
The marshall's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,
R come them with one halt so good a grace,
As mercy does. Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.

To TRUNCHEON. v. a. [from the noun.]

sometimes a small chest commonly lined with paper.

Neither prose, coffee, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places. Shakespeare.

Some odd fan-sick lord would fain
Carry in trunk, and all my drudgery do. Dryden.

Where a young man learned to dance, there happened to stand an old trunk in the room; the idea of which had so mixed itself with the turns of all his dances, that, though he could dance excellently well, yet it was only whilst that trunk was there; nor could he perform well in any other place, unless that, or some such other trunk, had its due position in the room. Locke.

Your poem sunk,
And sent in quire to line a trunk;
If still you be deserv'd to rhyme,
Go try your hand a second time. Swift.

A tuft of daisies on a flow'ry lea. Dryden.

Near a living stream their mansion place,
Edg'd round with moss and tufts of matted grass. Dryden.

The male among birds often appears in a crest, comb, a tuft of feathers, or a natural little plume, erected like a pinnacle on the top of the head. Addison's Spectator.

2. A cluster; a plump.

Going a little aside into the wood, where many times before she delighted to walk, her eyes were saluted with a tuft of trees to close set together, as with the shade the moon gave through it, it might breed a tearful kind of devotion to look upon it. Sidney.

My house is at the tuft of olives hard by. Shak.

An Island lie

Girt with th' unmeasur'd sea; and is so nie,
That in the midst I saw the smoke arise,
Through tufts of trees. Chapman.

With high woods the hills were crown'd;
With tufts the valleys, and each fountain side
With borders 'long the rivers. Milton's Par. Lost.

Under a tuft of shade, that on a green

Stood whispering soft, by a fresh fountain side

They sat them down. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To TUFT. v. a. To adorn with a tuft.

A doubtful word, not authorized by any competent writer.

Sit beneath the shade

Of solemn oaks, that tuft the swelling mounts, Thrown graceful round. Thomson.

TUFFETTY. n. s. [from tuffed and taffety.] A villous kind of silk.

His cloaths were strange, thof' coarse, and black,
tho' bare:

Sleeveless his jerkin was, and it had been Velvet; but it was now, so much ground was seen, Become tuffetty. Donne.

TUFFED. adj. [from tuft.] Growing in tufts or clusters.

There does a sable cloud

Turn forth her silver lining on the night,
And cast a gleam over this tuffed grove. Milton.

TOWERS and battlements it sees,

Belsham's high in tuffed trees,

Where perhaps some beauty lies

The cynosure of neighbouring eyes. Milton.

'Might the desert fruitful fields arise,

That, crown'd with tuffed trees and springing corn,

Like verdant isles the sable waste adorn. Pope.

TUFTY. adj. [from tuft.] Adorned with tufts. A word of no authority.

Let me strip thee of thy tufty coat,

Spread thy ambrosial stores. Thomson's Summer.

To TUG. v. a. [teigan, teogan, Saxon.]

1. To pull with strength long continued in the utmost exertion; to draw.

No more tug one another thus, nor maul yourselves; receive.

Prize equal; conquests crown ye both: the lifts to others leave. Chapman's Uliad.

These two massy pillars

With horrible confusion to and fro
He tugg'd, he shook, till down they came, and drew Upon the heads of all that sat beneath

The whole roof after them, with burst of thunder. Milton.

Take pains the genuine meaning to explore,
There sweat, there strain, tug the laborious oar. Johnson.

2. To pull; to pluck.

Priest, beware thy beard;

I mean to tug it, and to cuff you soundly. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

There leaving him to his repose,
Secur'd from the pursuit of foes,
And wanting nothing but a fang,
And a well tun'd theorbos hung

Upon a bough, to ease the pain
His tugg'd ears suffer'd with a strain. Hudibras.

To TUG. v. n.

1. To pull; to draw.

The meaner sort will tug lustily at one oar.

Sandys.

There is tugging and pulling this way and that way. More.

Thus galley-slaves tug wading at their oar,
Content to work in prospect of the shore;
But would not work at all, if not constrain'd before. Dryden.

We have been tugging a great while against the stream, and have almost weathered our point; a stretch or two more will do the work; but if, instead of that, we slacken our arms and drop our oars, we shall be hurried back to the place from whence we set out. Addison on the War.

2. To labour; to contend; to struggle.

Cast your good counsels

Upon his passion; let myself and fortune
Tug for the time to come. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

His face is black and full of blood,
His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasps
And tugg'd for life. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

They long wrestled and strenuously tugged for their liberty, with a no less magnanimous than constant pertinacity. Howe.

Go now with some daring drug,
Bait thy disease, and while they tug,
Thou to maintain the cruel strife,
Spend the dear treasure of thy life. Cresswell.

TUG. n. s. [from the verb.] Pull performed with the utmost effort.

Downward by the feet he drew

The trembling dastard; at the tug he falls,
Yea, ruins come along, sent from the smoking walls. Dryden.

TUGGER. n. s. [from tug.] One that tugs or pulls hard.

TUTION. n. s. [tuisio; from tutor, Lat.] Guardianship; superintendant care; care of a guardian or tutor.

A folly for a man of wisdom to put himself under the tution of a beast. Sidney.

They forcibly endeavour to cast the churches, under my care and tution, into the moulds they have fashioned to their designs. King Charles.

If government depends upon religion, this shows the peevishness of those that attempt to disjoin the civil and ecclesiastical interests, setting the latter wholly out of the rotation of the former. South's Sermons.

When so much true life is put into them, truly talk with them about what most delights them, that they may perceive that those under whose tution they are, are not enemies to their satisfaction. Locke.

TULIP. n. s. [tulipe, Fr. tulipa, Lat.] A flower.

The properties of a good tulip are, 1. It should have a tall stem. 2. The flower should consist of six leaves, three within, and three without, the former being larger than the latter. 3. Their bottom should be proportioned to their top; their upper part should be rounded off, and not terminate in a point. 4. The leaves when opened should neither turn inward nor bend outward, but rather stand erect; the flower should be of a middling size, neither over large nor too small. 5. The stripes should be small and regular, arising quite from the bottom of the flower. The chives should not be yellow, but of a brown colour. They are generally divided into three classes, viz. precoces, or early flowers; medias, or middling flowers; and serotines, or late flowers. The early blowing tulips are not near so fair, nor rise half so high as the late ones, but are chiefly valued for appearing so early in the spring. Mills.

The tulip opens with the rising, and shuts with the setting sun. Hakewill.

Why tulips of one colour produce some of another, and, running through all, still escape a blue. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TULIPTREE. n. s. A tree.

To TU'MBLE. v. n. [tomber, Fr. tomme-len, Dutch; tombolare, Italian.]

1. To fall; to come suddenly and violently to the ground.

Though the treasure
Of nature's germs tumble all together,
Answer me. Shakespeare.

To stand or walk, to rise or tumble,
As matter and as motion jumble. Prior.

Sisyphus lifts his stone up the hill; which carried to the top, it immediately tumbles to the bottom. Addison.

2. To fall in great quantities tumultuously.

When riches come by the course of inheritance and testaments, they come tumbling upon a man. Bacon.

3. To roll about.

Gloster stumbled, and in falling struck me into the tumbling billows of the main. Shakespeare's Richard III.

4. To play tricks by various libations of the body.

Reform our sense, and teach the men to obey;
They'll leave their tumbling, if you lead the way. Rouse.

To TU'MBLE. v. a.

1. To turn over; to throw about by way of examination.

When it came to the ears of Maximilian, and tumbling it over and over in his thoughts, that he should at once blow be defeated of the marriage of his daughter and his own, he lost all patience. Bacon's Henry VII.

A man by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new fermentation, which works them into a firmer body. Collier on Pride.

They tumbled all their little quivers o'er,
To chase propitious shafts. Prior.

2. To throw by chance or violence.

The mind often sets itself on work in search of some hidden ideas; though sometimes they are roved rouzed and tumbled out of their dark cells into open day-light by these turbulent passions. Locke.

3. To throw down.

Will thou still be hammering treachery;
To tumble down thy husband and thyself
From top of honour to disgrace's feet? Shakspeare.
King Lycurgus, while he fought in vain
His friends to free, was tumbled on the plain. Dryden.

If a greater force than his holds him fast, or tumbles him down, he is no longer free. Locke.
TUMBLE. v. n. [from the verb.] A fall.

A country-fellow got an unlucky tumble from a tree; why, says a passenger, I could have taught you a way to climb, and never hurt yourself with a fall. L'Estrange.

TUMBLER. n. s. [from tumble.]

1. One who is in postures by various contortions of body, or seats of activity.

What strange agility and adroitness do common tumblers and dancers on the rope attain to by exercise! Wilkins.

Nic bounced up with a spring equal to that of the nimblest tumblers or rope-dancers. Arbutnot.

Never by tumbler thro' the hoops was shown Such skill in passing all, and touching none. Pope.

2. A large drinking glass.

TUMBER. n. s. [tombereau, French.] A dungcart.

Twifallow once ended, get tumbrel and man,
And compass that fallow as foon as ye can. Tusser.

My corps is in a tumbrel laid, among
The filth and ordure, and inclos'd with dung;
That cart arrest, and raise a common cry,
For sacred hunger of my gold I die. Dryden.

What shall I do with this beastly tumbrel? go lie down and sleep, you sot. Congreve.

He sometimes rode in an open tumbrel. Tatler.

TUMEFACATION. n. s. [tumefactio, Lat.]

Swelling.
The common signs and effects of weak fibres, are paleness, a weak pulse, tumefactions in the whole body. Arbutnot.

To TUMIFY. v. a. [tumefacio, Latin.]

To swell; to make to swell.

I apply'd three small causticks triangular about the tumefied joint. Wichman's Surgery.

A consumption actually begun is when some parts of the lungs are knotted and tumefied. Blackmore.

A fleshy excrescence, exceeding hard and tumefied, supposed to demand extirpation. Sharp's Surgery.

TUMID. adj. [tumidus, Lat.]

1. Swelling; puffed up.

2. Protuberant; raised above the level.
So high as heav'd the tumid hills, so low Down sunk a hollow bottom broad and deep, Capacious bed of waters. Milton.

3. Pompous; boastful; puffy; falsely sublime.

Though such expressions may seem tumid and aspiring; yet cannot I scruple to use seeming hyperboles in mentioning felicities, which make the highest hyperboles but seeming ones. Boyle.

TUMOROUS. adj. [from tumour.]

1. Swelling; protuberant.

Who ever saw any cypress or pine, small below and above, and tumorous in the middle, unless some diseased plant? Wotton.

2. Fastuous; vainly pompous; falsely magnificent.

According to their subject, their styles vary; for that which is high and lofty, declaiming excellent matters, becomes vast and tumorous, speaking of petty and inferior things. Ben Jonson.

His limbs were rather sturdy than dainty, sublime and almost tumorous in his looks and gestures. Wotton.

TUMOUR. n. s. [tumor, Lat.]

1. A morbid swelling.

Tumour is a disease, in which the parts, retarded from their natural state by an undue increase of their vigour.

Having dissipated this swelling vice, and seen what it is that feeds the tumour, if the disease be founded in pride, the abating that is the most natural remedy. Government of the Tongue.

The formation of knots and tumours in any part of the body, external or internal, that degenerate at length into an ulcer, arise from this, that some parts of the blood becoming by their size of figure disproportioned to the small winding channels of the glands, cannot freely slip through. Blackmore.

2. Affected pomp; false magnificence; puffy grandeur; swelling mien; unsubstantial greatness.

His stile was rich of phrase, but seldom in bold metaphors; and so far from the tumour, that it rather wanted a little elevation. Wotton.

It is not the power of tumour and bold looks upon the passions of the multitude. L'Estrange.

To TUMP. Among gardeners, to fence trees about with earth.

To TUMULATE. v. n. [tumulo, Lat.] To swell. This seems to be the sense here, but I suspect the word to be wrong.

Urinous spirits, or volatile alkalies, are such enemies to acid, that as soon as they are put together, they tumulate and grow hot, and continue to fight till they have disarmed or mortified each other. Boyle.

TUMULOSE. adj. [tumulosus, Lat.] Full of hills. Bailey.

TUMULOSITY. n. s. [tumulus, Lat.] Hill-tines. Bailey.

TUMULT. n. s. [tumulte, Fr. tumultus, Latin.]

1. A promiscuous commotion in a multitude.

A tumult is improved into a rebellion, and a government overturned by it. L'Estrange.

With ireful taunts each other they oppose,
Till in loud tumult all the Greeks arose. Pope.

2. A multitude put into wild commotion.

3. A stir; an irregular violence; a wild commotion.

What stir is this? what tumults in the heavens? Whence cometh this alarm and this noise? Shakspeare.

Tumult and confusion, all embroil'd. Milton.

This piece of poetry, what can be nobler than the idea it gives us of the Supreme Being thus raising a tumult among the elements, and recovering them out of their confusion, thus troubling and becalming nature? Addison's Spectator.

TUMULTUARILY. adv. [from tumultuary.] In a tumultuary manner.

TUMULTUARINESS. n. s. [from tumultuary.] Turbulence; inclination or disposition to tumults or commotions.

The tumultuaries of the people, or the factions of presbyters, gave occasion to invent new models. King Charles.

TUMULTUARY. adj. [tumultuarius, Fr. from tumult.]

1. Disorderly; promiscuous; confused.

Perkin had learned, that people under command used to consult, and after to march in order, and wheels contrariwise; and observing their order, and not tumultuary aiming, scattered the worst. Bacon's Henry VII.

My followers were at that time so way proportionable to hazard a tumultuary conflict. R. Charles. It is likely that the divided atoms should keep the tumultuaries in such a variety of tumultuary agitations in that liquid medium? Glanville's Scripps.

2. Restless; put into irregular commotion.

Men who live without religion are always in a tumultuary and restless state. Atterbury.

To TUMULTUATE. v. n. [tumultuo, Lat.] To make a tumult.

TUMULTUATION. n. s. [from tumultuo.]

Irregular and confused agitation.

There in the found the contiguous air receives many strokes from the particles of the liquor, seems probable by the sudden and eager tumultuation of its parts. Boyle.

TUMULTUOUS. adj. [from tumult; tumultuosus, Fr.]

1. Violently carried on by disorderly multitudes.

Many civil broils, and tumultuous rebellions, they fairly overcame, by reason of the continual presence of their king, whose only person often times contains the unruly people from a thousand evil designs. Spenser's State of Ireland.

2. Put into violent commotion; irregularly and confusedly agitated.

The strong rebuff of some tumultuous clouds Hurried him aloft. Milton.

His dice attempt, which nigh the birth
Now rowling, boils in his tumultuous breast,
And like a devilish engine back recoils Upon himself. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The vital blood, that had forsook my heart,
Returns again in such tumultuous tides,
As quite overcomes me. Addison's Cato.

3. Turbulent; violent.

Nought rests for me in this tumultuous strife,
But to make open proclamation. Shakspeare.

Furiously running in upon him with tumultuous speech, he violently taught from his head his rich cap of fables. Kamler.

4. Full of tumults.

The winds began to speak louder, and, as in a tumultuous kingdom, to think themselves fittest instruments of commandment. Sidney.

TUMULTUOUSLY. adv. [from tumultuous.] By act of the multitude; with confusion and violence.

It was done by edict, not tumultuously; the sword was not put into the people's hand. Bacon's Holy War.

TUN. n. s. [tunne, Saxon; tonne, Dutch; tonne, tonneau, French.]

1. A large cask.

As when a spark Lights on a heap of powder, laid
Fit for the tun, some magazine to store
Against a ramour'd war. Milton.

2. A pipe; the measure of two hogheads.

3. Any large quantity proverbially.

I have ever follow'd thee with hate,
Drawn tuns of blood out of thy country's breast. Shakspeare.

4. A drunkard; in burlesque.

Here's a tun of midnight-work to come,
Og from a treason-tavern rolling home. Dryden.

5. The weight of two thousand pounds.

6. A cubick space in a ship, supposed to contain a tun.

So fenced about with rocks and lets, that without knowledge of the passages, a boat of ten tuns cannot be brought into the haven. Hylyn.

7. Dryden has used it for a perimetrical measure, I believe without precedent or propriety.

A tun about was every pillar there;
A polish'd mirror shone not half so clear. Dryden.

To TUN. v. n. [from the noun.] To put into casks; to barrel.

If in the must, or wort, while it worketh, before it be tunnd, the burrage stay a time, and be often changed with fresh, it will make a sovereign drink for melancholy. Bacon.

The same fermented juice degenerating into vinegar, yields an acid and corroding spirit. The same juice tunnd up, arms itself with tartar. Boyle's Works.

TUNABLE. adj. [from tune.] Harmonious; musical.

TUN

A cry more tunable
Was never hail'd to, nor cheer'd with horn.

Shakespeare.

Hard are the ways of truth, and rough to walk;
Smooth on the tongue discours'd, pleasing to th' ear,
And tunable as sylvan pipe or song.

Milton.

All tunable sounds, whereof human voice is one,
are made by a regular vibration of the sonorous body, and undulation of the air, proportionable to the acuteness or gravity of the tone.

Holder.

Several lines in Virgil are not altogether tunable to a modern ear.

Gaith's Preface to Ovid.

TUNABLENESS. n. f. [from tunable.] Harmony; melodiousness.

TUNABLY. adv. [from tunable.] Harmoniously; melodiously.

TUN-DISH. n. f. [from tun and disb. A tunnel.

TUNE. n. f. [toon, Dut. ton, Swed. tuono, Ital. tone, Fr. tonus, Lat.]

1. Tune is a diversity of notes put together.

Locke.

Came he to sing a raven's note,
Whose dismal tune bereft my vital powers?

Shak.

Tunes and airs have in themselves some affinity with the affections; as merry tunes, doleful tunes, solemn tunes, tunes inclining men's minds to pity, warlike tunes; so that tunes have a predisposition to the motion of the spirits.

Bacon.

Keep unfixedly nature to her law,
And the low world in measur'd motion draw

After the heav'nly tune, which none can hear
Of human mould with gross unpurged ear.

Milton.

That sweet song you sung one starry night,
The tune I still retain, but not the words.

Dryden.

The disposition in the fiddle to play tunes.

Arbutnot & Pope.

2. Sound; note.

Such a noise arose

As the shrouds make at sea in a stiff tempest,
As loud, and to as many tunes.

Shakespeare.

3. Harmony; order; concert of parts.

A continual parliament I thought would but keep the common weal in tune, by preserving laws in their due execution and vigour.

King Charles.

4. State of giving the due sounds; as, the fiddle is in tune, or out of tune.

5. Proper state for use or application; right disposition; fit temper; proper humour.

A child will learn three times as much when he is in tune, as he will with double the time and pains, when he goes awkwardly, or is dragged unwillingly to it.

Locke.

6. State of any thing with respect to order.

Distressed Lear, in his better tune, remembers what we are come about.

Shakespeare.

TO TUNE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into such a state, as that the proper sounds may be produced.

Their golden harps they took,

Harp over tun'd, that glitter'd by their side,

Tune your harps,

Ye angels, to that sound; and thou, my heart,
Make room to entertain thy flowing joy.

Dryden.

2. To sing harmoniously.

Fountains, and ye that warble as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs, warbling tune his praise.

Milton.

Rouse up, ye Thebans; tune your Psalm;
Your king returns, the Argians are o'ercome.

Dryden.

Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and know

What's roundly smooth, and languishingly slow.

Pope.

3. To put into order so as to produce the proper effect.

TO TUNE. v. n.

1. To form one sound to another.

TUN

The winds were hush'd, no leaf to smail
At all was seen to stir;

While tuning to the waters fall,

The small birds sang to her.

All sounds on fret or stop

Temper'd soft timings, intermix'd with voice.

Milton.

2. To utter with the voice inarticulate harmony.

TUNEFUL. adj. [tune and full.] Musical; harmonious.

I saw a pleasant grove,

With chant of tuneful birds resounding love.

Earth smiles with flow'rs renewing, laughs the sky,

And birds to lays of love their tuneful notes apply.

Dryden.

For thy own glory sing our foreign's praise,

God of verities and of days!

Let all thy tuneful sons adore

Their lasting works with William's name.

Poets themselves must fall, like those they sung.

Deaf the praise'd ear, and mute the tuneful tongue.

Pope.

TUNELSS. adj. [from tune.] Unharmo-nious; unmusical.

When in hand my tuneful harp I take,

Then do I more augment my joys and delight.

Swallow, what dost thou

With thy tuneful serenade?

Cowley.

TUNER. n. f. [from tune.] One who tunes.

The pox of such antick, lipping, affected phantasts, these new tuners of accents.

Shakespeare.

TUNICK. n. f. [tunique, Fr. tunica, Lat.]

1. Part of the Roman dress.

The tunicks of the Romans, which answer to our waistcoats, were without ornaments, and with very short sleeves.

Arbutnot on Cains.

2. Natural covering; integument; tu-nicle.

Lohocks and syrups abate and demulce the hoar-ness of a cough, by mollifying the ruggedness of the intern tunic of the gullet.

Their fruit is locked up all winter in their galls,
and well fenced with neat and close tunicks.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

The drop of the tunics vaginalis is owing to a preternatural discharge of that water continually separating on the internal surface of the tunic.

Skarp.

TUNICLE. n. f. [from tunic.] Natural cover; integument.

The humours and tunicles are purely transparent, to let in the light and colour unfolded.

Ray.

One single grain of wheat, barley, or rye, shall contain four or five distinct plants under one common tunicle; a very convincing argument of the providence of God.

Bentley.

TUNNAGE. n. f. [from tun.]

1. Content of a vessel measured by the tun.

The consideration of the riches of the ancients leads to that of their trade, and to inquire into the bulk and tunnage of their shipping.

Arbutnot.

2. Tax laid by a tun; as, to levy tunnage and poundage.

TUNNEL. n. f.

1. The shaft of a chimney; the passage for the smoke.

It was a vault, built for great disservice,

With many ranges rear'd along the wall,

And one great chimney, whose long tunnel thence

The smoke forth threw.

The water being rarified, and by rarification resolved into wind, will force up the smoke, which otherwise might linger in the tunnel, and oftentimes reverse.

Newton's Arithmetica.

2. A funnel; a pipe by which liquor is poured into vessels.

For the help of the hearing, make an instrument like a tunnel, the narrow part of the signet

TUR

of the hole of the ear, and the broader and much larger.

Bacon.

3. A net wide at the mouth, and ending in a point, and so resembling a funnel or tunnel.

TO TUNNEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

fordshire, and in other provinces.

TO TUR. v. n. To butt like a ram.

TURBAN. } n. f. [A Turkish word.]

TURBANT. } The cover worn by the

TURBAND. } Turks on their heads.

Gates of monarchs

Arch'd are so high, that giants may jet through,

And keep their impious turbands on, without

Good-morrow to the sun.

His hat was in the form of a turban, not so huge as the Turkish turbans.

From utmost Indian isle, Taprobane,

Dusk faces with white filken turbans wreath'd.

Milton.

I see the Turk nodding with his turban.

Some, for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,

For folded turbans finest Holland bear.

Dryden.

TURBAND. adj. [from turban.] Wearing a turban.

A turban'd Turk

That beat a Venetian, and traduc'd the state,

I took by the throat.

Shakespeare.

TURBARY. n. f. [turbaria, low Lat. from turf.] The right of digging turf.

Skinner.

TURBID. adj. [turbidus, Latin.] Thick; muddy; not clear.

Though lees make the liquid turbid, yet they refine the spirits.

Bacon.

The brass instruments of death discharge upon it, and twiddled it in, first one side, then the other. Wickman.

TWIG. n. s. [twig, twigga, Saxon; twyg, Dutch.] A small shoot of a branch; a switch tough and long.

The Britons had boats made of willow twigs, covered on the outside with hides, and so had the Venetians. Raleigh.

They chose the fig-tree, such as spread her arms,
 Branching so broad and long, that in the ground
 The bended twigs take root. Milton.

Canst thou with a weak angle strike the whale,
 His huge jaw with a twig or bulrush bore? Sandys.

If they cut the twigs at evening, a plentiful and pleasant juice comes out. Mor.

From parent bough
 A cyon meetly sever: after force
 A way into the crabstock's close-wrought grain
 By wedges, and within the living wound
 Inoculst the foster twig, around which spread
 The binding clay. Philips.

Tw'GGEN. adj. [from twig.] Made of twigs; wicker.

I'll beat the knave into a twiggen bottle. Shak.

The sides and rim sewed together after the manner of twiggen work. Grew.

Tw'GGY. adj. [from twig.] Full of twigs.

Tw'LIGHT. n. s. [twelicht, Dutch;
twonelechte, Saxon.]

1. The dubious or faint light before sunrise, and after sun-set; obscure light.

Her twilights were more clear than our mid-day.
Donne.

Suspitions amongst thoughts are like bats amongst birds, they ever fly by twilight. Certainly they are to be well guarded. Bacon.

TWO

2. Uncertain view.

A faint weak idea of virtue, and of good,
 Reflects from her on them, which understood
 Her worth; and though she have shut in all day,
 The twilight of her memory doth stay. Danne.
 He that saw hell in 's melancholy dream,
 And, in the twilight of his phancy's theme Scar'd from his sins, repented in a fright,
 Had he view'd Scotland, had turn'd profelyte. Claveland.

Ambrosial night, with clouds exhal'd From that high mount of God, whence light and shade

Spring both, the face of brightest heav'n had chang'd

To grateful twilight. Milton's Paradise Lost.

When the sun was down,
 They just arriv'd by twilight, at a town. Dryden.

In the greatest part of our concernment he has afforded us only the twilight of probability, suitable to our state of mediocrity. Locke.

Tw'LIGHT. adj.

1. Not clearly or brightly illuminated; obscure; deeply shaded.

When the sun begins to sink
 His flaming beams, mix'd goddess, bring
 To arch'd walks of twilight groves. Milton.

O'er the twilight groves, and dusky caves,
 Long-sounding pipes, and intermingled grays,
 Black Melancholy sits, and round her throws
 A death-like silence, and a dread repose. Pope.

2. Seen or done by twilight.

On old Lycæus, or Cyllene hoar, Trip no more in twilight ranks. Milton.

TWIN. n. s. [twinn, Sax. twaelingen, Dut.]

1. Children born at a birth. It is therefore seldom used in the singular; though sometimes it is used for one of twins.

In this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twinn brother of thy letter; but let thine inherit first, for mine never shall. Shakespeare.

In bestowing
 He was most princely; ever witness for him
 Those twins of learning, Ipswich and Oxford. Shakespeare.

If that moment of the time of birth be of such moment, whence proceedeth the great difference of the constitutions of twins, which, though together born, have strange and contrary fortunes? Drummond.

The divided dam
 Runs to the summons of her hungry lamb;
 But when the twinn cries halves, the quits the first. Claveland.

No weight of birth did on one side prevail,
 Two twins left even lie in Nature's scale. Cowley.

They came twins from the womb, and still they live

As if they would go twins to the grave. Orway.

Fair twins in time to stars decreed,
 One fought on toothsome curb'd the fiery Reed. Dryden.

Had there been the same likeness in all men, as sometimes in twins, it would have given occasion to confusion. Grew.

2. Gemini, the sign of the zodiac.

This, when the sun retires,
 First shews, and spreads black night with feeble fires. Creech.

Then parts the twins and crab. Creech.

When now no more th' alternate twins are fir'd,
 Short is the doubtful empire of the night. Thomson.

To Tw'N. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be born at the same birth.

He that is approv'd in this offence,
 Though he had twinn'd with me both at a birth,
 Shall lose me. Shakespeare's Othello.

2. To bring two at once.

Ever yearly by twinning rich masters do make. Tupper.

3. To be paired; to be suited.

Hath nature given them eyes,
 Which can distinguish twint

The fiery orbs above and the revolved spheres
Upon the humble bench? Shakespeare.
O how inscrutable! his equity
Twins with his power. Caesar.
TWINGED, a. n. [twine and turn.] Born at the same birth.

Our fins lay on the king; he must bear all,
O hard condition, and twinned with greatness! Shakespeare.

To TWINE, v. a. [twan, Saxon; twynan, Dutch.]

1. To twist or complicate so as to unite or form one body of substance out of two or more.

Thou shalt make an hanging of blue, and fine twined lines, wrought with needlework. Exodus, xxvi. 36.

2. I know not whether this is from twine or twine.

By original lapse, true liberty
Is lost, which always with right reason dwells, Twined, and from her hath no dividual being. Milton.

3. To unite itself.
Lumps of sugar lose themselves, and twine
Their subtle essence with the soul of wine. Crahan.

To TWINE, v. n.

1. To convolve itself; to wrap itself closely about.

Let wreaths of triumph now my temples twine,
The victor cried, the glorious prize is mine! Pope.

2. To unite by interposition of parts.

Friends now fast sworn, who twine in love
Unseparable, shall, within this hour,
On a dissolution of a dole, break out
To bitterest enmity. Shakespeare.

3. To wind; to make flexures.

As rivers, though they bend and twine,
Still to the sea their course incline:
Or as philosophers, who find
Some fav'rite system to their mind,
In every point to make it fit,
Will force all nature to submit. Swift.

The deer rustles thro' the twining brake. Thomson.

4. To turn round.

O friends!
Some one abides within here, that commends
The place to us, and breathes a voice divine:
As the some web wrought, or her spindles twine,
She cherishes with her song. Chapman.

TWINE, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A twisted thread.

Not any damsel, which her vaunteth most
In skilful knitting of soft filken twine. Spenser.
A pointed sword hung threat'ning o'er his head,
Sustained but by a slender twine of thread. Dryden.

2. Twist; convolution.

Not all the gods beside Longer dare abide
Not Typhon huge ending in snaky twine. Milton.

3. Embrace; act of convolving itself round.

Everlasting hate
The vine to ivy bears, but with am'rous twine
Clips the tall elm. Pliny.

To TWINE, v. a. [twingen, German; twinge, Danish.]

1. To torment with sudden and short pain.

The great charged into the nostrils of the lion, and there twined him till he made him roar himself, and so mangled him. LeStrange.

2. To pinch; to tweak.

When a man is past his fertility,
There's no way to reduce him thence,
But twining him by the ears and nose,
Or laying on of heavy blows. Hudibras.

TWINK, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Short sudden sharp pain.

The wickedness of this twink strikes me, and gives me a twinge for my own sin, though far short of his. Dryden.

2. A tweak; a pinch.

How can you twine upon a master that gives you so many blows and twinges by the ears? L'Estr.

TWINK, n. f. [See TWINKLE.] The motion of an eye; a moment. Not in use.

She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss
She vied to fast, proffering oath on oath,
That in a twink she won me to her love. Shakespeare.

To TWINKLE, v. n. [twincian, Saxon.]

1. To sparkle; to flash irregularly; to shine with intermitted light; to shine faintly; to quiver.

At first I did adore a twinkling star,
But now I worship a celestial sun. Shakespeare.
As plays the sun upon the glassy stream,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam,
So seems this gorgeous beauty. Shakespeare.

Some their forked tails stretch out on high,
And tear the twinkling stars from trembling sky. Fairfax.

God comprises all the good we value in the creatures, as the sun doth the light that twinkles
in the stars. Boyle.

The star of love,
That twinkles you to fair Almeyda's bed. Dryden.

Think you your new French profelytes are come
To starve abroad, because they starv'd at home?
Your benefices twinkled from afar. Dryden.

So weak your charms, that, like a winter's night
Twinkling with stars, they freeze me while they light. Dryden.

These stars do not twinkle when viewed through telescopes which have large apertures: for the rays
of light which pass through divers parts of the aperture, tremble each of them apart; and by means of their various, and sometimes contrary, tremors, fall at one and the same time upon different points in the bottom of the eye. Newton.

2. To open and shut the eye by turns.

The owl fell a moping and twinkling. L'Estr.

3. To play irregularly.

His eyes will twinkle, and his tongue will roll,
As though he beckon'd, and call'd back his soul. Donne.

TWINKLE, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A sparkling intermitting light.

2. A motion of the eye.

Suddenly, with twinkles of her eye,
The damsel broke his mis-temper'd dart. Spenser.
I come, I come; the least twinkle had brought me to thee. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

3. A short space, such as is taken up by a motion of the eye.

Money can thy wants at will supply:
Shields, steeds, and arms, and all things for thee
meet,
It can pourvey in twinkling of an eye. Spenser.

These false beauties of the stage are no more lasting than a rainbow; when the actor glides them no longer with his reflection, they vanish in a twinkling. Dryden.

The action, passion, and manners of so many persons in a picture, are to be discerned in the twinkling of an eye, if the light could travel over so many different objects all at once. Dryden.

TWINKLING, n. f. [diminutive of twine.]

A twin lamb; a lamb of two brought at a birth.

Twinklings increase bring. Tusser's Husbandry.

TWINNER, n. f. [from twin.] A breeder of twins.

Ever yearly by twinning rich maisters do make,
The lambs of such twinnere for breeders go take. Tusser.

To TWIRL, v. a. [from whirl.] To turn round; to move by a quick station.

Wool and raw silk by contrivance incorporate with other thread; especially if there be a little wreath-ing, as appeareth by the twirling and twirling about of spindles. Mason.
Dextrous darts twirl the sprinkling mop. Gay.
See ruddy maids,
Some taught with dextrous hand to twirl the wheel. Dodley.

To TWIRL, v. n. To revolve with a quick motion.

Twirl, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Rotation; circular motion.

2. Twist; convolution.

The twirl on this is different from that of the others; this being an heterostrophia, the twirls turning from the right hand to the left. Woodward on Raffles.

To TWIST, v. a. [twyran, Sax. twisten, Dutch.]

1. To form by complication; to form by convolution.

Do but despair,
And if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twisted from her womb
Will strangle thee. Shakespeare.

To reprove discontent, the ancients feigned; that in hell stood a man twisting a rope of hay; and still he twisted on, suffering an aft to cut up all that was finished. Taylor.

Would Clotho wash her hands in milk,
And twist our thread with gold and silk;
Would she in friendship, peace and plenty,
Spin out our years to four times twenty;
And should we both in this condition
Have conquer'd love, and worse ambition;
Else these two passions by the way
May chance to show us scurvy play. Prior.

The task were harder to secure my own
Against the power of those already known;
For well you twist the secret chains that bind
With gentle force the captivated mind. Lyttelton.

2. To contort; to writhe.

Either double it into a pyramical, or twist it into a serpentine form. Pope.

3. To wreath; to wind; to encircle by something round about.

There are pillars of smoke twisted about with wreaths of flame. Burner's Theory of the Earth.

4. To form; to weave.

If thou dost love fair Hero, cherish it,
And thou shalt have her: was't not in this end
That thou began'st to twist so fine a story? Shak.

5. To unite by intertexture of parts.

All know how prodigal
Of thy great soul thou art, longing to twist
Bays with that ivy which so early left Thy youthful temples. Waller.

6. To unite; to insinuate.

When avarice twists itself, not only with the practice of men, but the doctrines of the church;
when ecclesiasticks dispute for money, the mischief seems fatal. Deacy of Pitty.

To TWIST, v. n. To be contorted; to be convolved.

In an ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts, is a convolution or inflexion of one part of the gut within the other. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Deep in her breast he plung'd the shining sword
Th' Ionians view the slain with vast surprise,
Her twisting volumes, and her rolling eyes. Pope.

Twist, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing made by convolution, or winding two bodies together.

Minerva nam'd him
Within a twist of twining others laid. Addison.

2. A single string of a cord.

Winding a thin string about the work hazards its breaking, by the fretting of the several twists against one another. Mason's Mechanical Exercises.

3. A cord; a string.

Through these labyrinths, not my growling wit,
But thy silk twist, let down from heav'n to see,
Did both conduct and teach me, how by it
To climb to thee. Herbert.

About his chin the twist
He ty'd, and soon the strangled soul dismiss'd. Dryden.

4. Contortion; writhe.

Not the least turn of twist in the fibres of any one animal, which does not render them more proper for that particular animal's way of life than any other cast or texture. Addison.

5. The manner of twisting.

Jack shook at first sight of it; he found fault with the length, the thickness, and the twist. Arb.

Twister. n. s. [from twist.]

1. One who twists; a ropemaker.

2. The instrument of twisting. To this word I have annexed some remarkable lines, which explain twist in all its senses.

When a twister a twisting will twist him a twist,
For the twisting of his twist he three times doth intwist;

But if one of the twines of the twist do untwist,
The twine that untwisteth untwisteth the twist.
Untwisting the twine that untwisteth between,
He twists with his twister the two in a twine;
Then twice having twisted the twines of the twine,
He twicheth the twine he had twined in twain.
The twain that in twining before in the twine,
As twins were intwisted, he now doth untwine,
'Twist the twain intertwisting a twine more between,
He, twirling his twister, makes a twist of the twine. Wallis.

To TWIT. v. a. [Hebræan, Saxon.] To sneer; to flout; to reproach.

When approaching the stormy flowers
We might with our shoulders bear off the sharp showers.

And sooth to saine, nought seemeth like strife,
That shepherds so twisten each other's life. Spenser.
When I protest true loyalty to her,
She twists me with my falsehood to my friend. Shakespeare.

Æsop minds men of their errors, without twisting them for what's amiss. L'Estrange.
This these scoffers twisted the Christians with. Tillotson.

Galen bled his patients, till by fainting they could bear no longer; for which he was twisted in his own time. Baker.

To TWITCH. v. a. [Epicæan, Saxon.]

To vellicate; to pluck with a quick motion; to snatch; to pluck with a hasty motion.

He tose, and twitch'd his mantle blue,
To-morrow to fresh woods, and pastures new. Milton.

Twitch'd by the sleeve, he mouths it more and more. Dryden.

With a furious leap
She sprung from bed, disturbed in her mind,
And fear'd at ev'ry step a twitching spright behind. Dryden.

Thrice they twitch'd the diamond, in her ear. Pope.

Twitch. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A quick pull; a sudden vellication.

But Hudibras gave him a twitch
As quick as lightning in the breech. Hudibras.
The lion gave out heavy twitches, and got his feet out of the trap, but left his claws behind. L'Estrange.

2. A contraction of the fibres.

Other twisted pairs
Contract the fibres, as the twitch produce,
Which gently pushes on the grateful food
To the wide stomach, by its hollow road. Blackm.

Mighty physical their fear is,
For soon appais'd of combat near is,
Thel' heart descending to their bowches,
Must give their stomachs cruel twitches. Prior.
A fit of the stone is the cure, from the inflammation and pain occasioning convulsive twitches.

Witchgrass. n. s. A plant.

Witchgrass is a weed that keeps some land loose, hollow, and draws away the virtue of the ground. Martinet.

To TWITTER. v. n.

1. To make a sharp tremulous intermitted noise.

This must be done;
Swallows twitter on the chimney-tops. Dryden.
They twitter cheerful, till the vernal months Invite them back. Thomson.

2. To be suddenly moved with any inclination. A low word.

A widow which had a twittering toward a second husband, took a gossiping companion to manage the job. L'Estrange.

Twitter. n. s.

1. Any motion or disorder of passion; such as, a violent fit of laughing, or fit of fretting.

The ancient errant knights
Won all their ladies hearts in fights,
And cut whole giants into fitters,
To put them into amorous twitters. Hudibras.
The moon was in a heavy twitter, that her cloaths never fitted her. L'Estrange.

2. An upbraider.

Twittletwattle. n. s. [A ludicrous reduplication of twattle.] Tattle; gabble. A vile word.

Insipid twittletwattles, frothy jests, and jingling witcheisms, insure us to a misunderstanding of things. L'Estrange.

Twixt. A contraction of betwixt.

Twilight, short arbiter twixt day and night. Milton.

Two. adj. [twai, Gothick; tpu, Saxon.]

1. One and one.

Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch;
Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth;
Between two blades, which bears the better temper;
Between two horses, which doth bear him best;
Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye,
I have some shallow spirit of judgment. Shakespeare.
Three words it will three times report, and then the two latter for some time. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Fifteen chambers were to lodge us two and two together. Bacon.

They lay
By two and two across the common way. Dryden.

2. It is used in composition.

Next to the raven's age, the Pylion king
Was longest liv'd of any two-legg'd thing. Dryden.
A rational animal better describ'd man's essence, than a two-legged animal, with broad nails, and without feathers. Locke.

The two-shap'd Eriichonius had his birth
Without a mother, from the teeming earth. Add.
Her register was a two-leaved book of record, one page containing the names of her living, and the other of her deceased members. Ayliffe.

Two'edged. adj. [two and edge.] Having an edge on either side.

Clarissa drew, with tempting grace,
A two-edg'd weapon from her shining case. Pope.

Two'fold. adj. [two and fold.] Double; two of the same kind; or two different things coexisting.

Our prayer against sudden death importeth a twofold desire, that death when it cometh may give us some convenient respite, or if that be denied us of God, yet we may have wisdom to provide before-hand. Hopker.

Through mirkfold air her ready way she makes,
Her twofold team, of which two black as pitch,
And two were brown, yet each to each unlike Did softly swim away. Fairy Queen.

O thou! the earthly author of my blood,
Whose youthful spirit in me regenerate
Doth now with twofold vigour lift me up,
To reach at victory above my head,
Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point. Shakespeare.

Our twofold feast with either life. Dryden.

Time and place taken for distinguishable portions of space and duration, have each of them a twofold acceptation. Locke.

Eyes, that erst brought forth but single lambt,
Now dropp'd their twofold burdens. Prior.
Holiness may be taken in a twofold sense; for that external holiness, which belongs to persons or things offered to God; or for those internal graces which sanctify our natures. Attenbury.

Two'fold. adv. Doubly.

A proselyte you make twofold more the child of hell than yourselves. Matt. xxiii. 15.

Two'handèd. adj. [two and hand.]

Large; bulky; enormous of magnitude.

With huge twohandèd sway,

Brandish'd aloft, the horrid edge came down,

Wide wafting. Milton's Paradise Lost.

If little, then she's life and soul all o'er;

An Amazon, the large twohandèd whore. Dryden.

Two'pence. n. s. A small coin, valued at twice a penny.

You all shew like gilt two'pences to me. Shakespeare.

To TYE. v. a. To bind. See Tie.

TYE. n. s. See Tie. A knot; a bond or obligation.

Lay your Command upon me; to the which my duties

Are with a most indissoluble tye

For ever knit. Shakespeare.

I have no tye upon you to be true,

But that which loosen'd your's, my love to you. Dryden.

Honour's a sacred tye, the law of kings,

The noble mind's distinguishing perfection,

That aids and strengthens virtue where it meets her,

And imitates her actions where she is not;

It ought not to be sported with. Addison.

Lend me aid, I now conjure thee, lend,

By the salt tye and sacred name of friend. Pope.

TY'GER. n. s. See Tiger.

TYKE. n. s. [See Tike.] Tyke in Scottish still denotes a dog, or one as contemptible and vile as a dog; and from thence perhaps comes teague.

Bate tyke, call'st thou me host? now,

By this hand, I swear I know the term. Shakespeare.

TY'MBAL. n. s. [tymbal, French.] A kind of kettle drum.

Yet, gracious charity! indulgent guest!

Were not thy pow'r exerted in my breast,

My speeches would send up unheeded pray'r:

The scorn of life would be but wild despair:

A tymbal's found were better than my voice,

My faith were form, my eloquence were noise. Prior.

TYMPANITES. n. s. [tympanitis.] That particular sort of dropsy that swells the belly up like a drum, and is often cured

by tapping.

TYMPANUM. n. s. A drum; a part of the ear, so called from its resemblance to a drum.

The three little bones in meatu auditorio, by firming the tympanum, are a great help to the hearing. Wise.

TYMPANY. n. s. [from tympanum, Lat.]

A kind of obstructed flatulence that swells

the body like a drum; the wind dropsy.

Hope, the Christian grace, must be proportioned and temperate to the promise; if it exceed that temper and proportion, it becomes a tumour and tympany of hope. Hammond.

He does not shew us Rome great suddenly,

As if the empire were a tympany;

But gives a natural growth, tells how and why

The little body grew so large and high. Suckling.

Others that affect

A lofty stile, swell to a tympany. Roscommon.

Pride is no more than an unnatural tympany, that rises in a bubble, and spends itself in a blast. L'Estrange.

Nor let thy mountain-belly make pretence
Of likeness; chide's a typany of sense.
A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ,
But sure thou'rt but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.
The air is so rarified in this kind of dropical tumour, as makes it hard and tight like a drum,
And from thence it is called a typany. Arbutnot.

TY'NY. adj. Small.

He that has a little tyny wit,
Must make content with his fortunes fit. Shaksp.

TYPE. n. f. [type, Fr. typus, Lat. τύπος.]

1. Emblem; mark of something.

Clean renouncing
The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,
Short bolster'd breeches, and those types of travel,
And understanding again the honest men. Shaksp.
'Thy emblem, gracious queen, the British rose,
Type of sweet rule, and gentle majesty. Prior.

2. That by which something future is prefigured.

Informing them by types
And shadows of that destin'd seed to bruise
The serpent, by what means he shall achieve Mankind's deliverance. Milton.

The Apostle shews the Christian religion to be in truth and substance what the Jewish was only in type and shadow. Tillotson.

3. A stamp; a mark. Not in use.

Thy father bears the type of King of Naples,
Yet not so wealthy is an English yeoman. Shaksp.
What good is cover'd with the face of heav'n
To be discovered, that can do me good?
—Th' advancement of your children gentle lady!
—Up to some scaffold, there to lose their heads!
—No, to the dignity and height of fortune,
The high imperial type of this earth's glory. Shak.
Which, though in their mean types small matter
doth appear,
Yet both of good account are reckon'd in the shiere. Drayton.

4. A printing letter.

To TYPE. v. a. To prefigure.

He ratified ceremonial and positive laws, in respect of their spiritual use and signification, and by fulfilling all things typed and pre-figured by them. White.

TY'PICAL. } adj. [typique, Fr. typique, TY'PICK. } Lat.] Emblematical; figurative of something else.

The Levitical priesthood was only typical of the Christian; which is so much more holy and honourable than that, as the institution of Christ is more excellent than that of Moses. Atterbury.

Hence that many courtesan ran,
Hand-in-hand, a goodly train,
To bless the great Eliz's reign;
And in the typic glory show
What fuller bliss Maria shall bestow. Prior.

TY'PICALLY. adv. [from typical.] In a typical manner.

This excellent communicativeness of the divine nature is typically represented, and mysteriously exemplified by the Porphyrian scale of being. Norris.

TY'PICALNESS. n. f. [from typical.] The state of being typical.

To TY'PIFY. v. a. [from type.] To figure; to shew in emblem.

The resurrection of Christ hath the power of a pattern to us, and is so typified in baptism, as an engagement to rise to newness of life. Hammond.
Our Saviour was typified indeed by the goat that was slain; at the effusion of whose blood; not only the hard hearts of his enemies relented, but the stony rocks and wall of the temple were shattered.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TYPOGRAPHER. n. f. [τύπος and γράφω.]
A printer.

TYPOGRAPHICAL. adj. [from typography.]

1. Emblematical; figurative.

2. Belonging to the printer's art.

TYPOGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from typographical.]

1. Emblematically; figuratively.

2. After the manner of printers.

TYPOGRAPHY. n. f. [typographie, Fr.
typographia, Latin.]

1. Emblematical, figurative, or hierogly-phical representation.

Those diminutive and pamphlet treatises daily published amongst us, are pieces containing rather typography than verity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. The art of printing.

TY'RANNESS. n. f. [from tyrant.] A she tyrant.

They were, by law of that proud tyranness,
Provok'd with wrath and envy's false lumise. Spenser.

The tyranness doth joy to see
The huge massacres which her eyes do make. Spenser.

TYRA'NNICAL. } adj. [tyrannus, Lat. ty-

TYRA'NNICK. } rannick, Fr. tyrannique.] Suiting a tyrant; acting like a tyrant; cruel; despotick; imperious.

Charge him home that he affects Tyrannick power. Shakspare's Coriolanus.

You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all reason'd office, and to wind Yourself into a power tyrannical. Shakspare.
Domitian had been tyrannical; and in his time many noble houses were overthrown by false accusations. Bacon.

Subdue and quell, o'er all the earth,
Brute violence, and proud tyrannick pow'r. Milton.
If the spirit of a subject be rebellious, in a prince it will be tyrannical and intolerable. Taylor.

She hath recourse
To tears and prayers, again she feels the smart
Of a fresh wound from the tyrannick dart. Denham.

Our sects a more tyrannick power assume,
And would for scorpions change the rods of Rome. Roscommon.

And by the nobles, by his commons curst,
Th' oppressor rul'd tyrannick where he durst;
Stretch'd o'er the poor and church his iron rod,
And treats alike his vassals and his God. Pope.

TYRA'NNICALLY. adv. [from tyrannical.]
In manner of a tyrant.

TYRA'NNICIDE. n. f. [tyrannus and cædo,
Latin.] The act of killing a tyrant.

To TY'RANNISE. v. n. [tyranniser, Fr.
from tyrant.] To play the tyrant; to act with rigour and imperiousness.

While we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear will not be able to tyrannise over us. Hooker.

Then 'gan Caiusius tyrannise anew,
And 'gainst the Romans bent their proper power,
And so Alcæus treacherously slew,
And took on him the robe of emperor. Spenser.

I made thee miserable,
What time I threw the people's suffrages
On him, that thus doth tyrannise o'er me. Shaksp.

A crew, whom like ambition joins
With him, or under him to tyrannise. Milton.

Beauty had crown'd you, and you must have been
The whole world's mistress, other than a queen;
All had been rivals, and you might have spar'd,
Or kill'd and tyrannise without a guard. Waller.
He does violence to his own faculties, tyrannises over his own mind, and usurps the prerogative that belongs to truth alone, which is, to command by its own authority. Locke.

TY'RANNOUS. adj. [from tyrant.] Tyrannical; despotick; arbitrary; severe;
cruel; imperious. Not in use.

It is strange to see the unmanlike cruelty of mankind, who, not content with their tyrannous ambition to have brought the others virtuous patrients under them, think their masterhood nothing without doing injury to them. Sidney.

Lately grown into a loathing and detestation of the unjust and tyrannous rule of Harold, an usurper. Spenser.

Between two charming words comes in my father,
And, like the tyrannous breathing of the north,
Shakes all our buds from blowing. Shakspare.

'Tis excellent
To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant. Shakspare.

Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas!
Than the queen's life? Shakspare.

Subjection to his empire tyrannous. Milton.
After the death of this tyrannous and ambitious king, these writings came abroad. Temple.

TY'RANNY. n. f. [tyrannis, Latin; tyrannie;
tyrannie, French.]

1. Absolute monarchy imperiously administered.

Our grand foe,
Who now triumphs, and, in the excess of joy,
So's reigning holds the tyranny of heav'n. Milton.
The cities fellosten under tyrannies, which spring naturally out of popular governments. Temple.

2. Unresisted and cruel power.

Boundless intemperance
In nature is a tyranny, it hath been
Th' untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. Shakspare.

3. Cruel government; rigorous command.

Bleed, bleed, poor country!
Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure,
For goodness darts not check thee. Shakspare.
Suspicious dispose kings to tyranny, and husbands to jealousy. Bacon.

God, in judgment just,
Subjects him from without to violent lords;
Who oft as undeservedly intral
His outward freedom: tyranny must be. Milton.

4. Severity; rigour; inclemency.

The tyranny of the open night's too rough
For nature to endure. Shakspare's King Lear.

TY'RANT. n. f. [tyrannus; tyrannus, Lat.
Roxland contends that this word, with the correspondent Greek and Latin, is derived from tir, Welch and Erse, land, and rhanner, Welch, to share; q. d. tir- hanner, a sharer, or divider of and among his vassals.]

1. An absolute monarch governing imperiously.

2. A cruel, despotick and severe master;
an oppressor.

Love to a yielding heart is a king, but to a resisting is a tyrant. Sidney.

I would not be the villain that thou think'st,
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich east to boot. Shakspare's Macbeth.

Dissembling courtesy! how fine this tyrant
Can tickle where she wounds! Shaksp. Cymbeline.
The house of woe, and dungeon of our tyrant. Milton.

Consider those grand agents and lieutenants of the devil, by whom he scourges and plagues the world under him, to wit, tyrants; and was there ever any tyrant who was not also false and perfidious? South.

Thou mean'st to kill a tyrant, not a king. Dry.
When tyrant custom had not shackled man,
But free to follow nature was the mode. Temple.

TY'RE. n. f. [properly tire.] See TIRE.

I have seen her beset and bedeck'd all over with emeralds and pearls, tanged in rows about the tyre
of her head. Hawkinsill.

TY'RO. n. f. [properly tiro, as in the Latin] One yet not master of his art;
one in his rudiments.

There stands a structure on a rising hill,
Where tyrs take their freedom out to kill.

Garth's Dispensary.

VAC

V Has two powers, expressed in modern English by two characters, V consonant and U vowel, which ought to be considered as two letters; but as they were long confounded while the two uses were annexed to one form, the old custom still continues to be followed.

U, the vowel, has two sounds; one clear, expressed at other times by eu, as obscure; the other close, and approaching to the Italian u, or English oo, as obscure.

V, the consonant, has a sound nearly approaching to those of b and f. With b it is by the Spaniards and Gascons always confounded, and in the Runick alphabet is expressed by the same character with f; distinguished only by a diacritical point. Its sound in English is uniform. It is never mute.

VACANCY, n. f. [from vacant.]

1. Empty space; vacancy.

How is't,
That thou dost bend your eye on vacancy,
And with th' incorporal air dost hold discourse?
Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. Chasm; space unfilled.

The reader finds a wide vacancy, and knows not how to transport his thoughts to the next particular, for want of some connecting idea.
Watts's Logic.

3. [Vacance, Fr.] State of a post or employment when it is unsupplied.

They were content to bribe them with the nomination of some bishops, and disposal of the revenues of some churches during the vacancies.
Leffry.

In the vacancy of a bishop, the guardian of the spiritualities was summoned to parliament in the bishop's room.
Atty.

4. [Vacance, Fr.] Time of leisure; relaxation; intermission; time unengaged.

If, sometimes, each other's eyes we meet,
Those little vacancies from toil are sweet.
Dryden.

The daily intervals of time and vacancies from necessary labour, together with the one day in seven in the Christian world, allow sufficient time, Watts.

5. Littlefness; emptiness of thought.

When alone, or in company, they sit still without doing any thing, I like it worse; for all dispositions to idleness are vacancies, even before they are habits, are dangerous.
Wotton.

VACANT, adj. [vacant, Fr. vacans, Latin.]

1. Empty; unfilled; void.

Why should the air so impetuously rush into the cavity of the receiver, if there were before no vacant room to receive it?
Boyle.

A better race to bring into their vacant room.
Milton.

Free; unencumbered; uncrowded.

Religion is the interest of all; but philosophy of those only that are at leisure, and vacant from the affairs of the world. Mure's Divine Dialogue.

A very little part of our life is so vacant from uneasiness, as to leave us free to the attraction of remoter good. Locke.

3. Not filled by an incumbent, or possessor.

Left the fiend invade vacant possession. Milton.
Others, when they allowed the throne vacant, thought the succession should immediately go to the next heir. Swift.

4. Being at leisure; disengaged.

They which have the governments, scatter the army abroad, and place them in villages to take their victuals of them, at such vacant times as they lie not in camp. Spenser.

Sir John Berkley was the more vacant for that service, by the reduction of Banastaple. Clarendon.

Besides those portions of time which the necessities of nature and of civil life extorted from him, there was not a minute of the day which he left vacant. Full.

The memory relieves the mind in her vacant moments, and prevents any chains of thought, by ideas of what is past. Addison.

5. Thoughtless; empty of thought; not busy.

The wretched slave,
Who with a body fill'd, and vacant mind,
Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distressful bread.
Shakespeare.

The duke had a pleasant and vacant face, proceeding from a singular assurance in his temper. Wotton's Buckingham.

TO VACATE, v. a. [vacat, Latin.]

1. To annul; to make void; to make of no authority.

That after all annulling the authority of the precedent, tells the world that some remorse touched even Strafford's most implacable enemies.
King Charles.

The necessity of observing the Jewish Sabbath was vacated by the apostolical institution of the Lord's day. Nelson.

2. To make vacant; to quit possession of; as, he vacated the throne.

3. To defeat; to put an end to.

He vacates my revenge;
For, while he trusts me, 'twere so base a part
To fawn, and yet betray. Dryden.

VACATION, n. f. [vacation, Fr. vacatio, Latin.]

1. Intermission of juridical proceedings, or any other stated employments; recess of courts or senates.

Vacation is all that time which passes between term and term, at London. Cowell.

As these clerks want not their full task of labour during the open term, so there is for them wherewith to be occupied in the vacation only. Bacon's Office of Alienation.

2. Leisure; freedom from trouble or perplexity.

Beausity of peace, quiet, and vacation for piety, have rendered it necessary, in every Christian commonwealth, by laws to secure propriety. Hammond's Fundamentals.

VAD

VACCARY, n. f. [vacca, Latin.] A cow-house; a cow-pasture. Bailey.

VACILLANCY, n. f. [vacillans, from vacillo, Latin; vacillans, Fr.] A state of wavering; fluctuation; inconstancy. Not much in use.

I deny that all mutability implies imperfection, though some does, as that vacillancy in human souls, and such mutations as are found in corporeal matter. Mure's Divine Dialogue.

VACILLATION, n. f. [vacillatio, from vacillo, Latin; vacillation, Fr.] The act or state of reeling or staggering.

The muscles keep the body upright, and prevent its falling, by readily assisting against every vacillation. Derham.

VAGUATION, n. f. [from vacuus, Lat.] The act of emptying. Dictionary.

VACUITY, n. f. [from vacuum.] A philosopher that holds a vacuum: opposed to a plenist.

Those spaces, which the vacuists would have to be empty, because they are manifestly devoid of air, the plenists do not prove replenished with subtle matter. Boyle.

VACUITY, n. f. [vacuitas, from vacuus, Latin; vacuité, French.]

1. Emptiness; state of being unfilled.

Hunger is such a state of vacuity, as to require a fresh supply of aliment. Arbutnot.

2. Space unfilled; space unoccupied.

In filling up vacuities, turning out shadows and ceremonies, by explicit prescription of substantial duties, which those shadows did obscurely represent. Hammond's Fundamentals.

He, that seat soon failing, meets
A vast vacuity. Milton.

Body and space are quite different things, and a vacuity is interspersed among the particles of matter. Bentley.

God, who alone can answer all our longings, and fill every vacuity of our soul, should entirely possess our heart. Reps.

Redeeming still at night these vacuities of the day. Fell.

3. Inanity; want of reality.

The soul is seen, like other things, in the mirror of its effects: but if they'll run behind the glass to catch at it, their expectations will meet with vacuity and emptiness. Glanville.

VACUOUS, adj. [vacuus, Latin; vacué, French.] Empty; unfilled.

Boundless the deep, because I AM who fill infinitude; nor vacuus the space. Milt. Par. 1. 108.

VACUUM, n. f. [Lat.] Space unoccupied by matter.

Our enquiries about vacuum, or space and atoms, will show us some good practical lessons. Watts.

TO VADO, v. n. [vado, Latin.] To vanish; to pass away. Spenser. A word useful in poetry, but not received.

No ever gloried here thy sovereign name,
That thou may'st smile on all which thou hast made;
Whole

VAG

Whole frown alone can shake this earthly frame,
And at whole touch the hills in smok shall wade.
Watson.

VAGABOND. adj. [vagabundus, low Lat. vagabond, French.]

1. Wandering without any settled habitation; wanting a home.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death;
Vagabond exile: yet I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
A vagabond debtor may be cited in whatever place or jurisdiction he is found. Ayliffe's Parerg.

2. Wandering; vagrant.

This common body,
Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,
Goes to, and back, beseeching the varying tide.

Shakespeare.
Their prayers by envious winds Blown vagabond or frustrate. Milton.

VAGABOND. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A vagrant; a wanderer: commonly in a sense of reproach.

We call those people wanderers and vagabonds,
that have no dwelling place.

Raleigh's History of the World.
Reduc'd like Hannibal, to seek relief
From court to court, and wander up and down
A vagabond in Africa. Adisson's Cato.

2. One that wanders illegally, without a settled habitation.

Vagabond is a person without a home. Watson.

VAGARY. n. s. [from vagus, Latin.] A wild freak; a capricious frolick.

They chang'd their minds,
Flew off, and into strange vagaries fell,
As they would dance. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Would your son engage in some frolic, or take a vagary, were it not better he should do it with than without your knowledge? Locke on Education.

VAGINOPE NNOUS. adj. [vagina and penna, Latin.] Sheath-winged; having the wings covered with hard cases.

VAGOUS. adj. [vagus, Lat. vagus, Fr.] Wandering; unsettled. Not in use.

Such as were born and brogt of a single woman, through a vagous lust, were called Sporn.

VAGRANCE. n. s. [from vagrant.] A state of wandering; unsettled condition.

VAGRANT. adj. Wandering; unsettled; vagabond; unfixed in place.

Do not oppose popular mistakes and surmises, or vagrant and erroneous stories.

Mere's Divine Dialogues.
Take good heed what men will think and say;
That beauteous Erama vagrant courses took,
Her father's house, and civil life forsook. Prior.

Her lips no living bard, I wot,
May say how red, how round, how sweet;
Old Homer only could indite
Their vagrant grace, and soft delight:
They stand recorded in his book,
When Helen smil'd, and Hebe spoke. Prior.

VAGRANT. n. s. [vagant, French.] A sturdy beggar; wanderer; vagabond; man unsettled in habitation. In an ill sense.

Vagrants and outlaws shall offend thy view, Train'd to assault, and disciplin'd to kill. Prior.
You'll not the progress of your atom's stay,
Nor to collect the vagrants find a way. Blackmore.

To relieve the helpless poor; to make sturdy vagrants relieve themselves; to hinder idle hands from being mischievous, are things of evident use.

F. Atterbury.
Ye vagrants of the sky,
To right owlest unheeded take your way. Pope.

VAGUE. adj. [vague, French; vagus, Latin.]

VAI

1. Wandering; vagrant; vagabond.

Gray encouraged his men to set upon the vagant villains, good neither to live peaceably, nor to fight.
Raynard.

2. Unfixed; unsettled; undetermined; in definite.

The perception of being, or not being, belongs no more to these vague ideas, signified by the terms, whatsoever, and thing, than it does to any other ideas. Locke.

VAIL. n. s. [voile, French.] This word is now frequently written veil, from velum, Latin; and the verb veil, from the verb
voile; but the old orthography commonly derived it, I believe rightly, from the French.]

1. A curtain; a cover thrown over any thing to be concealed.

While they supposed to lie hid in their secret fins, they were scattered under a dark vail of forgetfulness. Wisd.

2. A part of female dress, by which the face and part of the shape is concealed.

3. Money given to servants. It is commonly used in the plural. See VALE.

TO VAIL. v. d. To cover. See VEIL.

TO VAIL. v. a. [avalier le bout, French.]
Adisson writes it well, ignorantly.]

1. To let fall; to suffer to descend.

They stiffly refused to vail their bonnets, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by seafarers.
Carew.

The virgin 'gan her beav'oir vail,
And thank'd him first, and thus began her tale.
Fayfax.

2. To let fall in token of respect.

Certain of the Turks galleys, which would not
vail their topmasts, the Venetians fiercely assailed.
Kneller's History.

Before my princely state let your poor greatness fall,
And vail your tops to me, the sovereign of you all.
Dryden.

They had not the ceremony of vailing the bonnet in salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Adisson.

3. To fall; to let sink in fear, or for any other interest.

That furious Scot
'Gan vail his stomach, and did grace the shame
Of those that turn'd their backs. Shakespeare.

TO VAIL. v. n. To yield; to give place; to shew respect by yielding. In this sense, the modern writers have igno-rantly written veil.

Thy convenience must vail to thy neighbour's necessity; and thy very necessities must yield to thy neighbour's extremity. South.

VAIN. adj. [vain, French; vanus, Lat.]

1. Fruitless; ineffectual.

Let no man speak again
To alter this; for counsel is but vain. Shakesp.
Vain is the force of man,
To crush the pillars which the pile sustain. Dryden.

2. Empty; unreal; shadowy.

Before the passage horrid Hydra stands,
Gorgons, Geryon with his triple frame,
And vain Chimera vomits empty flame.
Dryden's Æneid.

Unmov'd his eyes, and wet his beard appears;
And shedding vain, but seeming real tears. Dryd.

3. Meanly proud; proud of petty things;
with of before the cause of vanity.

No folly like vain glory; nor any thing more ridiculous than for a vain man to be still boasting of himself. J. B. Franklin.

He wad'd a torch aloft, and, madly vain,
Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryd.
The minstrels play'd on every side,
Vain of their art, and for the mastery by'd. Dryd.

VAI

To be vain is rather a mark of humility than pride. Vain men delight in telling what honours have been done them, what great company they have kept, and the like; by which they plainly confess, that these honours were more than their due, and such as their friends would not believe, if they had not been told; whereas a man truly proud thinks the honours below his merit, and scorns to boast. Swift.

Ah friend! to dazzle let the vain design;
To raise the thought, and touch the heart, be thine. Pope.

Here learn the great unreal wants to seign,
Unpleasing truths here mortify the vain. Savage.
Ye vain! desist from your erroneous strife;
Be wife, and quit the false sublime of life!

The true ambition there alone resides,
Where justice vindicates, and wisdom guides. Young.

4. Shewy; ostentatious.

Load some vain church with old theatrick state. Pope.

5. Idle; worthless; unimportant.

Both all things vain, and all who in vain things
Built their fond hopes of glory, or lasting fame,
Or happiness. Milton's Paradise Lost.

He heard a grave philosopher maintain,
That all the actions of our life were vain,
Which with our sense of pleasure not consp'nd.

To your vain answer will you have recourse,
And tell us 'tis ingenuit active force. Blackmore.

6. False; not true.

7. In VAIN. To no purpose; to no end; ineffectually; without effect.

He tempts in vain. Milton.
Providence and nature never did any thing in vain. Leffrange.

Strong Malys stands in vain; weak Phlegys lies. Dryden.

The philosophers of old did in vain enquire, whether summum bonum consisted in riches, bodily delights, virtue, or contemplation. Locke.

If we hope for what we are not likely to possess, we act and think in vain, and make life a greater dream and shadow than it really is.

Adisson's Spectator.
If from this discourse one honest man shall receive satisfaction, I shall think that I have not written nor lived in vain. West on the reformation.

VAINGLO'RIOUS. adj. [vanus and gloriosus, Latin.] Boasting without performances; proud in disproportion to desert.

Van-gl'orious man, when fluttering wind does blow,
In his light wings is lifted up to sky. Spenser.

Strength to glory aspires
Vain-gl'orious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton.

This his arrogant and vain-gl'orious expression witnesseth. Hale.

VAINGLO'RY. n. s. [vana gloria, Latin.]

Pride above merit; empty pride; pride in little things.

He had nothing of vain-gl'ory, but yet kept state and majesty to the height; being sensible, that majesty maketh the people bow, but vain-gl'ory boweth to them. Bacon's Henry VII.

Expose every blast of vain-gl'ory, every idle thought, to be chastened by the rod of spiritual discipline. Taylor.

This extraordinary person, out of his natural aversion to vaingl'ory, wrote several pieces which he did not assume the honour of. Adisson.

A monarch's sword when mad vaingl'ory draws,
Not Waller's wreath can hide the nation's fear. Pope.

VAINLY. adv. [from vain.]

1. Without effect; to no purpose; in vain.

Our cannons' malice vainly shall be spent Against th' invulnerable clouds of heaven. Shak.

In weak complaints you vainly waste your breath;
They are not tears that can revenge his death.

Dryden.

2. Proudly; arrogantly.

Humility teaches us to think neither vainly nor vauntingly of ourselves.

Delany.

3. Idly; foolishly.

Nor vainly hope to be invulnerable.

Milton.

If Lenculus be ambitious, he shall be vainly credulous, presuming his advancement to be decreed by the Sybilline oracles.

Gray's Cœmologus.

VAINNESS. n. f. [from vain.] The state of being vain. Pride; falsehood; emptiness.

I have ingratitude more in a man,
Than lying, vainness, babbling.

Shakespeare.

Anchises, in a flow'ry vale,

Review'd his muster'd rape, and took the tale.

Dryden.

In those fair valles by nature form'd to please,

Where Guadalquivir serpentine, with safe, Harri-

2. [From avail, profit; or vale, farewell.]

If from avail it must be written vail, as Dryden writes. If from vale, which I think is right, it must be vale.] Money given to servants.

Since our knights and senators account
To what their fordid, begging vails amount;

Judge what a wretched share the poor attends,

Whose whole subsistence on those alms depends.

Dryden.

His revenue, besides vails, amounted to thirty pounds.

Swift.

VALEDICTION. n. f. [valedico, Latin.]

Addison.

VALEUDINARIAN. adj. [valetudi-

narius, Fr. val-

u, Lat.] Weakly; sickly; infirm of body.

Physic, by purging noxious humours, prevents sickness, in the healthy, or recovers thereof in the valetudinary.

Brown.

Shunning from the warmer valleys to the colder hills, or from the hills to the vales, is a great benefit to the valetudinary, feeble part of mankind.

Denham.

Some patients have been liable to this symptom, and reduced by it to a valetudinary and very unequal state of health.

Blackmore.

Cold of winter, by stopping the pores of perspiration, keeps the warmth more within; whereby there is a greater quantity of spirits generated in healthful animals, for the case is quite otherwise in valetudinary ones. Cheyne's Philosoph. Principles.

Valetudinarians must live where they can command and scold.

Swift.

VALIANCE. n. f. [from valiant; vail
lance, French.] Valour; personal puissance; fierceness; bravery. Not in use.

With stiff force he shook his mortal lance,
To let him meet his doughty valiance.

Spenser.

VALIANT. adj. [vaillant, Fr.] Stout; personally puissant; brave. We say, a valiant man; a valiant action.

Only be thou valiant for me, and fight the Lord's battles.

Samuel, xviii. 17.

Hale, a very valiant sencer, undertook to teach that science in a book, and was laughed at.

Walton.

The church of Antioch might meet at that time to celebrate the memory of such a valiant combat and martyr of Christ.

Nelson.

VALIANTLY. adv. [from valiant.] Stoutly; with personal strength; with personal bravery.

Farewell, kind lord; fight valiantly to-day:

Thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour.

Shakespeare.

It was the duty of a good soldier valiantly to withstand his enemies, and not to be troubled with any evil hap.

Knaples.

VALIANTNESS. n. f. [from valiant.] Valour; personal bravery; puissance;
fierceness; stoutness.

Thy valiantness was mine; thou suck'd it from me.

Shakespeare.

Achimenes having won the top of the walls, by the valiantness of the defendants was forced to retire.

Koller.

Shew not thy valiantness in wine.

Eccles. xxxi. 25.

VA'LID. adj. [valide, French; validus, Latin.]

1. Strong; powerful; efficacious; prevalent.

Perhaps more valid arms,
Weapons more violent, when next we meet,

May serve to better us, and worse our foes.

Milton.

2. Having intellectual force; prevalent;
weighty; conclusive.

A difference in their sentiments as to particular questions, is no valid arguments against the general truth believed by them, but rather a clearer and more solid proof of it.

Stephens.

VA'LIDITY. n. f. [validité, French; from valid.]

1. Force to convince; certainty.

You are persuaded of the validity of that famous verse.

'Tis expectation makes a blessing dear.

Pope.

2. Value. A sense not used.

To thee and thine.

Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom;

No less in space, validity, and pleasure,

Than that conferr'd on Gonerill.

Shakespeare.

VALLANCY. n. f. [from valance.] A large wig that shades the face.

But you, loud Sirs, who through your curls look big,

Criticks in plume and white vallancy wig.

a brave manner.

VALOUR. n. f. [valeur, French; valor, Latin. Ainsworth.] Personal bravery;

strength; prowess; puissance; stoutness.

That I may pour the spirits in thine ear,

And chastise, with the valour of my tongue,

All that impedes thee.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Here I contest

As hotly and as nobly with thy love,

As ever in ambitious strength I did

Contend against thy valour.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

When valour preys on reason,

It eats the sword it fights with.

Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

An innate valour appeared in him, when he put himself upon the soldier's defence as he received the mortal stab.

Howell.

For contemplation he, and valour form'd;

For softness she, and sweet attractive grace.

Such were these giant; men of high renown!

For, in those days, might only shall be admired,

And valour, and heroic virtue, call'd.

Milton.

Valour gives awe, and promises protection to those who want heart or strength to defend themselves. This makes the authority of men among women; and that of a master-buck in a numerous herd.

Temple's Miscellany.

VAL'UABLE. adj. [valable, Fr. from va- lus.]

1. Precious; being of great price.

2. Worthy; deserving regard.

A just account of that valuable person, whose remains lie before us.

F. Atterbury.

The value of several circumstance in story, lessens very much by distance of time; though some minute circumstances are very valuable.

Swift's Thoughts.

VALUATION. n. f. [from value.]

1. The act of setting a value; appraisement.

Humility in man consists not in denying any gift that is in him, but in a just valuation of it, rather thinking too meanly than too highly.

Ray on the Creation.

2. Value set upon any thing.

No reason I, since of your lives you set

So slight a valuation, should receive

My crack'd one to more care.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Take out of men's minds false valuations, and it would leave the minds of a number of men poor shrunken things.

Bacon.

The writers expressed not the valuation of the denarius, without regard to its present valuation.

Arbutnot on Coins.

VALUATOR. n. f. [from value.] An appraiser; one who sets upon any thing its price. A word which I have found no where else.

What valuators will the bishops make use of?

Swift.

VALUE.

VALUE. n. f. [valuer, French; valor, Latin.]

1. Price; worth.

Ye are physicians of no value. Job, xiii.
Learn to live for your own sake, and the service of God; and let nothing in the world be of any value with you, but that which you can turn into a service to God, and a means of your future happiness. Law.

2. High rate.

Cæsar is well acquainted with your virtues, And therefore sets this value on your life: Let him but know the price of Cato's friendship, And name your terms. Addison.

3. Rate; price equal to the worth of the thing bought.

He sent him money; it was with this obliging testimony, that his design was not to pay him the value of his pictures, because they were above any price. Dryden.

TO VA' LUE. v. a. [valoir, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To rate at a certain price.

When the country becomes better inhabited, the riches and other conveniences will be more augmented, and better valued. Spenser.

A mind valuing his reputation at the due price, will repulse all dishonest gain much inferior thereunto. Carew's Survey.

God alone values right the good. Milton.

2. To rate highly; to have in high esteem.

Some of the finest treatises in dialogue, many very valued pieces of French, Italian, and English appear. Addison.

He values himself upon the compassion with which he relieved the afflicted. Atterbury.

To him your orchard's early fruits are due, A pleasing off'ring, when 'tis made by you; He values these. Pope.

1. Emptiness; uncertainty; ignanity.

Vanity of vanities, all is vanity. Ecclesiastes.

2. Fruitless desire; fruitless endeavour.

Vanity possesseth many, who are desirous to know the certainty of things to come. Sidney.

Thy pride, And wand'ring vanity, when least was false, Rejected my forswearing. Milton.

3. Trifling labour.

To lose long discourse against those things which are both against scripture and reason, might rightly be judged a vanity in the answerer not much inferior to that of the inventor. Raleigh's History of the World.

4. Falsehood; untruth.

Here I may well shew the vanity of that which is reported in the story of Walmingham. Dr J. Dowd.

5. Empty pleasure; vain pursuit; idle show; unsubstantial enjoyment; petty object of pride.

Were it not strange if God should have made such store of glorious creatures on earth, and leave them all to be consumed in vanity, allowing none but the baser sort to be employed in his own service? Hooker.

I must Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple Some vanity of mine art. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Cast not too serious wit on idle things; Make her free with slave to vanity. Davies.
Sin with vanity hath fill'd the works of men. Milton.

The eldest equal the youngest in the vanity of their diet; and no other reason can be given of it, but that they equally forgetful of them, in the vanity of their desires. Saunders.

3 A

Thun

Think not, when woman's transient breath is fled,
That all her vanities at once are dead;
Succeeding vanities the still regards,
And though the plays no more, o'erlooks the cards.

Pope.

6. Ostentation; arrogance.

The ground-work thereof is true, however they, through vanity, whilst they would not seem to be ignorant, do thereupon build many forged histories of their own iniquity.

Spenser.

Whether it were out of the same vanity which possessed all those learned philosophers and poets, that Plato also published, not under the right authors' names, those things which he had read in the Scriptures; or fearing the severity of the Aretopagites, and the example of his master Socrates, I cannot judge.

Raleigh's History of the World.

7. Petty pride; pride exerted upon slight grounds; pride operating upon small occasions.

Can you add guilt to vanity, and take A pride to hear the conquests which you make?

Dryden.

'Tis an old maxim in the schools,
That vanity is the food of fools;
Yer now and then your men of wit
Will condescend to take a bit.
The sprat of the world indulges women in great vanity; and mankind seem to consider them in no other view, than as so many painted idols, that are to allure and gratify their passions.

Law.

8. VANQUISH. v. n. [vaincre, French.]

1. To conquer; to overcome; to subdue.

Were't not a shame, that, whilst you live at jar,
The fearful French, whom you late vanquished,
Should make a start o'er seas, and vanquish you?

Shakespeare.

They subdued and vanquished the rebels in all encounters.

Clarendon.

The gods the victor, Cato the vanquish'd chole:
But you have done what Cato could not do,
To chuse the vanquish'd, and restore him too.

Dryden.

2. To confute.

This bold assertion has been fully vanquished in a late reply to the bishop of Meaux's treatise.

F. Atterbury.

VANQUISHER. n. s. [from vanquish.]

A little tube, issuing out from the extremity of an artery, may carry off these vaporous steams of the blood.

Chryse.

VAPOUR. n. s. [vapeur, French; vapor, Latin.]

1. Any thing exhalable; any thing that mingles with the air.

Give a dreadful storm call'd forth
Against our navy; covered shore and all
With gloomy vapours.

Chapman.

Vapour, and mist, and exhalation bet.
When first the sun too powerful beaurs displays,
It draws up vapours which obscure its rays;
But even those clouds at last adorn its way,
Reflect new glories, and augment the day.

Pope.

2. Fame; steam.

The morning is the best, because the imagination is not clouded by the vapours of meat.

Dryden.

In distilling hot spirits, if the head of the still be taken off, the vapour which ascends out of the still will take fire at the flame of a candle, and the flame will run along the vapour from the candle to the still.

Newton's Opticks.

For the imposthume, the vapour of vinegar, and any thing which creates a cough, are pepper.

Arbutnot on Diet.

3. Wind; flatulence.

In the Thessalian witches, and the meetings of witches that have been recorded, great wonders they tell, of carrying in the air, transforming themselves into other bodies. These fables are the effects of imagination: for ointments, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely.

Bacon.

4. Mental fume; vain imagination; fancy unreal.

If his sorrow bring forth amendment, he hath the grace of hope, though it be clouded over with a melancholy vapour, that it be not discernible even to himself.

Hammond.

5. [In the plural.] Diseases caused by flatulence, or by diseased nerves; hypochondriacal maladies; melancholy; spleen.

Every petty prince, vassal to the emperor, can coin what money he pleaseth. Swiss's View of Ire.
The vassals are invited to bring in their complaints to the viceroy, who imprisons and chastises their masters. Addison.

2. A subject; a dependant.

She cannot content the Lord with performance of his discipline, that hath at her side a vassal, whom Satan hath made his viceroy, to cross whatsoever the faithful should do. Hooder.

Such as they thought fit for labour, they received as vassal; but imparted not the benefit of laws, but every one made his will a law unto his own vassal.

Spenser's State of Ireland.
The common people were free subjects to the king, not slaves and vassals to their pretended lords.

The mind hath not reason to remember, that passions ought to be her vassals, not her masters. Raleigh.

Vessels of his anger, when the scourge Inexorable, and the torturing hour
Calls us to penance. Milton.

As all his vassals eagerly desir'd;
With mind averse, he rather underwent
His people's will, than gave his own consent. Dryd.

He subjugated a king, and called him his vassal. Behr.

3. A servant; one who acts by the will of another.

I am his fortune's vassal, and I send him
The greatness he has got. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

VAUNTURE. n. f. [avant mure, Fr.] A false wall; a work raised before the main wall.

With another engine named the warwolf, he pierced with one stone, and cut, as e'en with a thread, two vauntures. Camden's Remains. This warlike captain, daily attempting the vauntures, in the end by force obtained the same; and to possessed of the place, desperately kept it till greater help came running in; who, with wonderful expedition, clapt up a strong covering between the wall and the vaunture. K. H.

VAWARD. n. f. [van and vaward.] Fore part. Obsolete.

Since we have the vaward of the day, My love shall hear the music of my hounds. Shak. Marcius.

Their bands, i' th' vaward are the Antiatres Of their bell trout. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

He doth not more than to have confirmed his authority in the minds of the vulgar, by the present and ready attendance of the waywits. Knotley's History of the Turks.

UBERTY. n. f. [ubertas, Latin.] Abundance; fruitfulness.

UBICATION. n. f. [from ubi, Latin.]

UBIQUITY. n. f. [from ubique, Latin.] Local relation; where-ness. A scholastick term.

Relations, ubication, duration, the vulgar philosophy admits to be something, and yet to enquire in what place they are, were profane. Clarke.

UBIQUITARY. adj. [from ubique, Lat.] Existing every where.

For wealth and an ubiquitous commerce, none can exceed her. Howell.

UBIQUITARY. n. f. [from ubique, Lat.] One that exists every where.

How far wide is Aquinas, which such, by the same reason that an angel might be in two places, he might be in as many as you will? See now, either Xavier is every where, or else the carcase of a friar is more subtle than the nature of an angel. To conclude, either Aquinas is false, or the Papists ubiquitous. Hall.

UBIQUITY. n. f. [from ubique, Latin.]

Omnipresence; existence at the same time in all places.

In the one there is attributed to God death, whereof divine nature is not capable; in the other, ubiquity unto man, which human nature admitteth not. Hooker.

Pero she hight, A solemn wight, As you should meet In any street In that ubiquity. Ben Jonson.

Could they think that to be infinite and immense, the ubiquity of which they could thrust into a corner of their closet? Sonib.

UDDER. n. f. [uden, Saxon; udder, Dutch; uber, Latin.] The breast or dugs of a cow, or other large animal.

A honest, with udders all drawn dry, Lay couching head on ground. Shakespeare.

Product an ampler store of milk; the she-goat, Not without pain, dragg'd her distended udder. Pror.

UDDERED. adj. [from udder.] Furnished with udders.

Marion soft could stroke the udder'd cow. Gay.

VEAL. n. f. [veel, a calf, veeler, vester, to bring forth a calf, old French; vitellus, Latin.] The flesh of a calf killed for the table.

Wouldst thou with mighty beef augment thy meal, Seek Lundenhall; St. James's feeds thee veal. Gay.

VECTION. n. f. [vectio, vectio, Latin.]

VECTIGATION. n. f. [Latin.] The act of carrying, or being carried.

Exhausted loads are toady billing in their chariot; a species of vectigation seldom used amongst the ancients. Arbuthnot.

VECTURE. n. f. [vectura, Latin.] Carriage.

Three things one nation selleth unto another; the

VEG

the commodity as nature yieldeth it, the man facture, and the veffus or carriage. Bacon's Eff.
To VEER. v. n. [virer, French.] To turn about.

Nigh river's mouth, where wind
Veer's oft, as oft he steers and shifts her tail. Milt.
If a will uncertainty prevail,
And turn your veering heart with every gale;
You but the fruit of all your former care,
For the full prospect of a just despair. Recommen.
I have no taste of the noisy prattle
Of giddy crowds, as changeable as winds;
Servants to change, and blowing with the tide
Of twain success; but veering with its ebb. Dryd.
A-head the master pilot steers,
And as he leads, the following navy veers. Dryd.
It is a double misfortune to a nation given to change, when they have a sovereign that is prone to fall in with all the turns and veerings of the people. Addison's Freeholder.
The wind veered about to north-west. Derham.

To VEER. v. a.

1. To let out.

As it is a great point of art, when our matter requires it, to enlarge and veer out all sail; so to take it in and contract it, is of no less prais when the argument doth ask it. Ben Jonson.

2. To turn; to change.

I see the haven nigh at hand,
To which I mean my weary course to bend;
For the main sheet, and bear up with the land.
Spenser.
Sailing farther, it veers its lily to the west, and regardeth that quarter wherein the land is nearer or greater. Brown.

VEGETABILITY. n. f. [from vegetable.] Vegetable nature; the quality of growth without sensation.

The coagulating spirits of salts, and lapidifical juice of the sea, entering the parts of the plant, overcome its vegetability, and convert it unto a lapideous substance. Brown.

VEGETABLE. n. f. [vegetabilis, school Lat. vegetable, Fr.] Any thing that has growth without sensation, as plants.

Vegetables are organized bodies consisting of various parts, containing vessels furnished with different juices; and taking in nourishment from without, usually by means of a root fixed to the earth, or to some other body, as in the generality of plants; sometimes by means of pores distributed over the whole surface, as in sub-marine plants. Nul's Materia Medica.

Let brutes, and vegetables that cannot drink,
So far as drought and nature urges, think. Wall.
There are several kinds of creatures in the world, and degrees of dignity amongst them; some being more excellent than others, animate more than inanimate, sensitive more than vegetables, and men more than brutes. Wilkins.

In vegetables it is the shape, and in bodies not propagated by seed it is the colour, we must fix on.

Other animated substances are called vegetables, which have within themselves the principle of another sort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves, flowers and fruit, such as we see in plants, herbs, trees. Willis.

VEGETABLE. adj. [vegetabilis, Latin.]

1. Belonging to a plant.

The vegetable world, i. e. plant and tree,
From the fair cedar on the craggy brow,
To creeping moss. Prin.

Both mechanisms are equally curious, from an uniform juice to extract all the variety of vegetable juices; or from such variety of food to make a fluid very near uniform to the blood of an animal.
Artemus on Aliments.

2. Having the nature of plants.

Amidst them stood the tree of life,
High eminent, blooming ambrosial fruit
Of vegetable gold. Milton's Paradise Lost.
That vegetative terrestrial hath been ever the

VEH

standing fund, out of which is derived the matter of all animal and vegetable bodies.

Woodward's Natural History.
To VEGETATE. v. n. [vegeto, Latin.]

To grow as plants; to shoot out; to grow without sensation.

Rain-water may be endued with some vegeta- ting or prolific virtue, derived from some saline or oleose particles. Ray.

As long as the seeds remained lodged in a natural soil, they would soon vegetate, and send forth a new set of trees. Woodward.

See dying vegetables life sustains;
See life dissolving vegetate again. Pope's Essay Man.

VEGETATION. n. f. [from vegeto, Lat.]

1. The power of producing the growth of plants.

The exterior surface consisted of a terrestrial matter proper for the nourishment of plants, being little entangled with mere mineral matter, that was unfit for vegetation. Woodward.

The sun, deep darting to the dark retreat
Of vegetation, sets the steaming power
At large. Thompson's Spring.

Let warblers through the vocal groves,
And vegetation paints the plain. Anonymous.

2. The power of growth without sensation.

Plants, though beneath the excellency of creatures endued with sense, yet exceed them in the faculty of vegetation and of fertility. Hooker.

These pulsations I attribute to a plastic nature, or vital principle, as the vegetation of plants must all be. Ray.

VEGETATIVE. adj. [vegetativus, Fr. from vegeto.]

1. Having the quality of growing without life.

Creatures vegetative and growing have their feeds in themselves. Raleigh's History of the World.

2. Having the power to produce growth in plants.

The nature of plants doth consist in having a vegetative soul, by which they receive nourishment and growth, and are enabled to multiply their kind.
Wilkins.

Homer makes deities of the vegetative faculties and virtues of the field. Buccon on the Odyssey.

VEGETATIVE. n. f. [from vegeta- tive.] The quality of producing growth.

VEGETRE. adj. [vegetus, Latin.] Vigorous; active; spritely.

The soul was vegetre, quick and lively; full of the youthfulness and spriteliness of youth. South.

The faculties in age must be less vegetre and nimble than in youth. Wallis.

VEGETIVE. adj. [from vegeto, Latin.]

Vegetable; having the nature of plants.

Nor rent off, but cut off ripe bean with a knife,
For hindering it like of his vegetive life. Tupper.

VEGETIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

A vegetable.

Hence vegetes receive their fragrant birth,
And clothe the naked bosom of the earth. Sandys.

The tree still panted in th' unfinished part,
Not wholly vegetive; and heav'd her heart. Dryd.

VEHEMENT. n. f. [vehementia, Lat.]

VEHEMENT. n. f. [vehementia, Lat.]

1. Violence; force.

Universal hubbub wild,
Of stunning sounds and voices all confus'd,
Assaults his ear with loudest vehementia. Milton.

2. Ardour; mental violence; fervour.

Think ye are men; deem it not impossible for you to sit impartially your own hearts, whether in the force of reason, or vehementia of affection, which hath bred, and still doth feed
these opinions in you. Hooker.

The best persuasions
Fail not to use; and with what vehementia
Th' occasion shall instruct you. Shak. Henry VIII.

Would it apply well to the vehementia of your

VEI

affection, that I should win what you would enjoy? Shakespeare.

The extremity of the condition produced some earnestness and vehementia of expression more than ordinary. Clarendon.

This pure cause would kindle my reprobate spirits
To such a flame of sacred vehementia,
That dumb things would be mov'd to sympathize. Milton.

He hurries on his action with variety of events, and ends it in less compass than two months. This vehementia of his is most suitable to my temper. Dryden.

Marcus is over-warm; his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehementia of temper. Ad. Cam.

VEHEMENT. adj. [vehement, Fr. vehe- mentis, Lat.]

1. Violent; forcible.

A strong imagination hath more force upon light and subtle motions, than upon motions vehe- ment or ponderous. Bacon.

Gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time, without any change. Greus.

2. Ardent; eager; fervent.

By their vehement instigation,
In this just suit come I to move your grace. Shak.
I find

In all things else delight indeed; but such
As, us'd or not, works in the mind no change, Nor vehement desire. Milton's Paradise Lost.

VEHEMENTLY. adv. [from vehement.]

1. Forcibly.

The Christian religion inculcates kindness more vehemently, and forbids malice and hatred more strictly, than any religion did before. Tillotson.

VEHICLE. n. f. [vehiculum, Latin.]

1. That in which any thing is carried.

Evil spirits might very properly appear in veli- cles of flame, to terrify and surprise. Add. Guard.

2. That part of a medicine which serves to make the principal ingredient potable.

That the meat descends by one passage; the drink, or moistening vehicle, by another, is a popular tenet. Brown.

3. That by means of which any thing is conveyed.

The gaiety of a diverting word serves as a ve- hicle to convey the force and meaning of a thing.
L'Estrange.

To VEIL. v. n. [velo, Latin. See VELL.]

1. To cover, or any thing which conceals.

Her face was veil'd; yet, to my fancied sight,
Loves, sweetness, goodness in her person shin'd. Milton.

It became the Jewish fashion, when they went to pray, to veil their heads and faces. Boyle.

2. To cover; to invest.

I descry,
From yonder blaving cloud that veils the hill,
One of the heav'nly host. Milton.

3. To hide; to conceal.

Of darkness visible so much be lent,
As half to shew, half veil the deep intent. Pope.

VELL. n. f. [velum, Latin.]

1. A cover to conceal the face.

To feed his fiery lustful eye,
He snatch'd the veil that hung her face before. Spenser.

The Paphian queen from that fierce battle borne,
With gore'd hand, and veil so rudely torn,
Like terror did among the immortals breed. Wallis.

The famous painter could allow no place
For private sorrow in a prince's face:
Yet, that his piece might not exceed belief,
He cast a veil upon supposed grief. Wallis.

As veils transparent cover, but not hide,
Such metaphors appear when right apply'd. Whelan.

When through the phrase we plainly see the sense,
Truth with such obvious meanings will dispense.

Granville.

She accepts the hero, and the dame
Wraps in her veil, and frees from sense of shame.

Pope.

2. A cover; a disguise.

I will pluck the borrowed veil of modesty from the so seeming Mrs. Page; divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Adonis.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Knock on my heart; for thou hast skill to find
If it sound solid, or be fill'd with wind;
And thro' the veil of words thou view'st the naked mind.

Dryden.

The ill-natured man exposes those failings in human nature, which the other would cast a veil over.

Addison.

VEIN. n. f. [veine, French; vena, Lat.]

1. The veins are only a continuation of the extreme capillary arteries reflected back again towards the heart, and uniting their channels as they approach it, till at last they all form three large veins; the cava descendens, which brings the blood back from all the parts above the heart; the cava ascendens, which brings the blood from all the parts below the heart; and the porta, which carries the blood to the liver. The coats of the veins are the same with those of the arteries, only the muscular coat is as thin in all the veins as it is in the capillary arteries; the pressure of the blood against the sides of the veins being less than that against the sides of the arteries. In the veins there is no pulse, because the blood is thrown into them with a continued stream, and because it moves from a narrow channel to a wider. The capillary veins unite with one another, as the capillary arteries. In all the veins perpendicular to the horizon, excepting those of the uterus and of the porta, are small membranes or valves; like so many half thimbles stuck to the side of the veins, with their mouths towards the heart. In the motion of the blood towards the heart, they are pressed close to the side of the veins;
but if blood should fall it must fill the valves; and they being distended, stop up the channel, so that no blood can repass them.

Quincy.

When I did first impart my love to you,
I freely told you all the wealth I had Ran in my veins; I was a gentleman.

Shakespeare.

Horror chill
Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd.

Milton.

2. Hollow; cavity.

Found where casual fire
Had wasted woods, on mountain, or in vale,
Down to the veins of earth.

Milton's Par. Lost.

Let the glass of the prism be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plane, and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from sand-holes.

Newt. Opt.

3. Course of metal in the mine.

There is a vein for the silver.

Job, xviii. 1.

Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth
Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone.

Milton.

It is in men as in soils, where sometimes there is a vein of gold which the owner knows not of.

Swift's Thoughts.

4. Tendency or turn of the mind or genius.

Invoke the muses, and improve my vein.

Waller.

We ought to attempt no more than what is in the compass of our genius, and according to our virtue.

Dryden.

5. Favourable moment; time when any inclination is predominant.

Artisans have not only their growths and per-fections, but likewise their veins and times.

Wotton's Architecture.

6. Humour; temper.

I put your grace in mind
Of what you promis'd me.

—I am not in the giving vein to-day. Shak. R. III.

Certainly he that hath a satirical vein, must maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need to be afraid of others.

Bacon.

They among themselves in pleasant vein
Stood scoffing.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Speak 't thou in earnest or in jesting vein?

Dryden.

The earl struck the usurer upon the right vein.

L'Estrange.

7. Continued disposition.

The vein I have had of running into speculations of this kind, upon a greater scene of trade, has cost me this present service.

Temple.

8. Current; continued production.

Has can open a vein of true and noble thinking.

Swift.

9. Strain; quality.

My usual vein.

Ohlham.

10. Streak; variegation: as, the veins of the marble.

VEINED. } adj. [veineux, French; from VEINY. } vein.]

1. Full of veins.

2. Streaked; variegated.

The root of an old white thorn will make very fine boxes and combs, and many of them are very finely veined.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

Effulgent, hence the veiny marble shines.

Thomson.

VEILETTY. n. f. [veiletté, Fr. veilettas, from velle, Latin.]

Veilety is the school-term used to signify the lowest degree of desire.

Locke.

The wishing of a thing is not properly the wishing of it; but it is that which is called by the schools an imperfect veilety, and imports no more than an idle, unoperative complacency in, and desire of the end, without any consideration of the means.

South.

To VELLICATE. v. a. [vellico, Latin.]

To twitch; to pluck; to act by stimulation.

Those smells are all strong, and do pull and vellicate the sense.

Bacon.

Convulsions arising from something vellicating a nerve in its extremity, are not very dangerous.

Arbuthnot.

VELLICATION. n. f. [vellicatio, Latin.]

Twitching; stimulation.

All purges have a kind of twitching and vellication, besides the griping, which cometh of wind.

Bacon.

There must be a particular motion and vellication impress upon the nerves, else the sensation of heat will not be produced.

Watts on the Mind.

VELLUM. n. f. [velum, French; velamen,
Latin; rather velulinum, low Latin.]

The skin of a calf dressed for the writer.

The skull was very thin, yielding to the least pressure of my finger, as a piece of vellum.

VELOCITY. n. f. [velocité, Fr. velocitas,
Lat.] Speed; swiftness; quick motion.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are now, at the same distances from the sun; or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power, been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities;
they would not have revolved in concentric circles,

but moved in hyperbolas, or parabolas, or in ellipses, very eccentric.

Bentley's Sermons.

VELVET. n. f. [veluto, Ital. velles, Lat.
velours, Fr.] Silk with a short fur or pile upon it.

Clad in white velvet all their troop they led.

With each an osken chapter on his head. Dryden.

The different rapping the superficial parts of b-dies, as of velvet, watered silk, we think probably is nothing but the different refraction of their insensible parts.

Locke.

VELVET. adj.

1. Made of velvet.

This was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

2. Soft; delicate.

Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find.

Poor dear, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
As wordlings do, giving thy sum of more
To that which had too much. Then bring alone, Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends;

'Tis right, quoth he: thus misery doth part
The flux of company.

Shakespeare's

Such blessings nature pours,
O'er-stock'd mankind enjoy but half her stores;

In distant wilds, by human eyes unseen,
She sows her flowers, and spreads her velvet green.

Young.

To VELVET. v. n. To paint velvet.

Verditure, ground with a weak gum arabic water, is the palest green that is, but good to velvet upon black in any drapery. Teakman on Drawing.

VELURE. n. f. [velours, Fr.] Velvet. An old word.

His horse with one girth, six times pieced, and a woman's crupper of velure, pieced with patchwork.

Shakespeare's

VENAL. adj. [venal, Fr. venalis, Lat.]

1. Mercenary; prostitute.

This verse be thine, my friend, nor thou refuse
This, from no venal or ungrateful muse.

Pope.

2. [from vein.] Contained in the veins.

A technical word.

It is unreasonable to affirm, that the cool venal blood should be heated to high in the interval of two pulses.

Ray.

VENALITY. n. f. [venalité, Fr. from ve-nal.] Mercenariess; prostitution.

VENATIC. adj. [venaticus, Lat.] Used in hunting.

VENATION. n. f. [venatio, Latin.] The act or practice of hunting.

otherways than by sawing away of trees.

Brown.

To VEND. v. a. [vendra, French; vendo,
Latin.] To sell; to offer to sale.

He had a great parcel of glasses packed up, which not having the occasion he expected to vend, and make use of, lay by him.

Boyle.

VERDEZ. n. f. [from vend.] One to whom any thing is sold.

If a vicar sows his glebe, or if he sells his corn, and the verdes cuts it, he must pay the title to the parish.

Hyde.

VELNDER. n. f. [vendeur, Fr. from vend.]
A seller.

Where the consumption of commodity is, the venders eat themselves.

Grant.

Those make the most noise who have the least to sell, which is very observable in the venders of card matches.

Addison.

VENDIBLE. adj. [vendibilis, Lat.] Saleable; marketable.

Silence only is commendable
In a neat's tongue dried, and a maid not vendible.

Shakespeare's

This so profitable and vendible a merchandize riseth not to a proportionable enhancement with other less beneficial commodities.

Cancer.

Tha.

The ignorant mine-man, aiming only at the obtaining a quantity of such a metal as may be ven-dible under such a determinate name, has neither the design nor skill to make nice separations of the heterogeneous bodies.

VENDIBLENESS. n. f. [from vendible.] The state of being saleable.

VENDIBLY. adv. [from vendible.] In a saleable manner.

VENDITATION. n. f. [venditatio, from vendito, Lat.] Boastful display.

Some, by a cunning protestation against all reading, as a vindication of their own natural, think to divert the faculty of their readers from themselves, and cool the heat of their own fox-like thirsts, when yet they are so rank as a man may find whole books getteth turned from one author. B. Jonson.

VINDITION. n. f. [vendition, Fr. venditio, Latin] Sale; the act of selling.

VENER. v. a. [among cabinet makers] To make a kind of marquetry or inlaid work, whereby several thin slices of fine woods of different sorts are fastened or glued on a ground of some common wood.

VENEFICE. n. f. [veneficium, Latin.] The practice of poisoning.

VENEFICIAL. adj. [from veneficium, Latin.] Acting by poison; bewitching.

The magical virtues of mistletoe, and conceived either unto a venefic intention, seemeth a Pagan and heathen dived from the ancient Druides.

VENEFICIOUSLY. adv. [from veneficium, Latin.] By poison or witchcraft.

Let witches should draw or prick their names therein, and veneficiously mischief their persons, they make the fool.

VENEMOUS. adj. [from venen, French.] Poisonous. Commonly, though not better, venomous.

The barbarians saw the venemous least hang on his hand.

TO VENERATE. v. a. [venere, Latin.] To poison; to infect with poison.

These miasms entering the body, are not so enrag'd as to venenate the entire mass of blood in an instant.

By giving this in fevers after calcination, whereby the venenate parts are carried off.

VENENATION. n. f. [from venenatio] Poison; venom.

This operation shoot from the eye; and this was his first and only operation.

VERGE. n. f. [verge, Fr. virga, Latin.] 1. A rod, or something in form of a rod, carried as an emblem of authority. The mace of a dean.

Suppose him now a dean compleat, Devoutlyolling in his seat,
The silver verge, with decent pride,
Stuck underneath his cushion side. Swift.

2. [Verge, Latin.] The brink; the edge; the utmost border.

Would the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red hot steel to sear me to the brain! Shak.

I say, and will in battle prove,
Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge
That ever was survey'd by English eye. Shaksp.

You are old
Nature in you stands on the very verge
Of her confine. Shakspere's King Lear.

Serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud,
Lest it again dissolve, and show'r the earth. Milt.

Let fortune empty her whole quiver on me,
I have a soul, that, like an ample shield,
Can take in all, and verge enough for more. Dryden.

Every thing great, within the verge of nature, or out of it, has a proper part assigned it in this poem. Addison.

Then let him chuse a damsel young and fair,
To bless his age, and bring a worthy heir
To sooth his care, and free from noise and strife, Conduct him gently to the verge of life. Pope.

3. In law.

Verge is the compass about the king's court, bounding the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the king's household, and of the coroner of the king's house, and which seems to have been 12 miles round. Verge hath also another signification, and is used for a stick, or rod, whereby one is admitted tenant, and, holding it in his hand, sweareth fealty to the lord of the manor; who, for that reason, is called tenant by the verge. Cowell.

Fear not; whom we raise,
We will make fast within a hallow'd verge. Shak.

TO VERGE. v. n. [vergo, Latin.] To tend; to bend downwards.

They serve indifferently for vowels in respect of the aperture, and for consonants in respect of the penicillate; and so much the more verging either way, according to the respective occasions. Holder.

The nearer I find myself verging to that period of life which is to be labour and sorrow, the more I prop myself upon those few supports that are left. Swift.

Such are indicated, when the juices of a human body verge to putrefaction. Debutnot.

Man,
Perhaps, acts second to some sphere unknown:
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal:
'Tis but a part we see, and not the whole. Pope.

VERGER. n. f. [from verge.] He that carries the mace before the dean.

I can tip the verger with half a crown, and get into the best seat. Farquhar.

VERIDICAL. adj. [veridicus, Lat.] Telling truth. Dictionary.

VERIFICATION. n. f. [from verify.] Confirmation by argument or evidence.

In verification of this we will mention a phenomenon of our engine. Boyle.

VERIFIER. n. f. [from verify.] One who assures a thing to be true.

TO VERIFY. v. a. [verifier, French.] To justify against charge of falsehood; to confirm; to prove true.

What seemeth to have been uttered concerning sermons, and their efficacy or necessity, in regard of divine matter, must consequently be verified in sundry other kinds of teaching, if the matter be the same in all. Hooker.

This is verified by a number of examples, that whatsoever is gained by an abusive treaty ought to be restored. Bacon.

So shalt thou best fulfil, best verify
The prophets old, who sung thy endless reign. Milton.

So spake this oracle, then verified,
When Jesus, son of Mary, second Eve,
Saw Satan fall. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Though you may mistake a year;
Though your prognosticks run too fast,
They must be verified at last. Swift.

Spain shall have three kings; which is now wonderfully verified; for besides the king of Portugal, there are now two rivals for Spain. Swift.

VERILY. adv. [from very.]

1. In truth; certainly.
Verily 'tis better to be lowly born,
Than to be peck'd up in a glut'ring gale. Shak.

2. With great confidence.

It was verily thought, that had it not been for four great disfavours of that voyage, the enterprise had succeeded. Bacon.

By repealing the sacramental test, we are verily persuaded the consequence will be an entire alteration of religion among us. Swift on the Sacramental Test.

VERISIMILAR. } adj. [verisimilis, Lat.]

VERISIMILIOUS. } Probable; likely.

Many credulous doctrines of pontificians are, in our days, wholly supported by verisimilious and probable reasons. White.

VERISIMILITUDE. } n. f. [verisimilitudo, Lat.]

VERISIMILITY. } Probability; likelihood; resemblance of truth.

Touching the verisimilitude or probable truth of this relation, several reasons seem to overthrow it. Brown.

A noble nation, upon whom if not such verities, at least such verisimilitudes of fortitude were placed. Brown.

Verisimilitude and opinion are an easy purchase; but true knowledge is dear and difficult. Life a point, it requires an acuteness to its discovery; while verisimilitude, like the expanded superficies, is obvious, sensible, and affords a large and easy field for loose enquiry. Glauville.

The plot, the wit, the characters, the passions, are exalted as high as the imagination of the poet can carry them, with proportion to verisimilitude. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

Though Horace gives permission to painters and poets to dare every thing, yet he encourages neither to make things out of nature and verisimilitude. Dryden.

VERITABLE. adj. [veritable, French.] True; agreeable to fact.

Indeed! is 't true?
—Most veritable; therefore look to 't well. Shakspere.

The preface of the year succeeding, made from insects in oak apples, is I doubt too indistinct, nor veritable from event. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VERITABLY. adv. [from veritable.] In a true manner.

VERITY. n. f. [verité, French; veritas, Latin.]

1. Truth; consonance to the reality of things.

If any refuse to believe us disputing for the verity of religion established, let them believe God himself thus miraculously working for it. Hooker.

I saw their weapons drawn; there was a noise;
That's verity. Shakspere's Tempest.

The precipitancy of disputation, and the still and noise of passions that usually attend it, must needs be prejudicial to verity; its calm insinuations can no more be heard in such a bustle, than a whistle among a crowd of sailors in a storm. Glauville.

It is a proposition of eternal verity, that none can govern while he is despised. We may as well imagine that there may be a king without majesty, a supreme without sovereignty. South.

2. A true assertion; a true tenet.

And that age, which my grey hairs make seem more than it is, hath not diminished in me the power to protect an undeniable verity. Sidney.

Wherefore should any man think, but that reading itself is one of the ordinary means, whereby it pleaseth God, of his gracious goodness, to instil that celestial verity, which being but so received, is nevertheless effectual to save souls? Hooker.

If there come truth from them,
—Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well? Shakspere.

Must virtue be preserved by a lie?
Virtue and truth do ever best agree;

By this it seems to be a verity,
Since the effects in good and virtuous be. Davies.

3. Moral truth; agreement of the words with the thoughts.

VERJUICE. n. f. [verjus, Fr.] Acid liquor expressed from crab-apples. It is vulgarly pronounced varge.

Hang a dog upon a crab-tree, and he'll never love verjuice. L'Estrange.

The barley-pudding comes in place:
Then bids fall on; himself, for saving charges,
A peck'd sic'd onion eats, and tipples verjuice. Dryden.

The native verjuice of the crab, deriv'd
Through th' ivy'd grass, a grateful mixture forms
Of tart and sweet. Philips.

VERMICE'LLI. n. f. [Italian.] A paste rolled and broken in the form of worms.

With oysters, eggs, and vermicelli,
She let him almost burst his belly. Petr.

VERMI'CLAR. adj. [vermiculus, Lat.] Acting like a worm; continued from one part to another of the same body.

By the vermicular motion of the intestines, the grosser parts are derived downwards, while the finer are squeezed into the narrow orifices of the lactical vessels. Cheyne.

To VERMI'CLATE. v. a. [vermiculatus, Latin.] To inlay; to work in chequer work, or pieces of divers colours. Bailey.

VERMICULA'TION. n. f. [from vermiculatus.] Continuation of motion from one part to another.

My heart moves naturally by the motion of palpitation; my guts by the motion of vermiculation. Hale.

VERMICULE. n. f. [vermiculus, vermis, Latin.] A little grub, worm.

I saw the shining oak-ball ichneumon strike its terebra into an oak-apple, to lay its eggs therein; and hence are many vermicules seen towards the outside of these apples. Derham.

VERMI'CULOS. adj. [vermiculosus, Lat.] Full of grubs; resembling grubs.

VERMI'FORM. adj. [vermiforme, French; vermis and forma, Latin.] Having the shape of a worm.

2. Factitious or native cinnabar; sulphur mixed with mercury. This is the usual, though not primitive, signification.

The imperfect metals are subject to rust, except mercury, which is made into vermilion by solution or calcination. Baron.

The fairest and most principal red is vermilion, called in Latin minium. It is a poison, and found where great store of quicksilver is. Ptacbam.

3. Any beautiful red colour.

How the red roses flush up in her cheeks,
And the pure snow with goodly vermil stain,
Like crimson dy'd in grain! Spenser.

There grew a goodly tree him fair beside,
Loaded with fruit and apples rosy red,
As they in pure vermilion had been dy'd,
Whereof great virtues over all were read. Spenser.

Simple colours are strong and sensible, though they are clear as vermillin. Dryden's Dufesnoy.

To VERMI'LION. v. a. [from the noun.] To die red.

A sprightly red vermillions all her face,
And her even languish with unusual grace. Granv.

VERMIN. n. f. [vermin, French; vermis, Latin.]

1. Any noxious animal. Used commonly for small creatures.

What is your vermin?
—How to prevent the fiend, and to kill vermin. Shakspere.

The head of a wolf, dried and hanged up in a dove-house, will scare away vermin, such as weasels and polecats. Racon.

An idle person only lives to spend his time, and eat the fruits of the earth, like a vermin or a wolf. Taylor.

A weasel taken in a trap was charged with misdemeanours, and the poor vermin stood much upon her innocence. L'Estrange.

Great injuries these vermin, mice and rats, do in the field. Mortimer's Husbandry.

He that has so little wit
To nourish vermin, may be bit. Swift.

2. It is used in contempt of human beings.

The stars determine
You are my prisoners, base vermin. Hadibras.

To VERMINATE. v. n. [from vermin.] To breed vermin.

VERMINA'TION. n. f. [from verminate.] Generation of vermin.

Redi discarding anomalous generation, tried experiments relating to the vermination of serpents and fish. Derham.

VERMINOUS. adj. [from vermin.] Tending to vermin; disposed to breed vermin.

A wasting of children's flesh depends upon some obstruct of the entrails, or verminous disposition of the body. Harvey.

VERMI'PAROUS. adj. [vermis and pario, Latin.] Producing worms.

Hereby they confound the generation of vermiparous animals with oviparous. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VERNA'CLAR. adj. [vernaculus, Lat.] Native; of one's own country.

London weekly bills number deep in consumptions; the same likewise proving inseparable accidents to most other diseases; which instances do evidently bring a consumption under the notion of a vernacular disease to England. Harvey.

The histories of all our former wars are transmitted to us in our vernacular idiom. I do not find in any of our chronicles, that Edward the third ever reconnoitred the enemy, though he often discovered the posture of the French, and as often vanquished them. Addison.

VERNAL. adj. [vernus, Latin.] Belonging to the spring.

With the year
Seasons return; but not to me returns
Or sight of vernal bloom, or summer's rose. Milt.

VERNANT. adj. [vernans, Latin.] Flourishing as in the spring.

Life had the spring
Perpetual smil'd on earth, with vernant flow'rs,
Equal in day and night. Milton's Paradise Lost.

VERNI'LI. n. f. [verna, Latin.] Servile carriage; the submissive fawning behaviour of a slave. Bailey.

VERSABI'LITY. n. f. [versabilis, Lat.]

The truth passes so slightly through men's imaginations, that they must use great subtilty to track its vestiges.

Harvey.

VE'STMENT. n. f. [vestimentum, Latin.] Garment; part of dress.

Were it not better that the love which men bear unto God should make the least things that are employed in his service amiable, than a their over-scrupulous dislike of so mean a thing as a vestment, should from the very service of God withdraw their hearts and affections?

Hanker.

Heaven then would seem thy image, and reflect Those sable vestments, and that bright aspect.

Waller.

VE'STRY. n. f. [vestiare, Fr. vestiarium, Latin.]

1. A room appendant to the church, in which the sacerdotal garments and consecrated things are reposit.

summon us to vestries.

Blount to Pope.

VE'STURE. n. f. [vesture, old Fr. vestura, Italian.]

1. Garment; robe.

Her breasts half hid, and half were laid to show;
Her envious vesture greedy sight repelling.

Fahfax.

What, weep you when you but behold
Our Caesar's vesture wounded?

Shak. Julius Caesar.

To bear my lady's train, lest the base earth
Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss,

Shakespeare.

Hete ruddy brass and gold resplendent blaz'd;
There polish'd chests embroider'd vestures grac'd.

Pope.

2. Dress; habit; external form.

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings;

But this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close us in, we cannot hear it.

Shak.

Rocks, precipices, and gulfs, apparel'd with a vesture of plants, would resemble mountains and valleys.

Bentley.

VETCH. n. f. [vicia, Latin.] A plant with a papilionaceous flower, producing a legume.

VE'TERAN. n. f. [veteranus, Latin.] An old soldier; a man long practised in any thing.

The Arians, for the credit of their faction, took the eldest, the best experienced, the most way, and the longest-practised veterans they had amongst them.

Hooker.

If king Charles II. had made war upon France, he might have conquered it by the many veterans
which had been inured to service in the civil wars.

Addison.

Ensigns that pierc'd the foe's remotest lines,
The hardy veterans with tears resign.

Addison.

We were forced to uncover, or be regarded as veterans in the beau monde.

Addison.

VE'TERAN. adj. Long practised in war; long experienced.

There was a mighty strong army of land forces,
to the number of fifty thousand veteran soldiers.

Bacon.

The British youth shall half thy wife command,
Thy temper'd ardour, and thy veteran skill.

Thomson.

VETERINARIAN. n. f. [veterinarius, Lat.] One skilled in the diseases of cattle.

That a horse has no gall, is not only swallowed by common farriers, but also received by good veterinarians, and some who have laudably discomfited upon horses.

Brown.

To VEX. v. a. [vexo, Latin.]

1. To plague; to torment; to harass.

Do you think

The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd?

Shaksp. Henry VIII.

Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes.

Shaksp. Lear.

When she pressed him daily, so that his soul was vexed unto death, he told her all his heart.

Judges, xvi. 16.

Still may the dog the wand'ring troops constrain
Of airy ghosts, and vex the guilty train!

Dryden.

You are the cause of all my care:
Your eyes ten thousand vexations dart;
Ten thousand torments vex my heart;

I love, and I despair.

Prior.

2. To disturb; to disquiet.

Alack, tis he; why, he was met ev'n now,
As mad as the vex sea, singing aloud.

Shaksp.

Rang'd on the banks, beneath our equal oars,
White curl the waves, and the vex'd ocean roars.

Pope.

3. To trouble with slight provocations.

To VEX. v. n. To fret; to be on tenter's; to be uneasy.

Ulysses gave good care, and fed
And drunk his wine, and vex, and ravished
His food for mere vexation.

Grayman.

VEXATION. n. f. [from vex.]

1. The act of troubling.

O that husband,
My supreme crown of grief, and those repeated
vexations of it!

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

2. The state of being troubled; uneasiness; sorrow.

Vexation almost stops my breath,
That hundred friends greet in the hour of death.

Shakespeare.

Passions too violent, instead of heightening our pleasures, afford us nothing but vexation and pain.

Temple.

3. The cause of trouble or uneasiness.

Your children were vexation to your youth:
But mine shall be a comfort to your age.

Shaksp.

4. An act of harassing by law.

Albeit the party grieved thereby may have some reason to complain of an untrue charge, yet may he not well call it an unjust vexation.

Bacon.

5. A slight teasing trouble.

VEXATIOUS. adj. [from vexation.]

1. Afflictive; troublesome; causing trouble.

Consider him maintaining his usurped title by continual vexatious wars against the kings of Judah.

Soud.

Vexatious thought still found my flying mind,
Nor bound by limits, nor to place confin'd;

Haunted my nights, and terrified my days;
Strik'd through my gardens, and pursued my ways;

Nor shut from artful bow'r, nor lost in winding maze.

Prior.

2. Full of trouble; full of uneasiness.

He leads a vexatious life, who in his noblest actions is so gored with scruples, that he dares not make a step without the authority of another.

Digby.

3. Teasing; slightly troublesome.

VEXATIOUSLY. adv. [from vexatious.]

Troublesomely; uneasily.

VEXATIOUSNESS. n. f. [from vexatious.]

Troublesomeness; uneasiness.

VEX'ER. n. f. [from vex.] He who vexes.

U'GILLY

UGLYLY. adv. [from ugly.] Filthily; with deformity; in such a manner as to raise dislike.

UGLINESS. n. f. [from ugly.]

1. Deformity; contrariety to beauty.

All that else seem'd fair and fresh in sight,
Was turned now to dreadful ugliness. Spenser.
She takes her topicks from the advantages of old age and ugliness. Dryden.

2. Turpitude; loathsomeness; moral depravity.

Their dull ribaldry cannot but be very nauseous and offensive to any one, who does not, for the sake of the sin itself, pardon the ugliness of its circumstances. South.

UGLY. adj. [This word was anciently written ugly; whence Mr. Dier ingeniously deduces it from ouphlike; that is, like an ouph, elf, or goblin. In Saxon, oga is terror; and in Gothick ogan is to fear.] Deformed; offensive to the sight; contrary to beautiful; hateful.

If Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly. Shakespeare.

O, I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams. Shakep.
Was this the cottage, and the safe abode
Thou told'st me of? What grim aspects are these,
These ugly-headed monsters? Milton.

VIAL. n. f. [φιάλη.] A small bottle.

You gods! look down,
And from your sacred vials pour your grace
Upon my daughter's head. Shakespeare.

Take thou this vial, being then in bed,
And this distilled liquor drink thou off. Shakep.
Another lamp burnt in an old marble sepulchre belonging to some of the antient Romans inclosed in a glass vial. Wilkins.

I plac'd a thin vial, well stopp'd up, within the smoke of the vapour, but nothing followed. Addison.

Chemical waters, that are each transparent, when separate, ferment into a thick troubled liquor, when mixed in the same vial. Addison.

To VIAL. v. a. To inclose in a vial.

This she with precious vial'd liquors heats;
For which the shepherds, at the festivals,
Carol her goodness loud in rustick lays. Milton.

VIAND. n. f. [viande, Fr. vivanda, Italian.] Food; meat dressed.

The belly only like a gulf remain'd,
I th' midst of the body idle and unactive,
Still cupboarding the viand. Shakespeare.

No matter, since They've left their viands behind, for we have stomachs.

Will't please you taste of what is here? Shakep.
These are not fruits forbidden; no interdikt
Defends the touching of these viands pure;
Their taste no knowledge works, at least of evil. Milton.

From some sorts of food less pleasant to the taste, persons in health, and in no necessity of using such viands, had better to abstain. Ray.

The tables in fair order spread;
Viands of various kinds allure the taste,
Of choicest sort and savour; rich repast! Pope.

VIATICUM. n. f. [Latin.]

1. Provision for a journey.
2. The last rites used to prepare the passing soul for its departure.

To VIBRATE. v. a. [vibro, Latin.]

1. To brandish; to move to and fro with quick motion.

2. To make to quiver.
Breath vocalized, that is, vibrated or undulated, may differently affect the lips, and impress a swift tremulous motion, which breath passing smooth doth not. Holder.

To VIBRATE. v. a.

1. To play up and down, or to and fro.

The air, compressed by the fall and weight of the quicksilver, would repel it a little upwards, and make it vibrate a little up and down. Boyle.

Do not all fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light, and shine? And is not this emission performed by the vibrating motions of their parts? Newton.

2. To quiver.

The whisper that to greatness still too near,
Perhaps, yet vibrates on his sovereign's ear. Pope.

VIBRATION. n. f. [from vibro, Latin.]

The act of moving, or state of being moved with quick reciprocations, or returns; the act of quivering.

It sparkled like the coal upon the altar, with the fervours of piety, the heats of devotion, and the falsies and vibrations of an harmless activity. South.

Do not the rays of light, in falling upon the bottom of the eye, excite vibrations in the tunica retina? which vibrations being propagated along the solid fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, cause the sense of seeing. Newton.

Mild vibrations sooth the parted soul,
New to the dawning of celestial day. Thomson.

VICAR. n. f. [vicarius, Latin.]

1. The incumbent of an appropriated or impropriated benefice.

Procure the vicar
To stay for me at church, 'twixt twelve and one,
To give our hearts united ceremony. Shakespeare.

Yours is the prize;
The vicar my defeat, and all the village see. Dryd.

A landed youth, whom his mother would never suffer to look into a book for fear of spolling his eyes, upon hearing the clergy decied, what a contempt must he entertain, not only for his vicar at home, but for the whole order! Swift.

2. One who performs the functions of another; a substitute.

An archbishop may not only excommunicate and interdikt his suffragans, but his vicar-general may do the same. Ayliffe.

VICARAGE. n. f. [from vicar.] The benefice of a vicar.

This gentleman lived in his vicarage to a good old age, and having never deserted his flock, died vicar of Bray. Swift.

VICARIOUS. adj. [vicarius, Latin.] Deputed; delegated; acting in the place of another.

The soul in the body is but a subordinate efficient, and vicarious and instrumental in the hands of the Almighty, being but his substitute in this regiment of the body. Hale.

What can be more unnatural, than for a man to rebel against the vicarious power of God in his soul? Norris.

VICARSHIP. n. f. [from vicar.] The office of a vicar.

VICE. n. f. [vitium, Latin.]

1. The course of action opposite to virtue; depravity of manners; inordinate
life.

No spirit more gross to love
Vice for itself. Milton.

The foundation of error will lie in wrong measures of probability; as the foundation of vice in wrong measures of good. Locke.

2. A fault; an offence. It is generally used for an habitual fault, not for a single enormity.

No vice, so simple, but assumes
Some mark of virtue on its outward parts. Shak.

Yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before;
More suffer by him that shall succeed. Shakespeare.

Where the excess and defect do make vices, or such things as ought not to be, there the mediocrity must denote something that ought to be, and consequently must be a virtue. Wilkins.

Ungovern'd appetite, a brutish vice. Milton.
I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.

Proud views and vain desires in our worldly employments, are as truly vices and corruptions, as hypocrisy in prayer, or vanity in alms. Lew.

3. The fool, or punchinello of old shows.

I'll be with you again
In a trice, like to the old vice,
Your need to sustain;

Who with dagger of lath, in his rage and his wrath,
Cries, Ah, ha! to the devil. Shakep.
His face made of bias, like a vice in a game. Tupper.

4. [Vij, Dutch.] A kind of small iron press with screws, used by workmen.

He found that marbles taught him percussion;
bottle-screws, the vices; whirligigs, the axis in pe-ritrochio. Arbutnot and Pope.

5. Gripe; grasp.

If I but fit him once; if he come but within my vice. Shakespeare.

6. [Vice, Latin.] It is used in composition for one, qui vicem gerit, who performs, in his stead, the office of a superiour, or who has the second rank in command; as, a vicerey, vicechancellor.

To VICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To draw by a kind of violence.

With all confidence he swears,
As he had seen 't, or been an instrument
To vice you to 't, that you have touch'd his queen Forbiddenly. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

VICEDMIRAL. n. f. [vice and admiral.]

1. The second commander of a fleet.

The foremost of the fleet was the admiral; the rear admiral was Cara Mahometes, an arch-pirate.
The viceadmiral in the middle of the fleet, with a great squadron of galleys, struck sail directly. Knaula.

2. A naval officer of the second rank.

VICEDMIRALTY. n. f. [from viceadmiral.] The office of a viceadmiral.

The viceadmiralty is exercised by Mr. Treva-nion. Carew.

VICAGENT. n. f. [vice and agent.] One who acts in the place of another.

A vassal Satan hath made his vicagent, to cross
whate'er the faithful ought to do. Hooker.

VICCHANCELLOR. n. f. [vicerechancellius, Latin.] The second magistrate of the universities.

VICED. adj. [from vice.] Vitious; corrupt. Not used.

Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakespeare.

VICEGERENCY. n. f. [from vicegerent.]
The office of a vicegerent; lieutenant;
deputed power.

The authority of conscience stands founded upon its vicegerency and deputation under God. South.

VICEGERENT. n. f. [vicem gerens, Lat.]
A lieutenant; one who is intrusted with the power of the superiour, by whom he is deputed.

All precepts concerning kings are comprehended in these: remember thou art a man; remember thou art God's vicegerent. Bacon.

Employ it in unassigned piety towards God; in unshaken duty to his vicegerent; in hearty obedience to his church. Spratt.

Great Father of the gods, when for our crimes
Thou send'st some heavy judgment on the times;
Some tyrant king, the terror of his age,
The type and true vicegerent of thy rage,
Thus punish. Dryden.

VICEGERENT.

VICERAGENT. adj. [vicegerens, Latin.] Having a delegated power; acting by substitution.

Whom send I to judge thee? Whom but thee, Viceroy Son! To thee I have transferr'd All judgment, whether in heav'n, or earth, or hell. Milton.

VICENARY. adj. [vicenarius, Latin.] Belonging to twenty. Bailey.

VICEROY. n. s. [viceroi, French.] He who governs in place of the king with regal authority.

Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd, Deduct so much from that prerogative, As to be call'd but viceroy of the whole? Shaksp.

Mendoza, viceroy of Peru, was wont to say, that the government of Peru was the best place the king of Spain gave, save that it was somewhat too near Madrid. Bacon.

We are so far from having a king, that even the viceroy is generally absent four fifths of his time. Swift.

VICEROYALTY. n. s. [from viceroy.] Dignity of a viceroy.

These parts furnish out viceroyalties for the grandees, but in war are incumbences to the kingdom. Addison.

VICETY. n. s. [Of this word I know not well the meaning or original: a nice thing is now called in vulgar language, point vice, from the French point de vue, or point de vice; whence the barbarous word vicety may be derived.] Nicety; exactness. A word not used.

Here is to the fruit of Pem, Grafted upon Stub his stem; With the peakish nicety, And old Sherwood's victory. Ben Jonson.

VICINAGE. n. s. [vicinia, Lat.] Neighbourhood; places adjoining.

VICINAL. adj. [vicinus, Lat.] Near; VICINE. } neighbouring.

Opening other vicine passages might obliterate any track; as the making of one hole in the yielding mud defaces the print of another near it. Glanville.

VICINITY. n. s. [vicinus, Latin.]

1. Nearness; state of being near.

The position of things is such, that there is a vicinity between agents and patients, that the one incessantly invades the other. Hale.

The abundance and vicinity of country seats. Swift.

2. Neighbourhood.

He shall find out and recall the wandering particles home, and fix them in their old vicinity. Rogers.

Gravity alone must have carried them downwards to the vicinity of the sun. Bentley.

VICIOUS. adj. [from vice.] See VITI-OUS. Devoted to vice; not addicted to virtue.

He heard this heavy curse, 'Servant of servants,' on his envious face. Milton.

VICISSITUDE. n. s. [vicissitudo, Latin.]

1. Regular change; return of the same things in the same succession.

It makes through heav'n Grateful vicissitud, like day and night. Milton.

The rays of light are alternately disposed to be reflected or refracted for many vicissitudes. Newton.

This succession of things upon the earth, is the result of the vicissitude of seasons, and is as constant as the cause of that vicissitude, the sun's declination. Woodward.

Revolution; change.

During the course of the war, did the vicissitudes of good and bad fortune affect us with humility and thankfulness? Atterbury.

Vice sweetens toil, however rude the found. All at her work the village maiden sings; Nor, as she turns the siddy wheel around, Revolves the said vicissitudes of things. Gifford.

VICONTIEL. In law, vicontiel rents are certain farms for which the sheriff pays a rent to the king, and makes what profit he can of them. Vicontiel writs are such writs as are triable in the county court, before the sheriff. Bailey.

VICTIM. n. s. [victima, Latin.]

1. A sacrifice; something slain for a sacrifice.

All that were authors of so black a deed, Be sacrific'd as victims to his ghost. Denham.

And on the victim pour the ruddy wine. Dryden.

Clitumnus' waves, for triumphs after war, The victim ox, and snowy sheep prepare. Addison.

2. Something destroyed.

Behold where age's wretched victim lies; See his head trembling, and his half-clos'd eyes. Prior.

VICTOR. n. s. [victor, Latin.]

1. Conqueror; vanquisher; he that gains the advantage in any contest. Victor is seldom used with a genitive; we say the conqueror of kingdoms, not the victor of kingdoms; and never but with regard to some single action or person: as we never say, Caesar was in general a great victor, but that he was victor at Pharsalia. We rarely say Alexander was victor of Darius, though we say he was victor at Arbela; but we never say he was victor of Persia.

This strange race more strange conceits did yield; Who victor seem'd, was to his ruin brought; Who seem'd o'erthrown, was mistress of the field. Sidney.

Some time the flood prevails, and then the wind, Both tugging to be victors; breast to breast, Yet neither conqueror, nor conquered. Shaksp.

Although the victor, we submit to Caesar. Shak.

Say where and when Their fight; what stroke shall bruise the victor's heel. Milton.

Our victor saw fangs and harps in Babylon, That pleas'd for well our victor's ear, declare That other Greece stem us these arts deriv'd. Milton.

Their hearts at last the vanquish'd re-assume, And now the victors fall. Denham.

In love, the victors from the vanquish'd fly; They fly that wound, and they pursue that die. Waller.

Fortune's unjust; the ruins oft the brave, And him who should be victor, makes the slave. Dryden.

Loose not a thought on me, I'm out of danger; Heaven will not leave me in the victor's hand. Addison.

2. Pope has used this word in a manner perhaps unauthorized.

There, victor of his health, his fortune, friends, And fame, this lord of useless thousands ends. Pope.

VICTORIOUS. adj. [victoriosus, French.]

1. Conquering; having obtained conquest; superior in contest.

Victory doth more often fall by error of the vanquish'd, than by the valour of the victorious. Hayward.

The Sun return'd victorious with his beams. Mil.

That happy sun, said he, will rise again, Who twice victorious did our navy see: And I alone must view him rise in vain, Without one ray of all his star for me. Dryden.

2. Producing conquest.

Sudden these honours shall be snatch'd away, And cur'd for ever this victorious day. Pope.

3. Betokening conquest.

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths; Our bruised armeth up for monuments. Shak.

VICTORIOUSLY. adv. [from victorious.] With conquest; successfully; triumphantly.

That grace will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, victoriously through all difficulties. Hammond.

VICTORIOUSNESS. n. s. [from victorious.] The state or quality of being victorious.

VICTORY. n. s. [victoria, Lat.] Conquest; success in contest; triumph.

At his nurse's tears He whin'd and roar'd away your victory, That pages blush'd at him. Shaksp.

Then to the heaven of heavens he shall ascend With victory, triumphing o'er his foes. Milton.

Obedience is a complicated act of virtue, and many graces are exercised in one act of obedience. It is an act of humility, of mortification, and self-denial, of charity to God, of care of the publick, of order and charity to ourselves. It is a great instance of a victory over the most refractory passions. Taylor.

VICTRESS. n. s. [from victor.] A female that conquers. Not used.

I'll lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed; And she shall be sole victress, Caesar's Caesar. Shak.

VICTUAL. n. s. [victualles, Fr. vitt- VICTUALS. } naglia, Italian.]

Provision of food; stores for the support of life; meat; sustenance. Chapman has written it as it is colloquially pronounced.

He landed in these islands, to furnish himself with victuals and fresh water. Abbot's Description of the World.

You had musty victuals, and he hath help to eat it: he hath an excellent stomach. Shaksp.

A huge great flagon full I bore, And, in a good large knapsack, victuals store. Chapman.

He was not able to keep that place three days for lack of victual. Kneller.

They, unprovided of tackling and victuals, are forced to sea by a storm. King Charles.

To VICTUAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To store with provision for food.

Talbot, farewell; I must go victual Orleans forthwith. Shaksp.

VICTUALLER. n. s. [from victual.]

1. One who provides victuals.

They planted their artillery against the haven, to impeach supply of victuals; yet the English victuallers succeeded not to bring all things necessary. Hayward.

Their conquest half is to the victualler due. King.

You vie happiness in a thousand easy and sweet diversions. Bacon.

2. In this passage the meaning seems to be, to add; to accumulate.

She hung about my neck, and kiss on kiss She vied so fast, That in a twink she won me to her love. Shaksp.

To VIE. v. n. To contest; to contend; to strive for superiority.

In a trading nation, the younger sort may be placed in such a way of life, as may enable them to vie with the best of their family. Addison.

The wool, when shaded with Ancona's dye, May with the proudest Tyrian purple vie. Addison.

Now voices over voices rise;

While each to be the loudest vies. Swift.

To VIEW. v. a. [veu, Fr. from veoir, or voir.]

1. To survey; to look on by way of examination.

Go, and view the country. Joshua, vii. 2.

'Th' almighty Father bent down his eye,

His own works and their works at once to view. Milton.

View not this spire by measures given

To build it rais'd by common hands. Prior.

Whence'er we view some well-proportion'd dome,

No single parts unequally surprize;

All come united to th' admiring eyes. Pope.

2. To see; to perceive by the eye.

They here with eyes agast

View'd first their lamentable lot. Milton.

No more I hear, no more I view;

The phantom flies me, as unkind as you. Pope.

VIEW. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Prospect.

You should tread a course

Pretty, and full of views; yea, haply, near

The residence of Pothumus. Shakspeare. Cymbeline.

Vast and indefinite views, which drown all apprehensions of the uttermost objects, are condemned by good authors. Wotton.

The walls of Pluto's palace are in view. Dryd.

Cut wide views through mountains to the plain,

You'll wish your hill a shelter'd hill again. Pope.

2. Sight; power of beholding.

I go, to take far ever from your view,

Both the lov'd object, and the hated too. Dryden.

These things duly weigh'd, will give us a clear view into the state of human liberty. Locke.

Instruct me other joys to prize,

With other beauties charm my partial eyes;

Full in my view set all the bright abode,

And make my soul quit Abelard for God. Pope.

3. Intellectual sight; mental ken.

Some safer resolution I've in view. Milton.

4. Act of seeing.

'Th' unexpected sound

Of dogs and men, his wakeful ear does wound;

Rous'd with the noise, he scarce believes his ear,

Willing to think th' illusions of his fear

Had giv'n this false alarm; but straight his view

Confirms that more than all he fears is true. Denb.

5. Sight; eye.

Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote. Locke.

6. Survey; examination by the eye.

Time never will renew,

While we too far the pleasing path pursue,

Surveying nature with too nice a view. Dryden.

7. Intellectual survey.

If the mind has made this inference by finding out the intermediate ideas, and taking a view of the connection of them, it has proceeded rationally. Locke.

8. Space that may be taken in by the eye; reach of sight.

The fame through all the neighb'ring nations flow,

When now the Trojan navy was in view. Dryden.

9. Appearance; show.

In that accomplish'd mind,

Help'd by the night, new graces find;

Which, by the splendour of her view

Dazzled, before we never knew. Waller.

10. Display; exhibition to the sight or mind.

To give a sight view of this mistaken part of liberty, would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wise considerations than a wife man. Locke.

Vol. II.

11. Prospect of interest.

No man sets himself about any thing, but upon some view or other, which serves him for a reason. Locke.

12. Intention; design.

He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees to the state of things at home, with that view he makes all his reflections. Asterbury.

With a view to commerce, in returning, from his expedition against the Parthians, he passed through Egypt. Arbutnot.

Fisher, the Jesuit, in the year 1626, seconded the cardinal in the same plea, and upon the same view. Warton.

VIEWER. n. s. [from view.] One who views.

VIFWESS. adj. [from view.] Unseen; not discernible by the sight.

To be imprison'd in the viewless world,

And blown with restless violence about

The pendant world. Shakspeare.

Each star mysteriously was meant, not stood

There always, but drawn up to heav'n sometimes

Viewless. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Swift through the valves the visionary fair

Repos'd, and viewless mix'd with common air. Pope.

Light bounding from the earth, at once they rise;

Their feet half viewless quiver in the skies. Pope.

VIGESIMATION. n. s. [vigesimus, Latin.]

The act of putting to death every twenty-tieth man. Bailey.

VIGIL. n. s. [vigilia, Latin.]

1. Watch; devotions performed in the customary hours of rest.

So they in heaven their odes and vigils tun'd. Milton.

Shines where their vigils pale-eyed virgins

keep,

And pitying saints, whose statues learn to weep. Pope.

2. A fast kept before a holiday.

He that outlives this day, and sees old age,

Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours.

And say, To-morrow is St Crispian. Shakspeare.

And that, which on the Baptist's vigil finds

To nymphs and swans the vision of their friends. Harte.

3. Service used on the night before a holiday.

No altar is to be consecrated without reliques, which placed before the church-door, the vigils are to be celebrated that night before them. Stillingfleet.

The rivals call my muse another way,

To sing their vigils for th' ensuing day. Dryden.

4. Watch; forbearance of sleep.

Though Venus and her son should spare

Her rebel heart, and never teach her care;

Yet Hymen may perforce her vigils keep,

And for another's joy suspend her sleep. Waller.

Nothing wears out a fine face like the vigils of the card-table, and those cutting passions which attend them. Addison.

VIGILANCE. n. s. [vigilance, French;

VIGILANCY. n. s. [vigilantia, Latin.]

1. Forbearance of sleep.

Ulysses yielded unseasonably to sleep, and the strong passion for his country should have given him

vigilance. Broom.

2. Watchfulness; circumspection; incessant care.

Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,

Your deeds of war, and all our counsel die? Shak.

In this their military care, there were few remarkable occasions under the duke, saving his continual vigilancy, and voluntary hazard of his person. Wotton.

Of these the vigilance

I dread; and to elude, thus wrapp'd in mist

Of midnight vapour, glide obscure. Milton.

We are enabled to subdue all other creatures;

and use for our behoof the strength of the eye, the sagacity and vigilancy of the dog. Ray.

3. Guard; watch.

No post is free, no place,

That guard and most unusual vigilance

Does not attend my taking. Shakspeare. King Lear.

In at this gate none pass

The vigilance here plac'd, but such as come

Well known from heav'n. Milton.

VIGILANT. adj. [vigilans, Latin.]

Watchful; circumspect; diligent; attentive.

They have many prayers, but every of them, very short, as if they were darts thrown out with a kind of sudden quickness; lest that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, should be waited or dulled through continuance. Hooker.

Take your places, and be vigilant:

If any noise or soldier you perceive,

Let us have knowledge. Shakspeare.

The treasurer, as he was vigilant in such cases, had notice of the clerk's expiration so soon, that he procured the king to send a message to the maker of the rolls. Clarendon.

VIGILANTLY. adv. [from vigilant.]

Watchfully; attentively; circumspectly.

Thus in peace, either of the kings so vigilantly observed every motion of the others, as if they had lived upon the alarm. Huyward.

VIGOROUS. adj. [from vigor, Lat.]

Forcible; not weakened; full of strength and life.

Fam'd for his valour young;

At sea successful, vigorous and strong! Waller.

Their appetite is not dulled by being gratified,

but returns always fresh and vigorous. Asterbury.

Though the beginnings of confederacies have been always vigorous and successful, their progress has been generally feeble, and event unfortunate. Davenant.

VIGOROUSLY. adv. [from vigour.]

With force; forcibly; without weakness.

The prince had two giant sons;

With his one so vigorously he press'd,

And flew to home, they could not rise again. Dryd.

If the machine bright and vigorously, it is no matter by what means it was at first kindled. South.

This prince whose cause you espouse so vigorously, is the principal in the war, and you but a second. Swift.

VIGOROUSNESS. n. s. [from vigour.]

Force; strength.

He hath given excellent succour and vigorous-

ness to the sufferers, arming them with strange courage, heretofore fortitude, invincible resolution, and glorious patience. Taylor.

VIGOUR. n. s. [vigor, Latin.]

1. Force; strength.

Shame to be overcome,

Would utmost vigour raise, and rais'd unite. Milton.

Pernicious fire wither'd all their strength,

And of their wasted vigour left them drain'd. Milton.

The mind and spirit remains

Invincible, and vigour soon returns. Milton.

No deep within her gulf can hold

Immortal vigour. Milton.

The vigour of this arm was never vain:

Witness these heaps of slaughter. Dryden.

2. Mental force; intellectual ability.

3. Energy; efficacy.

In the fruitful earth

His beams, unsuffer'd else, their vigour find. Milton.

How does Cæsar's all his finery strain,

The earth's attractive vigour to explain! Blackm.

VILE. adj. [vil, French; vilis, Latin.]

1. Base; mean; worthless; sordid; despicable.

Our case were miserable, if that wherewith we most endeavour to please God, were in his sight

so vile and despicable as men's dissinful speech would make it. Hooker.

I disdain scorn'd, and craved death,
Rather than I would be so vile esteemed. Shakep.
He to-day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother; be he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition. Shakep.
O ye Pegasian nymphs, that, hating vile things, Delight in lofty hills, and in delicious springs!

Drayton.

The inhabitants account gold but as a vile thing. Abbot.

That sinful creature man elected is,
And in our place the heavens possess he must;
Vile man, begot of clay, and born of dust. Fairf.
A spontaneous production is against matter of fact; a thing without example not only in man, but the wisest of weeds. Bentley.

2. Morally impure; wicked.

Restor'd by thee, vile as I am, to place
Of new acceptance. Milton.

VILED. adj. [from vile; whence revile.] Abusive; scurrilous; defamatory.

He granted life to all except to one, who had used vile speeches against king Edward. Hayward.

VILELY. adv. [from vile.] Basely; meanly; shamefully.

The Volscians vilely yielded the town. Shakep.

How can I

Forget my Hector, treated with dishonour, Depriv'd of funeral rites, and vilely dragg'd,
A bloody corse, about the walls of Troy? A. Philips.

VILENESS. n. f. [from vile.]

1. Baseness; meanness; despicableness.

His vileness us shall never awe;
But here our sports shall be,
Such as the golden world first saw,
Most innocent and free. Drayton.
Reflect on the essential vileness of matter, and its impotence to conserve its own being. Creech.
Considering the vileness of the clay, I wondered that no tribune of that age durst ever venture to ask the potter, What dost thou make? Swift.

2. Moral or intellectual baseness.

Then, vileness of mankind!
Could none, alas! repeat me good or great,
Wash my pale body, or bewail my fate? Prior.
VILIFIER. n. f. [from vilify.] One that vilifies.

TO VILIFY. v. a. [from vile.]

1. To debase; to degrade; to make vile.

Their maker's image
Forsook them, when themselves they vilify'd
To serve ungovern'd appetite, and took His image whom they serv'd. Milton.

2. To defame; to make contemptible.

Tomalin could not abide
To hear his sovereign vilify'd. Drayton.
The displeasure of their prince, those may expect, who would put in practice all methods to vilify his person. Addison.
Many passions dispose us to depress and vilify
the merit of one rising in the esteem of mankind. Addison.

VILL. n. f. [ville, Fr. villa, Lat.] A village; a small collection of houses. Little in use.

This book gives an account of the manurable lands in every manor, town, or vill. Hale.

VILLA. n. f. [villa, Latin.] A country seat.

The ancient Romans lay the foundations of their villas and palaces within the very borders of the sea. Addison.

At six hours distance from Bizantium's walls,
Where Bosphorus into the Euxine falls,
In a gay district, call'd th' Elysian vale,
A furnish'd villa stands, propos'd for sale. Harta.
All vast possessions; just the same the case,
Whether you call them villa, park, or chase. Pope.

VILLAGE. n. f. [village, French.] A small collection of houses in the country, less than a town.

Beggars, with roaring voices, from low farms,
Or pelting villages, sheep coats, and mills,
Inforce their charity. Shakep.

The early village cock
Hath twice done salutation to the morn. Shakep.
You have many enemies, that know not
Why they are so; but, like the village cur,
Bark when their fellows do. Shakep.

The country villages were burnt down to the ground. Knolles.

Those village-words give us a mean idea of the thing. Dryder.

Seam'd o'er with wounds which his own fabre gave,

In the vile habit of a village slave. Pope.

VILLAGER. n. f. [from village.] An inhabitant of the village.

Brutus had rather be a villager,
Than impute himself a son of Rome
Under such hard conditions. Shakep.

When once her eye
Hath met the virtue of this magick dust,
I shall appear some harmless villager,
Whom thrift keeps up about his country green. Milton.

If there are conveniences of life, which common use reaches not, it is not reason to reject them, because every villager doth not know them. Locke.

VILLAGERY. n. f. [from village] District of villages.

Robin Goodfellow, are you not he
That fright the maidens of the villagers? Shakep.

VILLAIN. n. f. [vilain, Fr. villanus, low Latin.]

1. One who held by a base tenure.

The Irish inhabiting the lands fully compelling being in condition of slaves and villains, and under a greater revenue than if they had been the king's free subjects. Davies.

2. A wicked wretch.

We were prevented by a dozen armed knights, or rather villains, who, using this time of their extreme feebleness, all together set upon them. Sid.
O villain! villain! his very opinion in the letter.
Abhorred villain! unnatural, detested, brutish villain! Shakep.

What in the world,
That names me traitor, villain-like he lies. Shak.

He was stab'd to the heart by the hand of a villain, upon the more impious pretence of his being odious to the parliament. Clarendon.

Calm thinking villains, whom no faith could fix;
Of crooked counsels; and dark politicks. Pope.

VILLANAGE. n. f. [from villain.]

1. The state of a villain; base servitude.

They exercise most bitter tyranny
Upon the parts brought into their bondage;
No wretchedness is like to sinful villanage. Spenser.
Upon every such surrender and grant, there was but one freeholder, which was the lord himself;
all the rest were but tenants in villanage, and were not fit to be sworn in juries. Davies.

2. Baseness; infamy.

If in thy smoke it ends, their glories shine;
But infamy and villanage are thine. Dryden.

TO VILLANIZE. v. a. [from villain.]

To debase; to degrade; to defame.

Were virtue by descent, a noble name
Could never villanize his father's fame;
But, as the first, the last of all the line,
Would, like the sun, ev'n in descending shine. Dryden.

These are the fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments; whose glory is in their shame, in the debasing and villanizing of mankind to the condition of beasts. Bentley.

VILLANOUS. adj. [from villain.]

1. Base; vile; wicked.

2. Sorry; in a familiar sense.

Thou art my son; I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; but chiefly a villanous trick of thine eye doth warrant this. Shak.

3. It is used by Shakep. to exaggerate any thing detestable.

We shall lose our time,
And all be turn'd to barnacles or apes,
With foreheads villanous low. Shakep. Tempest.

VILLANOUSLY. adv. [from villanous.]
Wickedly; basely.

The wandering Numidian falsified his faith, and villanously slew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself. Knolles.

VILLANOUSNESS. n. f. [from villanous.]

Baseness; wickedness.

VILLANY. n. f. [from villain; villonnie, old French.]

1. Wickedness; baseness; depravity; gross atrociousness.

Trist not those cunning waters of his eyes;
For villany is not without such a rheum:
And he, long traded in it, makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Shakep.
He is the prince's jester; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villany. Shakep.

2. A wicked action; a crime. In this sense it has a plural.

No villany, no flagitious action was ever yet committed, but a lie was first or last the principal engine to effect it. Soub.

Such villanes rous'd Horace into wrath;
And 'tis more noble to pursue his path,
Than an old tale. Dryden.

VILLATICK. adj. [villaticus, Lat.] Belonging to villages.

Evening dragon came,
Affilant on the perched roosts,
And nests in order rang'd,
Of tame villatick fowl. Milton.

VILLI. n. f. [Latin.] In anatomy, are the same as fibres; and in botany, small hairs like the grain of plush or flax, with which, as a kind of excrescence,
some trees do abound. Quincy.

VILLOUS. adj. [villosus, Lat.] Shaggy; rough; furry.

The liquor of the stomach, which with fasting grows sharp, and the quick sensation of the inward villous coat of the stomach, seem to be the cause of the sense of hunger. Arbutnot.

VIMINEOUS. adj. [vimineus, Lat.] Made of twigs.

As in the hive's vimineous dome
Ten thousand bees enjoy their home;
Each does her studious action vary,
To go and come, to fetch and carry. Prior.

VINCIBLE. adj. [from vinco, Latin.]
Conquerable; superable.

He not vincible in spirit, and well assured that shortness of provision would in a short time draw the seditious to shorter limits, drew his sword. Hayward.

Because 'twas absolutely in my power to have attended more heedfully, there was liberty in the principle, the mistake which influenced the action was vincible. Norris.

VINCIBLENESS. n. f. [from vincible.]
Liableness to be overcome. Dictionary.

VINCTURE. n. f. [vinctura, Lat.] A binding. Bailey.

VINDEMIAL. adj. [vindemia, Latin.]
Belonging to a vintage.

TO VINDEMIATE. v. n. [vindemia, Lat.]
To gather the vintage.

New vindemiate, and take your bees towards the expiration of this month.  Evelyn.

VINDEMIATION. n. f. [vindemia, Lat.]
Grape-gathering. Bailey.

TO VINDICATE. v. a. [vindico, Lat.]

1. To justify; to support; to maintain.
Where the respondent denies any proposition,
the

the opponent must directly vindicate and confirm that proposition; i. e. he must make that proposition the conclusion of his next syllogism.

Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. To revenge; to avenge.

We ought to have added, how far an holy war is to be pursued, whether to enforce a new belief, and to vindicate or punish infidelity. Bacon.

Man is not more inclinable to obey God than man; but God is more powerful to exact subjection, and to vindicate rebellion. Pearson on the Creed.

The more numerous the offenders are, the more his justice is concerned to vindicate the affront. Tillotson.

Assemble ours, and all the Theban race,
To vindicate on Athens thy disgrace. Dryden.

3. To assert; to claim with efficacy.

Never any touch'd upon this way, which our poet justly has vindicated to himself.

Dryden's Preface to Ovid.

The beauty of this town, without a fleet,
From all the world shall vindicate her trade. Dryden.

4. To clear; to protect from censure.

God's ways of dealing with us are by proposition of terrors and promises. To these is added the authority of the commander, vindicated from our neglect by the interposition of the greatest signs and wonders, in the hands of his prophets, and of his Son. Hammond.

I may assist eternal providence,
And vindicate the ways of God to man. Milton.

VINDICATION. n. f. [vindication, Fr. from vindicare.] Defence; assertion; justification.

This is no vindication of her conduct. She still acts a mean part, and, through fear, becomes an accomplice in endeavouring to betray the Greeks. Broom.

VINDICATIVE. adj. [from vindicare.] Revengeful; given to revenge.

He, in heat of action,
Is more vindicative than jealous love. Shakespeare.
Public revenges are for the most part fortunate, but in private revenges it is not so. Vindicative persons live the life of witches, who, as they are mischievous, so end they unfortunate. Bacon.
The fruits of adulter'd choler, and the evaporations of a vindicative spirit. H. W.

Do not too many believe no zeal to be spiritual, but what is contentious or vindicative? whereas no zeal is spiritual, that is not also charitable. Spratt's Sermons.

Distinguish betwixt a passion purely vindicative, and those counsels where divine justice avenges the innocent. J. Eschwege.

VINDICATOR. n. f. [from vindicare.] One who vindicates; an assertor.

He treats tyranny, and the vices attending it, with the utmost rigour; and consequently a noble soul is better pleased with a jealous vindicator of Roman liberty, than with a temporizing poet. Dryden.

VINDICATORY. adj. [from vindicator.]

1. Punitory; performing the office of vengeance.

The afflictions of Job were no vindicatory punishments to take vengeance of his sins, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.

2. Defensory; justificatory.

VINDICTIVE. adj. [from vindicta, Lat.] Given to revenge; revengeful.

I am vindictive enough to repel force by force. Dryden.

Augustus was of a nature too vindictive, to have contented himself with so small a revenge. Dryden.
Suits are not reparative, but vindictive, when they are commenced against insolvent persons. Kentwell.

VINE. n. f. [vinea, Latin.] The plant that bears the grape.

The flower consists of many leaves placed in a regular order, and expanding in form of a rose;

the ovary, which is situated in the bottom of the flower, becomes a round fruit, full of juice, and contains many small stones in each. The tree is climbing, sending forth claspers at the joints, by which it fastens itself to what plant stands near it, and the fruit is produced in bunches. The species are, 1. The wild vine, commonly called the claret grape. 2. The July grape. 3. The Corinth grape, vulgarly called the currant grape. 4. The parsley-leaved grape. 5. The miller's grape. This is called the Burgundy in England: the leaves of this sort are very much powdered with white in the spring, from whence it had the name of miller's grape. 6. VISCID. adj. [viscidus, Latin.] Glutinous; tenacious.

VISCIDITY. n. s. [from viscid.]

1. Glutinousness; tenacity; ropiness.
This motion in some human creatures may be weak, in respect to the *viscid*ity of what is taken, so as not to be able to propel it. Arbutnot.
2. Glutinous concretion.
Catharticks of mercurials precipitate the *viscid*ities by their slypt cty. Floyer.

VISCOUS. n. s. [viscosus, Fr. from viscosus.]

1. Glutinousness; tenacity.
The air being mixed with the animal fluids, determines their condition as to rarity, density, viscosity, tenacity. Arbutnot.
2. A glutinous substance.
A tenuous emanation, or continued effluvia, after some distance, retracteth unto itself, as is observable in drops of syrups, and seminal *viscid*ities. Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

VISCOUS. n. s. [viscosus, Fr. from viscosus.]

1. Glutinousness; tenacity.
The air being mixed with the animal fluids, determines their condition as to rarity, density, viscosity, tenacity. Arbutnot.
2. A glutinous substance.
A tenuous emanation, or continued effluvia, after some distance, retracteth unto itself, as is observable in drops of syrups, and seminal *viscid*ities. Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

VISCOUS. n. s. [viscosus, Fr. from viscosus.]

1. Glutinousness; tenacity.
The air being mixed with the animal fluids, determines their condition as to rarity, density, viscosity, tenacity. Arbutnot.
2. A glutinous substance.
A tenuous emanation, or continued effluvia, after some distance, retracteth unto itself, as is observable in drops of syrups, and seminal *viscid*ities. Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

VISIBILITY. n. s. [visibilité, Fr. from visible.]

1. The state or quality of being perceptible by the eye.

The colours of outward objects brought into a darkened room, do much depend for their visibility upon the dimness of the light they are beheld by. B. y.

2. State of being apparent, or openly discoverable; conspicuousness.

They produced this as an instance against the perpetual visibility of the church, and he brings it to prove that it ceased to be a true church. Stillingfleet.

VISIBLE. n. s. Perceptibility by the eye. Rogers's Sermons.

Visible work upon a looking-glass, which is like the pupil of the eye; and audibles upon the places of echo, which resemble the cavern of the ear. Bacon.

VISIBLE. adj. [visible, French; visibilis, Latin.]

1. Perceptible by the eye.

On this mount he appeared, under this tree Stood visible, and I
Here with him at this fountain talk'd. Milton.
Each thought was visible, that roll'd within,
As through a crystal case the figur'd bouis are seen. Dryden.

A long series of ancestors shews the native lustre with great advantage; but if he degenerate from his line, the least spot is visible on him. Dryd.
What's true beauty, but fair Virtue's face, Virtue made visible in outward grace? Young.

2. Discovered to the eye.

If that the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame the vile offences,
Humanity must perforce piece on itself,
Like monsters of the deep. Shaksp. King Lear.

3. Apparent; open; conspicuous.

The factions at court were greater, or more visible than before. Clarendon.

VISIBILITY. n. s. [from visible.] State or quality of being visible.

VISIBLY. adv. [from visible.] In a manner perceptible by the eye.

The day being visibly governed by the sun, is a little longer than the revolution of the equator; so much as is occasioned by the advance of the sun in his annual contrary motion along the ecliptick. Holder.

By the head we make known more visibly our supplications, our threatenings: enough to see the face, and to understand the mind at half a word. Dryden.

VISION. n. s. [vision, Fr. visio, Latin.]

1. Sight; the faculty of seeing.

An astonish, when they have taken off from the bottom of the eye that outward and moist thick coat called the humor, can then see through the thinner coats, the pictures of objects lively painted thereon. And these pictures, propagated by motion along the fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, are the cause of vision. Newton's Opticks.

These theorems being admitted into optics, there would be scope enough of handling that science voluminously, after a new manner; not only by teaching those things which tend to the perfection of vision, but also by determining mathematically all kinds of phenomena of colours which could be produced by refractions. Newton's Opticks.

2. The act of seeing.

Vision in the next life is the perfecting of faith in this; or faith here is turned into vision there, as hope into enjoying. Ham. Practical Catechism.

3. A supernatural appearance; a spectre; a phantom.

The day seems long, but night is odious;
No sleep, but dreams; no dreams, but visions strange. Sidney.

Last night the very gods shew'd me a vision.

Shaksp.peare.

God's mother deigned to appear to me;
And, in a vision, full of majesty,
Wilt'd me to leave my base vocation. Shak. Hen. VI.

Him God vouchsaf'd
To call by visi n, from his father's house,
Into a land which he will shew him. Milt. Par. Lost.

4. A dream; something shewn in a dream. A dream happens to a sleeping, a vision may happen to a waking man. A dream is supposed natural, a vision miraculous; but they are confounded.

His dream returns; his friend appears again:
The murder'er come; now help, or I am slain!
'Twas but a vision still, and visions are but vain. Dryden.

The idea of any thing in our mind no more proves the existence of that thing, than the vision of a dream make a true history. Locke.

VISIONARY. adj. [visionnaire, Fr. from vision.]

1. Affected by phantoms; disposed to receive impressions on the imagination.

No more these fancies my meditation aid,
Or lull to rest the visionary maid. Pope's Eloisa to Abbeard.

2. Imaginary; not real; seen in a dream; perceived by the imagination only.

The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bray'd;
The hunter close pursu'd the visionary maid. Dryden.

If you have any skill in dreams, let me know whether I have the same place in the real world, that I had in the visionary one. Addison.

Our visionary only led us to further visionary prospects; advantage was taken of the sanguine temper which success had wrought the nation up to. Swift.

VISIONARY. } n. s. [visionnaire, French]
VISIONIST. } One whose imagination is disturbed.

This account exceeded all the visionaries I have met with. Turner.
The lovely visionary gave him perpetual uneasiness. Fearie Quixote.

TO VISIT. v. a. [visiter, French; visito, Latin.]

1. To go to see.

You must go visit the lady that lies in.—I visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither. Shaksp.peare's Coriolanus.

Virgins visited by angel powers. Pope.

2. [In scriptural language] To send good or evil judicially.

When God visiteth, what shall I answer him? Job, xxxi. 14.

Thou shalt be visited of the Lord with thunder. Isa. xxix. 6.

God visit thee in good things. Judas, xiii. 20.

That venerable body is in little concern after what manner their mortal enemies intend to treat them, whenever God shall visit us with so fatal an event. Swift.

3. To salute with a present.

4. To come to a survey, with judicial authority.

The bishop ought to visit his diocese every year in person. Ayliffe.

TO VISIT. v. n. To keep up the intercourse of ceremonial salutations at the houses of each other.

Whilst she was under her mother she was forced to be genteel, to live in ceremony, to sit up late at nights, to be in the folly of every fashion, and always visiting on Sundays. Larv.

VISIT. n. s. [visite, Fr. from the verb.] The act of going to see another.

In a designed or accidental visit, let some one take a book, which may be agreeable, and read in it. Watts.

If this woman would make fewer visits, or not be always talkative, they would neither of them find it half so hard to be affected with religion. Law.

VISITABLE. adj. [from visit.] Liable to be visited.

All hospitals built since the reformation, are visitabile by the king or lord chancellor.

VISITANT. n. s. [from visit.] One who goes to see another.

He alone
To find where Adam shelter'd, took his way,
Not unperceiv'd of Adam, who to Eve,
While the great visitant approach'd, thus spake.

One visit begins an acquaintance; and when the visitant comes again, he is no more a stranger.

Edward the first, who had been a visitant in Spain, upon action in the Holy Land, fixed both our pounds by the measures of the East.

Griev'd that a visitant so long should wait
Unmark'd, unhonour'd, at a monarch's gate,
Instant he flew.

Acquainted with the world, and quite well bred,
Drusus receives her visitant in bed.

VISITATION. n. s. [visito, Latin.]

1. The act of visiting.

He comes not
Like to his father's greatness; his approach,
So out of circumstance and sudden, tells us,
'Tis not a visitation from him, but fore'd
By need and accident. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
What would you with the prince's? — —Nothing but peace and gentle visitation.

2. Object of visits.

O flow'rs,
My early visitation, and my last. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. [Visitation, Fr.] Judicial visit or perambulation.

Your grace, to your metropolitical visitation, hath begun a good work, in taking this into your religious consideration; and you have endeavoured a reformation.

The bishop ought to visit his diocese every year in person, unless he omits the same because he would not burthen his churches; and then ought to send his arch-deacon, which was the original of the arch-deacon's visitation.

4. Judicial evil sent by God; state of suffering judicial evil.

That which thou dost not understand when thou readest, thou shalt understand in the day of thy visitation. For many secrets of religion are not perceived till they be felt, and are not felt but in the day of a great calamity.

5. Communication of divine love.

The most comfortable visitations God hath sent men from above, have taken especially the times of prayer as their most natural opportunities.

VISITATORIAL. adj. [from visitor.] Belonging to a judicial visitor.

Some will have it, that an archdeacon does of common right execute this visitatorial power in his archdeaconry: but others say, that an archdeacon has a visitatorial power only of common right per modum simplicis scrutini, as being bishop's vicar.

VISITER. n. s. [from visit.]

1. One who comes to see another.

Here's ado to lock up honesty and honour from the access of gentle visitors.
You see this confluence, this great flood of visitors.

Consumptives of this degree entertain their visitors with strange rambling discourses of their intent of going here and there.

I have a large house, yet I should hardly prevail to find one visitor, if I were not able to hire him with a bottle of wine.

2. [Visiteur, Fr.] An occasional judge; one who regulates the disorders of any society.

The visitors expelled the orthodox; they, without scruple or shame, possessed themselves of their colleges.

To him you must your sickly state refer;
Your charter claims him as your visitor.
Whatever abuses have crept into the universities, might be reformed by strict injunctions to the visitors and heads of houses.

VISIVE. adj. [visif, French; visus, Lat.] Formed in the act of seeing.

This happens when the axis of the visive cones, diffused from the object, fall not upon the same plane; but that which is conveyed into one eye is more depressed or elevated than that which enters the other.

VISNOMY. n. s. [corrupted from physiognomy.] Face; countenance. Not in use.

Twelve god, do sit around in royal state,
And Jove in midst with awful majesty,
To judge the strife between them stirred late:
Each of the gods by his like visnomy
Each to be known, but Jove above them all,
By his great looks and pow'r imperial.

VISOR. n. s. [This word is variously written, visard, visar, visor, vizard, vizor. I prefer visor, as nearest the Latin visus, and concurring with visage, a kindred word: visiere, French.] A mask used to disfigure and disguise. See VIZARD.

I fear, indeed, the weakness of my government before, made you think such a mask would be grateful unto me; and my weaker government since, makes you pull off the visor.

This loutish clown is such that you never saw so ill-favoured a visor; his behaviour such, that he is beyond the degree of ridiculous.

By which deceit doth mask in visor fair,
And cast her colours dyed deep in grain,
To seem like truth, whose shape she well can feign.

But that thy face is, visor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would essay, proud queen, to make thee bluish.

One visor remains,
And that is Claudio, I know him by his hearing.

The Cyclops, a people of Sicily, remarkable for cruelty, might, perhaps, in their wars use a head-piece, or visor.

Swarms of knaves the visor quite disfigure,
And hide secure behind a naked face.

VISOURED. adj. [from visor.] Masked.

Hence with thy brew'd enchantments, foul deceiver!

Hast thou betray'd my credulous innocence
With visor'd falsehood and base forgery?

VISTA. n. s. [Italian.] View; prospect through an avenue.

In St. Peter's, when a man stands under the dome, if he looks upwards, he is astonished at the spacious hollow of the cupola, that makes one of the beautifullest vistas that the eye can pass through.

The finish'd garden to the view
Its vista opens, and its alleys green.

VISUAL. adj. [visuel, French.] Used in sight; exercising the power of sight; instrumental to sight.

An eye thrust forth to as it hangs a pretty distance by the visual nerve, hath been without any power of sight; and yet, after being replaced, recovered sight.

Now thinks my hurt offends me; for my fire
Can soon repose in it the visual fire.

No where so clear, sharpen'd his visual ray
To objects distant far.
Then purg'd with euphony and rue
The visual nerve; for he had much to see.

VITAL. adj. [vitalis, Latin.]

1. Contributing to life; necessary to life.

His heart, broken with unkindness and affliction, stretched so far beyond his limits with this excess of comfort, as it was able no longer to keep safe his vital spirits.

All nature laughs, the groves are fresh and fair;
The sun's mild lustre warms the vital air.

2. Relating to life.

Let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord, and vile reproach.

On the rock a scanty measure place
Of vital flax, and turn the wheel a-pace.

3. Containing life.

Spirits that live throughout;
Vital in every part; not as frail man,
In intrails, heart, or head, liver or reins,
Cannot but by annihilating die.

His brooding wings the Spirit of God outspreads;
And vital virtue infus'd, and vital warmth
Throughout the fluid mass.

4. Being the seat of life.

The dart flew on, and pierc'd a vital part.

5. So disposed as to live. Little used, and rather Latin than English.

Pythagoras and Hippocrates not only affirm the birth of the seventh month to be vital, that of the eighth mortal, but the progression thereto be measured by rule.

6. Essential; chiefly necessary.

Know, grief's vital part Consists in nature, not in art.

VITALITY. n. s. [from vital.] Power of subsisting in life.

Whether that motion, vitality and operation were by incubation, or how else, the manner is only known to God.

For the security of species produced only by seed, Providence hath endued all seed with a lasting vitality, that if by any accident it happen not to germinate the first year, it will continue its fecundity twenty or thirty years.

VITALLY. adv. [from vital.] In such a manner as to give life.

The organical structure of human bodies, whereby they are fitted to live and move, and be vitally informed by the soul, is the workmanship of a most wise, powerful, and beneficent Maker.

VITALS. n. s. [Without the singular.] Parts essential to life.

By fits my swelling grief appears,
In rising sighs, and falling tears,
That show too well the warm desires,
The silent, slow, consuming fires,
Which on my inmost vitals prey,
And melt my very soul away.

VITELLARY. n. s. [from vitellus, Lat.] The place where the yolk of the egg swims in the white.

A greater difficulty in the doctrine of eggs is, how the sperm of the cock attaineth into every egg; since the vitellary or place of the yolk is very high.

TO VITIATE. v. a. [vitio, Latin.] To deprave; to spoil; to make less pure.

The sun in his garden gives him the purity of visible objects, and of true nature before he was vitiated by luxury.

The organs of speech are managed by so many muscles, that speech is not easily destroyed, though often somewhat vitiated as to some particular letters.

VITIA encountering foul bodies, and excluding a fermentation of those vitiated humours, precipitate into putrid fevers. Harvey.

This undistinguishing complaisance will vitiate the taste of the readers, and misguide many of them in their judgments, where to approve and where to censure. Garth.

A transposition of the order of the sacramental words, in some men's opinion, vitiates baptism. Ayliffe's Parergon.

VITIATION. n. f. [from vitiare, Lat.] Deprivation; corruption.

The forlaid extenuation of the body is imputed to the blood's vitiation by malign putrid vapours smoking throughout the vessels. Harvey on Consumptions.

TO VITILITIGATE. v. n. [from vitiatus and litigo, Latin.] To contend in law litigiously and cavillously.

VITILITIGATION. n. f. [from vitiligitate, Lat.] Contention; cavillation.

I'll fence you, by right ratiocination, To leave your vitiligation. Hudibras.

VITIOSITY. n. f. [from vitiosus, Lat.] Depravity; corruption.

He charges it wholly upon the corruption, perverseness, and untidiness of man's will, as the only cause that rendered all the arguments his doctrine came clothed with, unsuccessful. South.

VITIOUS. adj. [from vitiosus, Fr. vitiosus, Latin.]

1. Corrupt; wicked; opposite to virtuous. It is rather applied to habitual faults, than criminal actions. It is used of persons and practices.

Make known
It is no virtuous blot, murder, or foulness
That hath depriv'd me of your grace. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Witness th' irreverent son
Of him who built the ark; who for the shame Done to his father, heard his heavy curse,
"Servant of servants," on his virtuous race. Milton.
Wit's what the virtuous fear, the virtuous shun;
By tools 'tis hated, and by knaves undone. Pope.
No troops abroad are so ill disciplined as the English, which cannot well be otherwise, while the common soldiers have before their eyes the virtuous example of their leaders. Swift.

2. Corrupt; having physical ill qualities.
When virtuous language contends to be high, it is full of rock, mountain, and pointedness. Ben Jonson.

Here from the virtuous air and sickly skies,
A plague did on the dumb creation rise. Dryden.

VITIOUSLY. adv. [from vitiosus, Lat.] Not virtuously; corruptly.

VITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from vitiosus, Lat.] Corruptness; state of being vicious.

When we in our virtuousness grow hard,
The wise gods seal our eyes. Shakespeare.

What makes a governor justly despised is virtuousness and ill morals. Virtue must tip the preacher's tongue and the ruler's scepter with authority. South.

VITREOUS. adj. [from vitreus, Fr. vitreus, Lat.] Glassy; consisting of glass; resembling glass.

The hole answers to the pupil of the eye; the crystalline humour to the lenticular glass, the dark room to the cavity containing the vitreous humour, and the white paper to the retina. Ray on the Great.

When the phlegm is too viscous, or separates into too great a quantity, it brings the blood into a morbid state; this viscous phlegm seems to be the vitreous petuile of the patients. Arbutnot on Aliments.

VITREOUSNESS. n. f. [from vitreous, Lat.] Resemblance of glass.

VITRIFICABLE. adj. [from vitrificare, Lat.] Convertible into glass.

VITRIFICATE. v. a. [from vitrum and facio, Latin.] To change into glass.

We have metals vitrified, and other materials, besides those of which you make glass. Bacon.

VITRIFICATION. n. f. [from vitricatio, Fr. from vitricare, Lat.] Production of glass; act of changing, or state of being changed into glass.

For vitrification likewise, what metals will endure it? Also, because vitrification is accounted a kind of death of metals, what vitrification will admit of turning back again, and what not? Bacon's Physical Remarks.

If the heat be more fierce, it maketh the grosser part itself run and melt, as in the making of ordinary glass; and in the vitrification of earth in the inner parts of furnaces; and in the vitrification of brick and metals. Bacon's Natural History.

Upon the knowledge of the different ways of making minerals and metals capable of vitrification, depends the art of making counterfeit or fictitious gems. Boyle on Colours.

TO VITRIFY. v. a. [from vitriser, French; vitrum and facio, Latin.] To change into glass.

Metals will vitrify; and perhaps some portion of the glass of metal vitrified, mixed in the pot of ordinary glass metal, will make the whole mass more tough. Bacon.

Iron-slag, vitrified, has in it cortices encompassing one another, like those in agates. Woodward.

TO VITRIFY. v. n. To become glass; to be changed into glass.

Chymists make vessels of animal substances calcined, which will not vitrify in the fire: for all earth which hath any salt or oil in it, will turn to glass. Arbutnot on Aliments.

VITRIOL. n. f. [from vitriol, Fr. vitriolum, Latin.]

Vitriol is produced by addition of a metallic matter with the fossil acid salt. Woodward.

I rubbed it with the vitriol-stone. W. Jones's Journey.

VITRIOLATE. adj. [from vitriol, Fr. from vitriolum, Latin.] Impregnated with vitriol; consisting of vitriol.

Iron may be dissolved by any tart, salt, or vitriolated water. Bacon.

The water having dissolved the imperfectly calcined body, the vitriolate corpuscles swimming in the liquor, by their excursions constituted little masses of vitriol, which gave the water they impregnated a fair vitriolate colour. Boyle.

VITRIOLICK. adj. [from vitriolique, French; vitriolous, Lat.]

Resembling vitriol; containing vitriol.

Copperose of Mars, by some called salt of steel, made by the spirits of vitriol or sulphur, will, after abluton, be attracted by the loadstone: and therefore whether those shooting salts partake but little of steel, and be not rather the vitriolous spirits fixed into salt by the effluvia or odour of steel, is not without good question. Brown's Vulg. Err.

These salts have somewhat of a vitriolous taste, but mixed with a smatch of a vitriolick. Grew's Museum.

By over-fermentation or long keeping, wine becomes sharp, as in hock, like vitriolick acidity. Floyer.

VITRULINE. adj. [from vitulina, Latin.] Belonging to a calf, or to veal. Bailey.

VITUPERABLE. adj. [from vituperabilis, Lat.] Blameworthy. Ainsworth.

TO VITUPERATE. v. a. [from vituperer, Fr. vitupero, Lat.] To blame; to censure.

VITUPERATION. n. f. [from vituperatio, Lat.] Blame; censure.

Such a writing ought to be clean, and free from any canker or vituperation of satire. Ayliffe's Parergon.

VIVACIOUS. adj. [from vivax, Latin.]

1. Long-lived.

Though we should allow them their perpetual calm and equability of heat, they will never be able to prove, that therefore men would be so vivacious as they would have us believe. Bentley.

2. Spritely; gay; active; lively.

VIVACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from vivacitas, Fr. vivacity, Lat.]

1. Liveliness; spriteliness.

He had a great vivacity in his countenance. Dryden.

2. Longevity; length of life.

Fables are raised concerning the vivacity of deer: for neither are their gestation nor increment such as may afford an argument of long life. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. Power of living.

They are esteemed very hot in operation, and will, in a convenient air, survive some days the loss of their heads and hearts; so vigorous is their vivacity. Boyle.

VIVARY. n. f. [from vivarium, Lat.] A warren. Ainsworth.

VIVE. adj. [from vif, Fr. vivant, Latin.] Lively; forcible; pressing.

By a vive and forcible persuasion, he moved him to a war upon Flanders. Bacon.

VIVENCY. n. f. [from vivo, Latin.] Manner of supporting or continuing life, or vegetation.

Although not in a distinct and indisputable way of vivency, or answering in all points the property of plants, yet in inferior and defective constitutions they are determined by semi-abilities. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VIVES. n. f. A dilemper among hories.

Vives is much like the strangles; and the chief difference is, that for the most part the strangles happen to colts and young horses while they are at grass, by feeding with their heads downwards; by which means the swelling inclines more to the jaws; but the vives happens to horses at any age and time, and is more particularly seated in the glands and kernels under the ear. Farrier's Dict.

VIVID. adj. [from viduus, Latin.]

1. Lively; quick; striking.

The liquor, retaining its former vivid colour, was grown clear again. Boyle.

To make these experiments the more manifest, such bodies ought to be chosen as have the fullest and most vivid colours, and two of those bodies compared together. Newton.

Ah! what avails his glossy varying dyes;
The vivid green his shining plumes unfold;
His painted wings, and break that flames with gold? Pope.

2. Spritely; active.

Body is a fit workhouse for sprightly, vivid faculties to exercise and exert themselves in. South.

Where the genius is bright, and the imagination vivid, the power of memory may lose its improvement. Watts.

VIVIDLY. adv. [from vivid, Lat.] With life; with quickness; with strength.

In the moon we can, with excellent telescopes, discern many hills and valleys, whereof some are more and some less vividly illustrated; and others have a fainter, others a deeper shade. Boyle on Colours.

Sensitive objects affect a man, in the state of this present life, much more warmly and vividly than those which affect only his nobler part, his mind. South.

VIVIDNESS. n. f. [from vivid, Lat.] Life; vigour; quickness.

VIVIFICAL. adj. [from vivificans, Lat.] Giving life. Bailey.

TO VIVIFY. v. a. [from vivifico, Lat.] 1. To make alive; to inform with life; to animate.

To transfer from such a change of form as seems to destroy the essential properties. A chymical term.

VIVIFICATOR. n. f. [vivification, Fr. from vivificare.] The act of giving life.

If that motion be in a certain order, there followeth vivification and figuration. Bacon.

VIVIFICE. adj. [vivifique, Fr. vivifius, Latin.] Giving life; making alive.

Without the sun's salutary and vivifical beams, all motion would cease, and nothing be left but darkness and death. Ray.

TO VIVIFY. v. a. [vivifier, French; vivus and fais, Latin.] To make alive; to animate; to endue with life.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that there is a worm that breedeth in old snow, of a reddish colour, and dull of motion; which would show that snow hath in it a secret warmth, else it could hardly vivify. Bacon.

Sitting on eggs doth vivify, not nourish. Bacon. Gut-worms, as soon as vivified, creep into the stomach for nutriment. Harvey on Consumption.

VIVIPAROUS. adj. [vivus and pario, Lat.] Bringing the young alive: opposed to oviparous.

When we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer, they give suck; but whereas no other flying animals have these parts, we cannot from them infer a viviparous exclusion.

Their species might continue, though they had been viviparous; yet it would have brought their individuals to very small numbers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If birds had been viviparous, the burthen of their womb had been so great and heavy, that their wings would have failed them. Ray on the Creation.

VIXEN. n. f.

Vixen, or fixen, is the name of a she-fox: otherwise applied to a woman whose nature and condition is thereby compared to the fox. Pessigan.

O! when she's angry, she is keen and shrewd; She was a vixen when she went to school; And though she be but little, she is fierce. Shak.

See a pack of spaniels, called lovers, in a hot pursuit of a two-legged vixen, who on'y flies the whole loud pack, to be singled out by one. Wycherley.

VIZ. adv. [This word is videlicet, written with a contraction.] To wit; that is.

Birds are nourished by umbilical veins, and the navel is manifest a day or two after creation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

U M P

In a calf, the umbilical vessels terminate in certain bodies divided into a multitude of carnosous papillae, received into so many sockets of the intestines growing on the womb. Ray.

UMBLES. n. s. [umbles, Fr.] A deer's entrails. Dictionary.

UMBO. n. s. [Latin.] The pointed boss, or prominent part of a buckler.

Thy words together ty'd in small banks,
Close as the Macedonian phalanx;
Or like the umbs of the Romans,
Which stoutest ties could break by no means. Swift.

UMBRAGE. n. s. [ombrage, French.]

1. Shade; screen of trees.

O, might I here
In solitude live savage; in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening! Milton's Paradise Lost.
Men sweet'ning run
To grots and caves, and the cool umbrage seek
Of woven arborets. Philips.

2. Shadow; appearance.

The rest are umbrages quickly dispell'd; the astrologer subjects liberty to the motions of heaven. Bramhall against Hobbes.

The opinion carries no shew of truth nor umbrage of reason of its side. Woodward.

Such a removal of the metal out of one part of the mass, and collecting of it in another, has misled some, and given umbrage to an opinion, that there is a growth of metal in ore exposed to the air. Woodward on Fossils.

3. Resentment; offence; suspicion of injury.

Although he went on with the war, yet it should be but with his sword in his hand, to bend the stiffness of the other party to accept of peace: and so the king should take no umbrage of his arming and presecution. Bacon.

UMBRA'GEIOUS. adj. [ombrageux, Fr.]

Shady; yielding shade.

Umbrageous grots, and caves of cool recesses.

Walk daily in a pleasant, airy, and umbrageous garden. Milton.

The stealing shower is scarce to patter heard,
Beneath th' umbrageous multitude of leaves. Harvey.

UMBRA'GEOUSNESS. n. s. [from umbra-geous.] Shadiness.

The exceeding umbrageousness of this tree, becompar'd to the dark and shadowed life of man; through which the sun of justice being not able to pierce, we have all remained in the shadow of death, till it pleas'd Christ to climb the tree of the cross, for our enlightning and redemption. Rel.

UMBRA'TILE. a. y. [umbratilis, Lat.] Being in the shade.

UMBREL. n. s. [from umbra, Latin.]

UMBRELLA. n. s. A screen used in hot countries to keep off the sun, and in others to bear off the rain.

met. Spenser.

UMBROSITY. n. s. [umbrosus, Lat.] Sha-diness; exclusion of light.

O led paper becometh more transparent, and admits the visible rays with much less umbrosity.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UMPIRAGE. n. s. [from umpire.] Arbitration; friendly decision of a controversy.

UMPT. n. s. [This word Minbew, with plause from Skinner, derives

U N A

from un pater, Fr. a father.] An arbitrator; one who, as a common friend, decides disputes. It is by Brown taken simply for a judge, in a sense not usual.

Give me some present counsel; or, behold,
'Twixt my extremes and me, this bloody knife Shall play the umpire; arbitrating that,
Which the commission of thy years and art
Could to no issue of true honour bring. Shakspeare.

Just death, kind umpire of men's miseries,
With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence. Shakspeare.

But as swayne unkent fed on the plaines,
And made the echo umpire of my shames. Erccen.
The learned Scannarius, in that book, takes not upon him to play the advocate for the chymists, but the umpire betwixt them and the peripateticks. Boyle.

The vast distance that sin had put between the offending creature and the offended Creator, required the help of some great umpire and intercessor, to open him a new way of access to God;
and this Christ did for us as mediator. Scutb.

The jealous sects, that dare not trust their cause
So far from their own will as from the laws,
You for their umpire and their synod take. Dryd.

Among those persons, going to law was utterly a fault, being ordinarily on such accounts as were too light for the hearing of courts and umpires. Kettwell.

UN. A Saxon privative or negative particle answering to in of the Latins, and a of the Greeks, on, Dutch. It is placed almost at will before adjectives and adverbs. All the instances of this kind of composition cannot therefore be inserted; but I have collected a number sufficient, perhaps more than sufficient, to explain it.

The examples, however, though numerous, might have easily been made more; for almost every adjective has a substantive and an adverb adhering to it, as unfaithful, unfaithfulness, unfaithfully. Un is prefixed to adjectives with their derivatives, as unapt, unaptly, unapely; and to puffed participles, as unburt, unburtly; unfavour'd:
It is prefixed likewise to participial adjectives, as unpleasing, unpleasingly, but rarely in the verbal sense expressing action; we cannot say, the dart flew unwoundingly, though we say, the man escaped un-wounded. In and un may be thus distinguished: To words merely English we prefix un, as unfit; to words borrowed in the positive sense, but made negative by ourselves, we prefix un, as ungracious, un-generous. When we borrow both words, we retain the Latin or French in, as inelegant, impolitic, impolitic. Before substantives, if they have the English termination ness, it is proper to prefix un, as unfitness, ungraciousness. If they have the Latin or French terminations in, us, ice, or ence, and for the most part if they end in ry, the negative in is put before them, as inapt, unaptly, in-aptitude; unjust, injustice; imprudence; unfaithful, unfaithfulness, infidelity.

UNABASHED. adj. [from abashed.] Not shamed; not confus'd by modesty.

Earle on high, good unabash'd Dece,
And Tutchin flagrant from the scourage below. Pope.

UNABLE. adj. [from able.]

1. Not having ability. With to before a verb, and for before a noun.

The Amalekites set on them, supposing that they had been weary, and unable to resist.

Raleigh's History of the World.
Zeal mov'd thee:

To please thy gods thou didst it; gods unable
To acquit themselves, and prosecute their foes. Milton.

The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
Gas'd on the fair,
And sigh'd, and look'd, and sigh'd again. Dryden.

U N A

I intended to put it in practice, though for a while for the attempt of such a poem. Dryden.
Man, under the disadvantages of a weak and fallen nature, was unable even to form an idea of happiness worthy his reasonable ambition. Rogers.

2. Weak; impotent.

A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable;
Beyond all manner of so much I love you. Shakspeare.

UNABOLISHED. adj. [from abolished.]

Not repealed; remaining in force.

The number of needles, laws unabolish'd, doth weaken the force of them that are necessary. Hooker.

UNACCEPTABLE. adj. [from acceptable.]

Not pleasing; not such as is well received.

The marquis at that time was very unacceptable to his countrymen. Clarendon.

'Tis as indecent as unacceptable; and all men are willing to sink out of such company, the sober for the hazards, and the jovial for the unpleasantness.

Government of the Tongue.
Every method for deterring others from the like practices for the future, must be unacceptable and displeasing to the friends of the guilty. Addison's Freeholder.

If he shrinks from an unacceptable duty, there is a secret reserve of infidelity at the bottom. Rogers's Sermons.

UNACCEPTABLENESS. n. s. [from unacceptable.] State of not pleasing.

This alteration arises from the unacceptableness of the subject I am upon. Collier on Pride.

UNACCEPTED. adj. [from accepted.] Not accepted.

By turns put on the suppliant, and the lord;
Offer'd again the unaccepted wreath,
And choice of happy love, or instant death. Prior.

UNACCESSIBLENESS. n. s. [from accessibleness.] State of not being to be attained or approached.

Many excellent things are in nature, which, by reason of the remoteness from us, and unaccessi-bleness to them, are not within any of our faculties to apprehend. Hale.

UNACCOMMODATED. adj. [from accommodated.] Unfurnished with external convenience.

Unaccommodated man is no more than such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art. Shakspeare.

UNACCOMPANIED. adj. [from accompanied.] Not attended.

Seldom one accident, prosperous or adverse, cometh unaccompanied with the like. Heyward.

UNACCOMPLISHED. adj. [from accomplished.] Unfinished; incomplete.

Beware of death; thou canst not die unperjur'd,
And leave an unaccomplish'd love behind. Dryden.

Thy vows are ineine.
The gods, dismay'd at his approach, withdrew,
Nor durst their unaccomplish'd crime pursue. Dryd.

UNACCOUNTABLE. adj. [from accountable.]

1. Not explicable; not to be solved by reason; not reducible to rule.

I shall note difficulties, which are not usually observed, though unaccountable. Glanville.

The folly is so unaccountable, that examples pass upon us for friends. L'Estrange.

There has been an unaccountable disposition of late, to reject the fables from the French. Addison.
What is yet more unaccountable, would be complaints of their rejecting his omnipotence. Rogers's Sermons.

The Church is an unaccountable people, strangely compounded of knowledge and ignorance.
Baker's Reflections on Learning.

The manner whereby the soul and body are uni-ed, and how they are distinguished, is wholly unaccountable to us. Swift.

1. Not subject; not controlled.

UNACCO'UNTABLY. adv. Strangely.
The boy proved to be the son of the merchant, whose heart had to unaccountably melted at the sight of him. Addison.

UNACCURATE. adj. [from accurate.]
Not exact.

Galileo using an unaccurate way, defined the air to be in weight to water but as one to four hundred. Boyle.

UNACCURATENESS. n. s. [from unaccurate.] Want of exactness. For this are commonly used inaccurate and inaccuracy.

It may be much more probably maintained than hitherto, as against the unaccuracy and uncon-cludingness of the analytical experiments vulgarly to be relied on. Boyle.

UNACCUSTOMED. adj. [from accustomed.]

1. Not used; not habituated: with to.

I was chastised as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke. Jer. xxxi.

The necessity of air to the most of animals unaccustomed to the want of it, may best be judged of by the following experiments. Boyle.

2. New; not usual.

I'll send one to Mantua,
Where that same banish'd runagate doth live,
Shall give him such an unaccustom'd dram,
That he shall soon keep Tibalt company. Shakspeare.

Their purline worth
The Britons recollect, and gladly change
Sweet native home, for unaccustom'd air. Philips.

An old word ought never to be fixed to an unaccustomed idea, without just and evident necessity.
Watts's Logic.

UNACKNO'WLEDGED. adj. [from acknowledge.] Not owned.

The fear of what was to come from an unknown,
at least an unacknowledged successor to the crown, clouded much of that prosperity. Clarendon.

UNACQUA'INTANCE. n. s. [from acquaintance.] Want of familiarity; want of knowledge: followed by with.

The first is an utter unacquaintance with his master's designs, in those words: The servant knoweth not what his master doth. South.

UNACQUA'INTED. adj. [from acquainted.]

1. Not known; unusual; not familiarly known.

She greatly grew amazed at the sight,
And the unacquainted light began to fear. Spenser.

2. Not having familiar knowledge: followed by with.

Festus, an infidel, a Roman, one whose ears were unacquainted with such matter, heard him, but could not reach unto that whereof he spake. Hooker.

Where else
Shall I inform my unacquainted feet,
In the blind mazes of this tangled world? Milton.

Art thou a courtier,
Or I a King? My ears are unacquainted
With such bold truths, especially from thee. Denham.

Youth, that with joys had unacquainted been,
Envy'd grey hairs, that once good days had seen.
Dryden.

Let us live like those who expect to die, and then we shall find that we feared death only because we were unacquainted with it.
Wake's Preparation for Death.

UNACTIVE. adj. [from active.]

1. Not brisk; not lively.

Silly people commend tame, unactive children, because they make no noise nor give them any trouble. Locke.

2. Having no employment.

Man hath his daily work of body or mind
Appointed, which declares his dignity;
While other animals unactive range,
And of their deities God takes no account. Milton.

3. Not busy; not diligent.

Private, unactive, calm, contemplative;
Little suspicious to any thing. Milton.

An homage which nature commands all understandings to pay to virtue; and yet it is but a faint, unactive thing; for, in defiance of the judgment, the will may still remain as much a stranger to virtue as before. South.

4. Having no efficacy.

In the fruitful earth
His beams, unactive else, their vigour find. Milton.

UNACTUATED. adj. Not actuated.

The peripatetic moister is a mere unactuated power. Glennville.

UNADMIR'ED. adj. Not regarded with honour.

Oh! had I rather unadmired remain'd
In some lone life, or distant northern land,
Where the gilt chariot never marks the way. Pope.

UNADORE'D. adj. Not worshipped.

Nor was his name unheard, or unadored,
In ancient Greece. Milton.

UNADORN'ED. adj. Not decorated; not embellished.

The earth, till then
Desert and bare, unlighted, unadorn'd, Brought forth the tender girls. Milk. Par. Left.
But hoary winter, unadorn'd and bare,
Dwells in the dire retreat, and freezes there. Addison.

UNADVENTUROUS. adj. Not adventurous.

The wisest, unexperienc'd, will be ever
Timorous and loth, with novice modestly Irresolute, unhardy, unadventurous. Milk. Par. Reg.

UNADVISED. adj.

1. Imprudent; indiscreet.

Madam, I have unadvisedly
Deliver'd you a paper that I should not. Shakspeare.

2. Done without due thought; rash.

This contract to-night
Is too rash, too unadvisedly, too sudden,
Too like the lightning which doth cease to be,
Ere one can say, it lightens. Shakspeare. Rom. and Jul.

These prosperous proceedings were turned back by the unadvised forwardness of divers chief counsellors, in making sudden and unreasonable alterations. Hayward.

Specifick conformities can be no unadvised proceedings; but are regulated by the immediate efficiency of some knowing agent. Glennville.

UNADVISEDLY. adv. Imprudently; rashly; indiscreetly.

A strange kind of speech unto Christian ears;
and such as, I hope, they themselves do acknowledge unadvisedly uttered. Hooker.

What man's wit is there able to sound the depth of those dangerous and fearful evils, whereinto our weak and impotent nature is inclinable to sink itself, rather than to show an acknowledgment of error in that which once we have unadvisedly taken upon us to defend, against the stream of a contrary publick resolution? Hooker.

What is done cannot be now amended;
Men shall deal unadvisedly sometimes,
Which after-hours give leisure to repent of. Shakspeare.

A word unadvisedly spoken on the one side, or misunderstood on the other, has raised such an aversion to him, as in time has produced a perfect hatred of him. South.

UNADULTERATED. adj. Genuine; not spoiled by spurious mixtures.

I have only discovered one of those channels,
by which the history of our Saviour might be conveyed pure and unadulterated.
Addison on the Christian Religion.

UNAFFE'CTED. adj.

1. Real; not hypocritical.

They bore the King
To lie in solemn state, a publick sight.

Great cities, and kingdoms fill the crowded plain,
and unaffected sorrow sat on ev'ry face. Dryden.

Lover of peace, and friend of human kind. Pope.

3. Not formed by too rigid observation of rules; not laboured.

Men divinely taught, and better teaching
The solid rules of civil government,
In the majestic, unaffected style,
Than all the oratory of Greece and Rome. Milton.

4. Not moved; not touched; as, he was unaffected to hear the tragedy.

UNAFFE'CTEDLY. adv. Really; without any attempt to produce false appearances.

He was always unaffectedly cheerful; no marks of any thing heavy at his heart broke from him.
Locke.

UNAFE'CTING. adj. Not pathetick; not moving the passions.

UNAFFLICTED. adj. Free from trouble.

My unaffected mind doth see
Of no unholy thoughts for benefit. Daniel's Musophilus.

UNAGREEABLE. adj. Inconsistent; unsuitable.

Advent'rous work! yet to thy pow'r and mine
Not unagreeable, to found a path
Over this main, from hell to that new world. Milk.

UNAGREEABLENESS. n. s. Unsuitable-ness to; inconsistency with.

Perpetual, a holy man, and scholar of St. John, having delivered the millennium, was classed rather to admit a doctrine whose unagreeableness to the gospel economy rendered it useless, than think an apostolick man could seduce them. Ducay of Pirry.

The widest stretch of human thought extends. Blackburne.

UNAIMING. adj. Having no particular direction.

The noisy gulcherin, o'ercharg'd, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the roaded way;
Such frantic flights are like a madman's dream,
And nature suffers in the wild extreme. Grannville.

UNAKING. adj. Not feeling or causing pain.

Show them th' unaking scars which I would hide,
As if I had received them for the hire
Of their breath only. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

UNALIENABLE. adj. Not to be transferred.

Hereditary right should be kept sacred, not from any unalienable right in a particular family; but to avoid the consequences that usually attend the absorption of corporations. Swift.

UNALLAYED. adj. Not impaired by bad mixtures.

Unallayed satisfactions are too heavenly to fall to many men's shares on earth. Boyle.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

The day and year are standard measures, because they are unalterably constituted by those motions.

Holder in Time.

UNALTERED. adj. Not changed; not changeable.

It was thought in him an unpardonable offence to alter any thing; in us intolerable, that we suffer any thing to remain unaltered.

Hooker.

To whom our Saviour, with unalter'd brow
Thy coming hither, though I know thy scope,
I bid not, or forbid.

Milton.

To shew the truth of my unalter'd breast,
Know, that your life was giv'n at my request.

Dryden.

Since these forms begin, and have their end,
On some unalter'd cause they two depend.

Dryden.

Grains and nuts pass often through animals unaltered.

Arbutnot.

Amongst the shells that were fair, inspired, and free from such mineral insinuations, there were some which could not be matched by any species of shell-fish now found upon the sea-shores.

Woodward's Natural History.

Some large crystals at rehearsal unanalysed
Were, appeared to have back of them five flat sides.

Reyn.

UNANCHORED. adj. Not anchored.

A word there is, incho'd on either side,
Which like may rest, unanchored, and unty'd.

Pope.

UNANIMITY. [un and simil.] With out the self-rung. This sense I doubt.

This was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand
Cut off, ev'n in the blossoms of my sin.

Unthought, unappointed, unanims. Shak. Hamlet.

UNANIMATED. adj. Not enlivened; not vivified.

Look on those half lines at the imperfect products of a hasty muse: like the frogs in the Nile, part huddled into life, and part a lump of unenlivened matter.

Dryden.

UNANIMITY. n. f. [unanimitas, French.] Agreement in design or opinion.

An honest party of men acting with unanimity, are of infinitely greater consequence, than the same party aiming at the same end by different views.

Addison.

UNANIMOUS. adj. [unanimes, Fr. unanimis, Latin.] Being of one mind; agreeing in design or opinion.

They went to meet
So oft in festivals of joy, and love
Unanimous, as sons of one great sire,

Humming th' eternal Father. Milton's Par. Lost.

With those which Minos's scepter and Phrygi gave,
All bred in arms, unanims and brave.

UNANIMOUSLY. adv. [from unanims.] With one mind.

This particular is unanimously reported by all the ancient Christian authors.

Addison on the Christian Religion.

This was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand
Cut off, ev'n in the blossoms of my sin,

Unthought, unanims, unanims. Shak. Hamlet.

UNANSWERABLE. adj. Not to be refused.

This is a manifest and unanswerable argument.

Raleigh.

I shall not conclude it false, though I think the emergent difficulties, which are its attendants, unanswerable.

Glaville.

The pope's question was wisely let fall without a reply, to indicate that it was unanswerable. L. Espr.

These speculations are strong intimations, not only of the excellency of a human soul, but of its independence on the body; and if they do not prove, do at least confirm, these two great points, which are established by many other reasons that are unanswerable.

Addison's Spectator.

As to the excuse drawn from the demands of creditors, if it be real, it is unanswerable.

Addison's Spectator.

UNANSWERABLY. adv. Beyond contradiction.

It will not take little labour here to it, to prove, that there can be any obediencies where there is no command. And therefore, unanswerably follows, that the abhorrence of the forsworn principle, plead conscience in a direct and bare-faced contradiction to God's express command.

South.

UNANSWERED. adj.

1. Not opposed by a reply.

Unanswer'd let thou boast. Milton's Par. Lost.

Must I tamely bear?

This arrogance unanswer'd? Thou art a traitor.

Addison.

2. Not confuted.

All these reasons, they say, have been brought, and were hitherto never answered; besides a number of monuments and inscriptions.

Hooker.

3. Not suitably returned.

Quench, Corydon; thy long answer I have Mind what the common woe of the measure.

Dry.

UNAPPALLED. adj. Not daunted; not impressed by fear.

If my memory could but be recalled
To that brave moment when I could recall my senses;
Can thought still thinking be unappalled?

Shak.

UNAPPALLED. adj. Not daunted; not daunted.

Environ'd thee; some how, some yell, some shriek'd;

Some bent at thee their fury darts; while thou
Saw'st unappall'd in calm and steady peace.

As a lion, unappall'd with fear,
Springs on the coils, and rushes on the spear.

Now this appear like gulls, when their serene,
Whiter eye, and village unappall'd.

Fix on that awful face, I stand the charge;
Amaz'd, not fleeing!

Smith's Phœbe and Hippolytus.

UNAPPALLED. adj. Not dressed; not clothed.

In Peru, though they were an unappalled people, and had some customs very barbarous, yet the government of the Incas had many parts of civility.

Bacon's Holy War.

Till our souls be unappalled
Of bodies, they from bliss are banished.

UNAPPARENT. adj. Obscure; not visible.

Thy potent voice he hears,
And longer will delay to hear thee tell
His generation, and the rising birth
Of nature, from the unapparent deep.

UNAPPASABLE. adj. Not to be pacified; implacable.

The unappasable rage of Hildebrand and his successors never left persecuting him, by raising one rebellion upon another.

I see thou art implacable; more deaf
To pray than winds to seas; yet winds to seas
Are reconcil'd at length, and seas to shores.

Thy anger, unappasable, still rages,
Eternal tempest never to be calm'd.

UNAPPASABLE. adj. Not pacified.

Sacrifice his flesh,
That to the shadows be not unappas'd.

His son forgot, his empire unappas'd;
How soon that tyrant with new love is seiz'd!

UNAPPLICABLE. adj. [from apply.] Such as cannot be applied.

Oratitude, by being confined to the few, has a very narrow province to work on, being acknowledged to be unapplicable, and so consequently ineffectual to all others.

Their beloved earl of Manchester appeared now as unapplicable to their purposes as the other.

The singing out, and laying in order, those intermediate ideas, that demonstratively shew the equality or inequality of unapplicable quantities, has produced discoveries.

UNAPPREHENDED. adj. Not understood.

They of whom God is altogether unapprehended, are but few in number, and for grossness of wit such that they hardly seem to hold the place of human beings.

UNAPPREHENSIVE. adj. [from apprehend.]

1. Not intelligent; not ready of conception.

The same temper of mind makes a man unapprehensive and incapable of any misery suffered by others.

2. Not suspecting.

3. Unfit; not qualified; with or before a verb, for before a noun.

Fear, death grow from an apprehension of duty Inured with insupportable power to hurt; and is, of all affections (anger excepted) the strongest to admit any confidence with reason. Hooker

A longing after sensual pleasures is a dissolution of the spirit of a man, and makes it loose, lost and wandering; unfit for noble, wife, or spiritual employment. Taylor

4. Improper; unfit; unsuitable.

UNAPTLY. adv. [from unapt.] Unfitly; improperly.

He swims on his back; and the shape of his back seems to favour it; being very like the bottom of a boat: nor do his hinder legs unaptly resemble a pair of oars. Græw

UNFITNESS. n. f. [from unapt.]

1. Unfitness; unsuitableness.

Men's apparel is commonly made according to their conditions, and their conditions are often governed by their garments; for the person that is gowned, is by his gown put in mind of gravity, and also restrained from lightness by the very unaptiness of his weed. Spenser

2. Dulness; want of apprehension.

That unaptness made you minister
Thus to excite yourself. Shakespeare's Timon

3. Unreadiness; disqualification; want of propension.

The mind, by being engaged in a task beyond its strength, like the body strained by lifting at a weight too heavy, has often its force broken, and thereby gets an unaptness or an aversion to any vigorous attempt ever after. Locke

UNARGUED. adj. [from argus.]

1. Not disputed.

What thou bid'st,
Unargued I obey; for God ordains. Milt. Par. Lost

Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day. Shak.
Unarm me, Eros; the long day's task is done,
And we must sleep. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra Galen would not leave unto the world a treatise a theory of poisons; unarming thereby the malice of venomous spirits. Brown's Pulgar Struara

UNARMED. adj. [from unarm.] Having no armour; having no weapons.

On the western coast
Blotch a puissant navy: to our shores
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends,
Unarmed, and unresolv'd, to beat them back. Shak.

He all unarm'd
Shall chase thee with the terror of his voice.
From thy demoplack holds, possession foul;
Thence and thy legions, yelling they shall fly,
And beg to hide them in a herd of swine. Milton

Though unarm'd I am,
Here, without ray sword or pointed lance,
Hope not, base man, suggestion'd hence to go.
Dryden

Whence most other creatures are furnished with weapons for their defence; man is born altogether
unarmed. Græw

UNARRANGED. adj. Not brought to a trial.

As lawful lord, and king by just descent,
Should here be judg'd, unheard, and unarranged. Daniel

UNARRA'YED. adj. Not dressed.

As if this infant world yet unarray'd
Naked and bare, in Nature's lap were laid. Dryden

Half unarray'd, he ran to his relief,
So happy and so artful was his grief. Dryden

UNARTFUL. adj.

1. Having no art, or cunning.

A cheerful sweetness in his looks he has,
And innocence unartful in his face. Dryden's Troilus

2. Wanting skill.

How unartful would it have been to have let him in a corner, where he was to have given light and warning to all the bodies round him!
Chubb's Philosophical Principles

UNARTFULY. adv. In an unartful manner.

In the report, although it be not unartfully drawn, and is perfectly in the spirit of a pleader, there is no great skill required to detect the many mistakes. Swift's Miscellaneous

UNARTIFICIALLY. adv. Contrarily to art.

Not a feather is unartificially made, misplaced, redundant, or defective. Darham's Physico-Theology

UNASKED. adj.

1. Not courted by solicitation.

With what eagerness, what circumstance,
Unask'd, thou tak'st such pains to tell me only My son's the better man. Dickens's Sketch

2. Not fought by treaty or care.

The bearded corn unask'd
From earth unask'd, nor was that earth renew'd.
Dryden

How, or why
Should all conspire to cheat us with a lie?
Unask'd their pains, unartful their advice;
Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price.
Dryden

UNASPIRING. adj. Not ambitious.

To be modest and unaspiring, in honour preferring one another. Rogers

UNASSAILABLE. adj. Exempt from as- sault.

In the number, I do but know one,
That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar

UNASSAILED. adj. Not attacked; not assailed.

As I unassail'd, Clifford, to thrive to-day,
It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd. Shak.

I believe
That he, the supreme good, whom all things ill
Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
Would send a gliding guardian, if need were,
To keep my life and honour unassail'd. Milt. Comus

UNASSAYED. adj. Unattempted.

What is faith, love, virtue unassay'd
Alone, without exterior help sustain'd? Milton

UNASSISTED. adj. Not helped.

Its victories were the victories of reason, unassisted by the force of human power, and as gentle as the triumphs of light over darkness. Addis's Freeholder
What unassisted reason could not discover, that God has set clearly before us in the revelation of the gospel: a felicity equal to our most enlarged desires; a state of immortal and unchangeable glory.
Rogers

UNASSISTING. adj. Giving no help.

With these I went, a brother of the war;
Not idle hand, with unassisting hands,
When swains boath, and men a more savage band,
Their virtuous toll subdu'd; yet these I unassisted. Dryden

UNASSUMING. adj. Not arrogant.

Unassuming worth in secret liv'd,
And dies neglected. Johnson's Winter

UNASSUR'D. adj.

1. Not confident.

The ensuing theatre, with a numerous and unassur'd countenance, advances to your presence.
Granville

2. Not to be trusted.

The doubt and danger, the delays and woes,
The feign'd friends, the unassur'd face,
Do make a lover's life a wretch's hell. Spenser

UNATTEMPTED. adj. Not expiated.

Could you afford him such a bribe as that,
A brother's blood yet unattem'd? Rowe

UNATTAINABLE. adj. Not to be gained or obtained; being out of reach.

Peace and prayer are God's due worship; which are unattainable by our discourses, simply conceived, without the benefit of divine revelation.

I do not expect that men should be perfectly kept from error; that is more than human nature can, by any means, be advanced to; I aim at no such unattainable privilege; I only speak of what they should do. Locke

UNATTAINABLENESS. n. f. State of be- ing out of reach.

Desire is stopped by the opinion of the impossibility, or unattainableness of the good proposed. Locke

UNATTEMPTED. adj. Untried; not at- tempted.

He left no means unattempted of destroying his son. Shakspere

Not that I have the power to clutch my hands;
When his fair angel would salute my palms;
But that my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, rattleth on the rich. Shakespeare
It pursues
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme. Milton

Leave nothing unattempted to destroy
That perjur'd race. Dequaw

Shall we be discouraged from any attempt of doing good, by the possibility of our failing in it?
How many of the best things would, at this rate, have been left unattempted! Atterbury

UNATTENDED. adj.

1. Having no retinue, or attendants.

With goddess-like demure forth she went,
Not unattended. Milton's Paradise Lost

2. Having no followers.

Such unattended generals can never make a revolution in Persia. Dryden

3. Unaccompanied; forsaken.

Your constancy
Hath left you unattended. Shakespeare's Macbeth

UNATTENDING. adj. Not attending.

Ill is lost that profits,
That is address'd to unattending ears. Milton

Ev'ry nymph of the flood, her vestments trailing, Throwt off her armlet of pearl in the main;
Neptune in anguish his charge unattending,
Vessels are found'ring and vovs are in vain. Dryden

UNATTENTIVE. adj. Not regarding.

Man's nature is so unattentive to good, that there can scarce be too many monitors.

Government of the Tongue
Such things are not accompanied with show, and therefore seldom draw the eyes of the unattentive. Taylor

UNAVAILABLE. adj. Useless; vain with respect to any purpose.

When we have endeavoured to find out the strongest causes, wherefore they should imagine that reading is so unavailable, the most we can learn is, that sermons are the ordinance of God, the scriptures dark, and the labour of reading easy.
Hooker

UNAVAILING. adj. Useless; vain.

Shedding inevitable death you know,
You unavailingly bewailing pity show:
The popular to mourn a dying love. Dryden's Annals
Supine he tumbles on the crimson sands,
Before his helpless friends and native hands,
And spreads for aid his unavailing hands. Long

UNAVOIDABLE. adj.

1. Inevitable; not to be shunned.

Oppression on one side, and ambition on the other, are the unavoidable occasions of war. Dryden
It is unavoidable to all, to have opinions out certain proofs of their truth.
Single acts of transgression will, through the acts and surpluses, be unavoidable to the last point.

The merits of Christ will make up the unavoidable deficiencies of our service; will prevail for pardon to our sincere repentance. Regent.

All sentiments of worldly grandeur vanish at that unavoidable moment, which decides the destiny of men. Clarissa.

2. Not to be missed in ratiocination.

That something is of itself, is self-evident; because we see things are; and the things that we see must either have had some first cause of their being, or have been always, and of themselves: one of them is unavoidable. Tilleyson.

I think it unavoidable for every rational creature, that will examine his own or any other existence, to have the notion of an eternal; wise being, who had no beginning. Locke.

UNAVOIDABLENESS. n. f. Inevitability.

How can we conceive it subject to material impressions? and yet the importunity of pain, and unavoidable objects of sensations, strongly persuade that we are so. Glarville.

UNAVOIDABLY. adv. Inevitably.

The most perfect administration must unavoidably produce opposition from multitudes who are made happy by it. Addison.

UNAVOIDED. adj. Inevitable.

We see the very wreck that we must suffer; and unavoided is the danger now. Shakespeare.

Rare poems ask rare titlids;
Yet satyrs, since the most of mankind be Their unavoided subject, fewest lie. Ben Jonson.

UNAUTHORISED. adj. Not supported by authority; not properly commissioned.

To kiss in private?

An unauthorized kiss. Shakespeare's Othello.

It is for you to ravage seas and land,
Unauthorized by my supreme command. Dryden.

UNAWARE. } adv. [from aware, or UNAWARES. } advary.

1. Without thought; without previous meditation.

Take heed lest you fall unawares into that inconvenience you formerly found fault with. Spenser.

It is my father's face,

Whom, in this conflict, I unawares have kill'd. Shakespeare.

Firm we subsist; yet possible to swerve,
And fall into deception unaware. Milton.

A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,
Of wine and honey mix'd; with added store
Of opium: to his keeper this he brought,
Who swallow'd unawares the sleepy draught,
And snor'd secure. Dryden.

'Tis a sensation like that of a limb lopped off;
one is trying every minute unawares to use it, and finds it is not. Pope.

2. Unexpectedly; when it is not thought of; suddenly.

Let destruction come upon him at unawares, and let his net that he hath hid, catch himself. Psalms. xxxvi. 8.

My hand, unawares to me, was by the force of that endeavour it just before employ'd to sustain the fallen weight, carried up with such violence, that I bruised it. Boyle.

Though we live never so long, we are still surprized:
we put the evil day far from us, and then it catches us unawares, and we tremble at the prospect. Waller.

3. In this sense I believe at unawares is the proper use.

He breaks at unawares upon our walks,
And, like a midnight wolf, invades the fold. Dryden.

UNAWED. adj. Unrestrained by fear or reverence.

The raging and fanatic distemper of the house of commons must be attributed to the want of such good ministers of the crown, as, being unawed by any guilt of their own, could have watched other men's. Clarendon.

Unawed by punishment, unawed by fear,
His words were simple, and his soul sincere. Dryden.

UNBARR'D. adj.

1. Not fained; not taught to bear the rider.

Then I beat my labor;

As which, like unbarr'd colts, they prick'd their ears,

Advanc'd their eyelids, lifted up their noses,
As they smelt musick. Shakespeare's Tempest.

A well-wayed horse will safely convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbarr'd filly may give thee a fall. Suckling.

They flinch like unbarr'd fillies. Dennis's Letters.

2. Not countenanced; not aided.

Let the weight of thine own infamy

Fall on thee unsupported, and unbarr'd. David's Civil War.

UNBALANCED. adj. Not poised; not in equipoise.

Let earth unbalance'd from her orbit fly,
Planets and suns run lawless through the sky. Pope.

UNBALLASTED. adj. Not kept steady by ballast; unsteady.

They having but newly left those grammatical flats, where they struck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable construction; and now on the sudden transported under another climate, to be tost and tumolled with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy, do, for the most part, grow into hatred of learning. Milton.

As at sea th' unballast vessel rides,

Cast to and fro, the sport of winds and tides;

So, in the bounding chariot tost on high,
The youth is hurled headlong through the sky. Addison.

UNBAND'D. adj. [from band.] Wanting a string, or band.

Your horse should be ungartered, your bonnet unbanded, and every thing demonstrating a careless delation. Shakespeare.

To UNBAR. v. a. [from bar.] To open, by removing the bars; to unbolt.

'Tis not secure, this place or that to guard;

If any other entrance stand unbar'd. Danbom.

These rites the king refus'd,

Deaf to their cries; nor would the gates unbar

Of sacred peace, or loose th' imprison'd war. Dryden.

UNBARRED. adj. [barba, Latin.] Not shaven. Out of use.

Must I go shew them my unbarred scone?

Must my bare tongue give to my noble heart

A lie? Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

UNBARKED. adj. [from bark.] Decoricated; stripped of the bark.

A branch of a tree, unbarked some space at the bottom, and so set in the ground, hath grown. Baron.

UNBASHFUL. adj. Impudent; shameless.

Nor did I with unbashful forehead woo

The means of weakness and debility. Shakespeare.

UNBATED. adj. [from bate.] Not repressed; not blunted.

Where is the horse, that doth untread again

His tedious measures with th' unbated fire

That he did pace them first? Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

UNBATH'D. adj. [from bath.] Not wet.

Pierce Pasimond, their passage to prevent,

Thrust full on Cymon's back in his descent;

The blade return'd unbath'd, and to the handle

hent. Dryden.

UNBATTERED. adj. Not injured by blows.

I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms

Are hir'd to bear their slaves; or thou, Macbeth;

Or else my sword, with an unbatter'd edge,

I sheath again undecided. Shakespeare.

To UNBAY. v. a. To set open; to free from the restraint of mounds.

I ought now to loose the reins of my affections, to unbay the current of my passion, and love on without boundary or measure. Norris's Miscellany.

UNBEARING. adj. Bringing no fruit.

He with his pruning hook dispatching

Unbearing branches from their heads,

And grafts more happy in their stead. Dryden.

UNBEATEN. adj.

1. Not treated with blows.

His mare was truer than his chronicle;

For she had rode five miles unpurr'd, unbeaten,

And then at last turn'd tail towards Newmarket. Bp. Corbet.

2. Not trodden.

We must tread unbeaten paths, and make a way where we do not find one; but it shall be always with a light in our hand. Beacon.

If your bold muse dare tread unbeaten paths.

Virtue, to crown her favorites, loves to try

Some new, unbeaten passage to the sky. Swift.

UNBECOMING. adj. Indecent; unsuitable; indecorous.

Here's our chief guest. —

—If he had been forgotten,

It had been as a gape in our great feast,

And all things unbecom'g. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

No thought of flight,

None of retreat, no unbecoming deed

That argu'd fear. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I should rather believe that the nose was the seat of wrath in brats than in mankind; and that it was unbecoming of any but Pan, who had very much of the beast in him, to wrinkle up his nose in anger. Dryden.

My grief lets unbecoming speeches fall;

I should have dy'd, and not complain'd at all. Dryden.

This petulancy in conversation prevails among some of that sex, where it appears the most unbe- coming and unnatural. Addison's Freeholder.

Men of wit, learning, and virtue, might strike out every offensive or unbecoming passage from plays. Swift.

Such proceed upon debates without unbecom'g warinth. Swift.

UNBECOMINGNESS. n. f. Indecency; indecorum.

If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind and sober, reprobating the ill or unbecomingness of the fault. Locke.

To UNBED. v. a. To raise from a bed.

Each unbed themselves, and stir at the noise of thunder. Waller's Angier.

UNBEGITTING. adj. Not becoming; not suitable.

Love is full of unbegitting strains,

All wanton as a child, sleeping in vain. Shakespeare.

Far be it that I should write thee sin, or blame!

Or think thee unbegitting holiest place. Milton.

He might several times have made peace with his discontented subjects, upon terms not at all un- begitting his dignity or interest; but he rather chose to sacrifice the whole alliance to his private passion. Swift.

To UNBEGE'T. v. n. To deprive of existence.

Wishes each minute he could unbeget

Those rebel sons who dare t' usurp his seat. Dryden.

UNBEGOT. } adj. [from begot.]

UNBEGOTTEN. } adj. [from begot.]

1. Eternal; without generation.

Why should he attribute the same honour to matter, which is subject to corruption, as to the eternal, unbegotten, and immutable God? Stillingfl.

2. Not yet generated.

God omnipotent, must 'ring

Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike

Your children yet unborn, and unbeget. Shakespeare.

In thy pow'r

It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent

The race unbegot, to being yet unbeget. Milton.

3. Not attaining existence.

Where a child finds his own parents his perversert, better were it for him to have been unborn and unbeguile, than ask a blessing of those whose conversation breathes nothing but a curse. Southey.

TO UNBEGUILE. v. a. To undeceive; to set free from the influence of any deceit.

Then unbeguile thyself, and know with me, That angels, though on earth employ'd they be, Are still in heav'n. Donne.

Their comeliness unbeguiled the vulgar of the odd opinion the loyalists had formerly infused in to them, by their concionatory invectives. Howell's Vocal Forest.

UNBEHELD. adj. Unseen; not discoverable to the sight.

These then, though unbeheld in deep of night, Shine not in vain. Milton.

UNBELIEF. n. f.

1. Incredulity.

'Tis not vain or fabulous, What the sage poets, taught by th' heav'nly muse, Storied of old in high immortal verse, Of dire chimeras, and enchanted liles, And rifled rocks, whose entrance leads to hell; For such there be: but unbelief is blind. Milton.

I'm justly plagued by this your unbelief, And am myself the cause of my own grief. Dryd. Such an universal acquaintance with things will keep you from an excess of credulity and unbelief; i. e. a readiness to believe or to deny every thing at first hearing. Watts.

2. Infidelity; irreligion.

Where profess'd unbelief is, there can be no visible church of Christ; there may be where sound belief wanteth. Hooker.

TO UNBELIEVE. v. a.

1. To discredit; not to trust.

Heav'n shield your grace from woe, As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go! Shakspeare. So great a prince and favourite so suddenly metamorphosed into travellers with no greater train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses. Watson's Buckingham.

2. Not to think real or true.

Nor less than sight and hearing could convince Of such an unforeseen and unbelieved offence. Dryden.

UNBELIEVER. n. f. An infidel; one who believes not the scripture of God.

The ancient fathers being often constrained to shew what warrant they had so much to rely upon the scriptures, endeavoured still to maintain the authority of the books of God, by arguments such as unbelievers themselves must needs think reasonable, if they judged thereof as they should. Hooker.

What endless war would jealous nations tear, If none above did witness what they swear? Sad fate of unbelievers, and yet just, Among themselves to find so little trust. Wallace.

In the New Testament, religion is usually expressed by faith in God and Christ, and the love of them. Hence it is that true Christians are so frequently called believers; and wicked and godly men unbelievers. Tullisen.

He pronounces the children of such parents as were, one of them a Christian, and the other an unbeliever, holy, on account of the faith and holiness of that one. Atterbury.

Men always grow vicious before they become unbelievers; but if you would once convince prodigates by topics drawn from the view of their own quiet, reputation, and health, their infidelity would soon drop off. Swift's Miscellaneous.

UNBELIEVING. adj. Infidel.

No stay of slaughter found his vigorous arm; But th' unbelieving squadrons turn'd to flight, Smote in the rear. Philips.

This wrought the greatest confusion in the unbelieving Jews, and the greatest conviction in the Gentiles. Addison.

In the days of the apostles, when all who professed themselves disciples of Christ were converts of conscience, this severe censure might be restrained to the unbelieving part of mankind. Rogers.

UNBELOVED. adj. Not loved.

Whoe'er you are, not unbelov'd by heav'n, Since on our friendly shore your ships are driven. Dryden.

TO UNBEND. v. a.

1. To free from flexure.

It is lawful to relax and unbend our bow, but not to suffer it to be unready, or unstrung. Taylor's Holy Living.

I must be in the battle; but I'll go With empty quiver, and unbended bow. Dryden.

2. To relax; to remit; to set at ease for a time.

Here have I seen the king, when great affairs Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares, Attended to the chase by all the flow'rs of youth. Dunham.

From those great cares when ease your soul unbends, Your pleasures are design'd to noble ends. Dryd.

3. To relax vitiously or effeminately.

You unbend your noble strength, to think So brain-sickly of things. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

UNBENDING. adj.

1. Not suffering flexure.

Not so, when swift Camilla scours the plain, Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main. Pope.

2. Not yielding; resolute.

Ye noble few, who here unbending stand Beneath life's pressures, yet a little while, And all your woes are past. Thomson.

3. Devoted to relaxation.

Since what was omitted in the acting is now kept in, I hope it may entertain your lordship at an unbending hour. Roscoe.

UNBELAPICED. adj. Not preferred to a benefice.

More vacant pulpits would more converts make; All would have latitude enough to take: The rest unbelapic'd your tests maintain. Dryden.

UNBENEVOLENT. adj. Not kind.

A religion which not only forbids, but by its natural influence sweetens all bitterness and asperity of temper, and corrects that selfish narrowness of spirit which inclines men to a fierce unbenevolent behaviour. Rogers.

UNBENIGHTED. adj. Never visited by darkness.

Beyond the polar circles; to them day Had unbenighted shone, while the low sun, To recompense his distance, in then fight Had rounded still the horizon. Milton's Paradise Lost.

UNBENIGN. adj. Malignant; malevolent.

To th' other five Their planetary motions, and aspects, In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite, Of noxious efficacy; and when to join In sign unbenign. Milton's Paradise Lost.

UNBENT. adj.

1. Not strained by the string.

Apollo heard, and, conquering his disdain, Unbent his bow, and Greece inspir'd again. Dryd.

2. Having the bow unstrung.

Why hast thou gone so far, To be unbent when thou hast ta'en thy stand, Th' elected deer before thee? Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

3. Not crushed; not subdued.

But thou, secure of soul, unbent with woes, The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppose. Dryden.

4. Relaxed; not intent.

Be not always on affairs intent, But let thy thoughts be easy and unbent: When our mind's eyes are disengag'd and free, They clearer, farther, and distinctly see. Dunham.

UNBESSEMING. adj. Unbecoming.

No emotion of passion transported me by the indignity of his carriage, to do or say any thing unbesseming myself. King Charles.

Far be the spirit of the chase from them! Uncourteous courage, unbecoming skill. Thomson.

UNBESTOWED. adj. Not intreated.

Let him, should injure us, his timely care Hath, unbestow'd, provided; and his hands Cloath'd us powerfully; plying while he judg'd. Addison.

UNBESTOWED. adj. Not given; not disposed of.

He had now but one son and one daughter unbestow'd. Roscoe.

UNBETRAYED. adj. Not betrayed.

Many being privy to the fact, How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd! Daniel's Civil War.

UNBEWAILED. adj. Not lamented.

Let determin'd things to destiny Hold unbewail'd their way. Shakspeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

TO UNBEWITCH. v. a. [from witch.]

To free from fascination.

TO UNBIASS. v. a. To free from any external motive; to disentangle from prejudice.

That our understandings may be free to examine, and reason unbiased give its judgment, being that whereon a right direction of our conduct to true happiness depends; it is in this we should employ our chief care. Locke.

The standing evidences of the gospel, every time they are considered, gain upon sincere, unbiased minds. Atterbury.

The truest service a private man may do his country, is by unbiasing his mind, as much as possible, between the rival powers. Swift.

Where's the man who counsel can bestow, Unbias'd or by favour or by spite; Not dully prepossess'd, nor blindly right? Pope.

UNBIASSEDLY. adv. Without external influence; without prejudice.

I have sought the true meaning; and have unbiasedly embraced what, upon a fair enquiry, appeared to me. Locke.

UNBID. } adj.

UNBIDDEN. } adj.

1. Uninvited.

Unbidden guests Are often welcomest when they are gone. Shakspeare.

2. Uncommanded; spontaneous.

Thou hast also and thickest it shall bring thee forth Unbid. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Roses unbid, and ev'ry fragrant flower, Flew from their stalks, to strow thy nuptial hour. Dryden.

Unbidden earth shall wroathing Ivy bring, And fragrant herbs, the promises of spring. Dryd.

UNBICORROD. adj. Free from bigotry.

Erasmus, who was an unbicorrod Roman Catholic, was so much transported with this passage of Socrates, that he could scarce forbear looking upon him as a saint, and desiring him to pray for him. Addison.

TO UNBIND. v. a. [from bind.] To loose; to untie.

His own woe's author, who's bound it finds, As did Pyrocles, and it wistfully unbind. Spenser.

Ye Latian dames, If there be here, who dare maintain My right, nor think the name of mother vain, Unbind your filets, loose your flowing hairs, And orgies and nocturnal rites prepare. Dryden.

On the fifth instant it was thought fit to unbind his head. Trotter.

TO UNBISHOP. v. a. [from bishop.] To deprive of episcopal orders.

I cannot look upon Titus as so far unbishops'd yet, but that he still exhibits to us all the unbishops'd jurisdiction. Southey.

UNBITTED. adj. [from bite.] Unbridled; unrestrained.

We have reason to cool our raging passions, our carnal unbitten, our unbitten lusts, unbitten this love to be a sect or dogma. Southey's Sonnets.

UNBLESSED. adj.

UNBLAMABLE, adj. Not culpable; not to be charged with a fault.

Much more could I say concerning this unblamable inequality of fines and rates. Bacon.

He lov'd his people, him they idoliz'd;
And thence proceeds my mortal hatred to him;
That, thus unblamable to all beside,
He err'd to me alone. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

UNBLAMABLY, adv. Without taint of fault.

Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblamably we behaved ourselves. 1 Thess. ii. 10.

UNBLAMED, adj. Blameless; free from fault.

Shall spend your days in joy unblam'd, and dwell long time in peace. Milton's Paradise Lost.

What time this dame rever'd her prudent lord,
Who now is doom'd to mourn. Pope's Odyssey.

UNBLEMISHED, adj. Free from turpitude; free from reproach; free from deformity.

O welcome, pure-eyed faith, white-handed hope!
Thou hovering angel, girt with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity! Ashton's Comus.

Under this stone lies virtue, youth,
Unblemish'd probity, and truth. Waller.

Is none worthy to be made a wife
In all this town? Suppose her free from strife, Rich, fair, and fruitful; of unblemish'd life. Dryd.

They appointed, out of these new converts, men
Of the best sense, and of the most unblemish'd lives,
To preside over these several assemblies. Addison.

UNBLEMISHED, adj. Not disgraced; not injured by any foil.

There, where very desolation dwells,
She may pass on with unblemish'd majesty;
Be it not done in pride, or in presumption. Milton.

UNBLEMISHED, adj. Not mingled.

None can boast a knowledge deposite from defilement, within this atmosphere of flesh; it dwells no where in unblemish'd proportions on this side the empyrean. Glanville.

UNBLEST, adj.

1. Accursed; excluded from benediction.

It is a shameful and unblest thing, to take the frum of people, and wicked, condemned men, to be the people with whom you plant. Bacon.

2. Wretched; unhappy.

In thy power
It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot. Milton.

What is true passion, that unblest it dies?
And where is woman's joy, if Henry flies? Prior.

UNBLOODED, adj. Not stained with blood.

Who find the parti dge in the puttock's nest,
But may miss, ere how the bird is dead,
Although the kite tear with edied beak. Shak.

UNBLOODY, adj. Not cruel; not shedding blood; not stained with blood.

Under the ledge of Atlas lies a cave,
The venerable seat of holy hermits,
Who there, secure in separated cells,
From the purring streams, and savage fruits,
Have wholesome beverage and unbloody feasts. Dryden.

On Dardan plains,
The fresh, and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions. Shaksp. Henry.
Care keeps his watch in ev'ry old man's eye;
And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie;
But where unbruised youth, with untruff brain,
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign. Shaksp. Henry.

TO UNBUCKLE. v. a. To loose from buckles.
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms; sitting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shak. Coriol.
He that unbuckles this, till we do please
To doff't for our purpose, shall hear a storm. Shaksp. Henry.

TO UNBURIED. v. a. To raze to destroy.
This is the way to kindle, not to quench;
T' unbuild the city, and to lay all flat. Shaksp. Henry.
What will they then but unbuild
His living temples, built by faith to stand;
Their own faith, not another's? Milt. Par. Lost.

UNBUILT. adj. Not yet erected.
Built walls you shun, unbuilt you see. Dryden

UNBURIED. adj. Not interred; not honoured with the rites of funeral.
Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburied yet,
To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx? Shaksp.
The moss, which growth upon the skull of a dead man unburied, will staunch blood potently. Bacon.

Him double cares attend,
For thy unburied soldiers, and his friend. Dryden.
Breathless he lies, and his unbury'd ghost,
Depriv'd of funeral rites, pollutes your host. Dryd.
The wand'ring ghosts
Of kings unbury'd on the wasted coasts. Pope's Statius.

UNBURNED. adj.
UNBURNED. adj.
1. Not consumed; not wasted; not injured by fire.
Creon denies the rites of fun'ral fires to those,
Whose breathless bodies yet he calls his sons;
Unburn'd, unburied, on a heap they lie. Dryden.

2. Not heated with fire.
Burnt wine is more hard and astringent than wine unburnt. Bacon's Natural History.

UNBURNING. adj. Not consuming by heat.
What we have said of the unburning fire called light, streaming from the flame of a candle, may easily be applied to all other light deprived of sensible heat. Digby.

TO UNBURTHEN. v. a.
1. To rid of a load.
We'll shake all cares and bus'ness from our age, Confering them on younger strengths; while we Unburden'd crawl toward death. Shak. King Lear.

2. To throw off.
Sharp Buckingham unburthens with his tongue
The envious load that lies upon his heart. Shak.

3. To disclose what lies heavy on the mind.
From your love I have a warranty
T' unburthen all my plots and purposes,
How to get clear of all the debts I owe. Shaksp.

TO UNBUTTON. v. a. To loose any thing buttoned.
Thou art fat-witted with drinking old sack, and unbuttoning thee after supper. Shaksp. Henry IV.
Many catch cold on the breast, by leaving their doublets unbuttoned. Harvey on Consumption.
His silk waistcoat was unbuttoned in several places. Addison.

UNCALCINED. adj. Free from calcination.

carried up with it uncalcined gold in the form of subtle exhalations. Boyle.

UNCALLED. adj. Not summoned; not sent for; not demanded.
Basilus had servants, who, though they came not uncalled, yet at call were ready. Sidney.
He, bolder now, uncall'd before her food. Milt.
Mild Lucina came uncall'd, and stood Beside the struggling boughs, and heard the groan,
Then reach'd her midwife hand to speed the throes. Dryden.

TO UNCA'LM. v. a. To disturb. A harsh word.
What strange disquiet has uncaim'd your breast,
Inhuman fair, to rob the dead of rest? Dryden.

UNCA'LLER. adj. Not crafted; not abrogated.
I only mourn my yet uncaim'd score;
You put me past the pow'r of paying more. Dryde

UNCANONICAL. adj. Not agreeable to the canons.
UNCA'PABLE. adj. [inca'pable, Fr. incapax, Lat.] Not capable; not susceptible. Now more frequently inca'pable.
Thou art come to answer
A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch,
Unca'pable of pity, void and empty
From any dram of mercy. Shak. Merch. of Venice.
He who believes himself unca'pable of passion, goes on without any care of reforming. Hammond.
This, whilst they are under the deceit of it, makes them unca'pable of conviction; and they applaud themselves as zealous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for error. Shaksp.

UNCA'RED FOR. adj. Not regarded; not attended to.
Their kings, to better their worldly estate, left their own and their people's ghastly condition uncared for. Addison.

UNCA'RNATE. adj. Not fleshly.
Nor need we be afraid to ascribe that to the incarnate Son, which sometimes is attributed unto the unca'rnate Father. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO UNCA'VE. v. a.
1. To disengage from any covering.
See Pompey is unca'ving for the combat. Shak.
Thou shalt be master, Tranio, in my stead.
'Tis hatch'd, and shall be so: Tranio, at once
Unca've thee; take my colour'd hat and cloak. Shaksp. Henry.
Unca've me, and do with me what you please. Addison.

2. To flay; to strip.
All men him unca'ved 'gan deride. Hubb. Ta's.
Partly by his voice, and partly by his ears, the ass was discovered; and consequently unca'ved, well laughed at, and well cudgelled. L. Trange.

UNCAUGHT. adj. Not yet caught.
Let him fly far,
Not in this land shall he remain uncaught;
And found, dispatch'd. Shaksp. King Lear.
His bosom glows with treasures yet uncaught. Gay.

UNCA'USED. adj. Having no precedent cause.
UNCA'UTIONS. adj. Not wary; heedless.
Unforeseen, they say, is unprepa'd:
Uncautions Arctite thought himself alone. Dryden.

UNCA'LEBRATED. adj. Not solemnized.
Thus was the first day, ev'n and morn;
Nor pass'd uncelebrated, nor unring
By the celestial choirs. Milton's Paradise Lost.

UNCA'NSURED. adj. Exempt from publick reproach.
How difficult must it be for any ruler to live unca'nsured, where every one of the community is thus qualified for modelling the constitution! Addison's Freeholder.

Fear most to tax an honourable fool,
Whose right it is unca'nsur'd to be dull. Pope.
To be unca'nsured, and to be obscure, is the same thing. Pope's Letters.

A constant undulatory motion is perceived by looking through telescopes. Arbuthnot on Air.

UNDULY. adv. Not properly; not according to duty.

Men unduly exercise their zeal against persons; not only against evil persons, but against those that are the most venerable. Spratt's Sermons.

UNDUTIOUS. adj. Not performing duty; irreverent; disobedient.

She and I, long since contrasted,
Are now so far, that nothing can dissolve us;
And th's deceit takes the name of craft,
Or disobedience, or undutious title. Shakespeare.

In Latium safe he lay,
From his undutious sun, and his usurping way. Dryden.

UNDUTIFUL.

UNDUTIFUL. adj. Not obedient; not reverent.

England thinks it no good policy to have that realm planted with English, lest they should grow so undutiful as the Irish, and become more dangerous. Spenser's Ireland.

No man's reason did ever dictate to him, that it is fit for a creature not to love God; to be undutiful to his great sovereign, and ungrateful to his best benefactor. Tillotson.

UNDUTIFULLY. adv. [from undutiful.] Not according to duty.

The fish had long in Caesar's ponds been fed, And from its lord undutifully fled. Dryd. Juvenal.

UNDUTIFULNESS. n. f. Want of respect; irreverence; disobedience.

I should have thought they would rather have held in, and stand all the other from undutifulness, than need to be forced thereunto themselves. Spenser's Ireland.

Forbidding undutifulness to superiors, sedition and rebellion against magistracy. Tillotson.

UNDYING. adj. Not destroyed; not perishing.

Driven down
To chains of darkness, and th' undying worm. Milton.

UNEARNED. adj. Not obtained by labour or merit.

As I am honest Puck,
If we have unearned luck,
Now to 'scape the serpent's tongue,
We will make amends ere long. Shakespeare.
Our work is brought to little, though begun
Early, and th' hour of supper comes unearn'd. Milton.

Wilt thou rather chuse
To lie supinely, hoping heaven will bless Thy slighted suits, and give thee bread unearn'd. Philips.

UNEARTHED. adj. Driven from the den in the ground.

The robber of the fold
Is from his craggy, winding haunts unearth'd. Tibbison.

UNEARTHLY. adj. Not terrestrial.

This sacrifice
How ceremonious, solemn, and unearthly
It was! th' offering! Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

UNEASILY. adv. Not without pain.

He lives uneasily under the burden. L'Estrange.
They make mankind their enemy by their unjust actions, and consequently live more uneasily in the world than other men. Tillotson.

UNEASINESS. n. f. Trouble; perplexity; state of disquiet.

Not a subject
Sits in heart-grief and uneasiness,
Under the sweet shade of your government. Shak.
The same uneasiness which every thing
Gives to our nature, life must also bring. Denham.
We may be said to live like those who have their hope in another life, if we bear the uneasiness that befall us here with constancy. Atterbury.

Men are dissatisfied with their station, and create to themselves all the uneasiness of want. They fancy themselves poor, and under this persuasion feel all the disquiet of real poverty. Rogers.

His majesty will maintain his just authority over them; and whatever uneasiness they may give themselves, they can create none in him. Addison's Freeholder.

The libels against his grandfather, that fly about his very court, give him uneasiness. Swift.

UNEASY. adj.

1. Painful; giving disturbance.

The wisest of the Gentiles forbid any libations to be made for dead infants, as believing they passed into happiness through the way of mortality, and for a few months wore an uneasy garment. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.

On a tottering pinnacle the standing is uneasy, and the fall deadly. De. of Pity.

His present thoughts are uneasy, because his present state does not please him. L'Estrange.

Uneasy life to me,
Still watch'd and importun'd, but worse for thee. Dryden.

2. Disturbed; not at ease.

Happy low! he down;
Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown. Shakespeare.

Uneasy, justice upward flew,
And both the sisters to the stars withdrew. Dryd.
The passion and ill language proceeded from a galled and uneasy mind. Tillotson.

It is such a pleasure as makes a man restless and uneasy, exciting fresh desires. Addison.

One would wonder how any person should desire to be king of a country, in which the established religion is directly opposite to that he professes. Were it possible for such a one to accomplish his designs, his own reason might tell him, there could not be a more uneasy prince, nor a more unhappy people. Addison's Freeholder.

If we imagine ourselves intitled to any thing we have not, we shall be uneasy in the want of it; and that uneasiness will expose us to all the evil persuasions of poverty. Rogers.

The soul, uneasy and confin'd from home,
Rests and expatiates in a life to come. Pope.

3. Constraining; cramping.

Some term'd limitators
Prescribe at first such strict, uneasy rules,
As they must ever slavishly observe. Roscommon.

4. Constrained; not disengaged; stiff.

In conversation, a solicitous watchfulness about one's behaviour, instead of being mended, will be constrained, uneasy, and ungraceful. Locke.

5. Pervish; difficult to please.

A sour, untractable nature makes him uneasy to those who approach him. Addison's Spectator.

6. Difficult. Out of use.

We will, not appearing what we are, have some question with the shepherd: from his simplicity, I think it not uneasy to get the cause of my son's resort thither. Shakespeare.

This swift business
I must uneasy make; lest too light winning Make the prize light. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Divers things, knowable by the bare light of nature, are yet so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood, that, let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the nations themselves will appear obscure. Boyle.

UNEATEN. adj. Not devoured.

Though they had but two horses left uneaten, they had never suffered a summons to be sent to them. Clarendon.

UNEATH. adv. [from eat; eath, Saxon, easy.]

1. Not easily. Out of use.

Uneath may the endure the flinty street,
To tread them with her tender feeling feet! Shak.

2. It seems in Spenser to signify the same as beneath. Under; below.

A roaring, hideous sound,
That all the air with terror filled wide,
And seem'd uneath to shake the steadfast ground. Spenser.

UNEDIFYING. adj. Not improving in good life.

Our practical divinity is as sound and affecting, as that of our popish neighbours is flat and unedifying. Atterbury.

UNELECTED. adj. Not chosen.

Putting him to rage,
You should have ta'en th' advantage of his choler,
And pass'd him unelected. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

UNELIGIBLE. adj. Not proper to be chosen.

Both extremes, above or below the proportion of our character, are dangerous; and 'tis hard to determine which is most unelidable. Rogers.

UNEMPLOYED. adj.

1. Not busy; at leisure; idle.

Other creatures all day long Rove idle, unemploy'd, and less need rest. Milton.

Wilt thou then serve Philistines with that gut,
Which was expressly given thee to annoy them?
Better at home lie dead, not only idle,
Inglorious, unemploy'd, with age out-worn. Milton.

Our wife Creator has annexed to several objects, and to the ideas we receive of them, as also to several of our thoughts, a concomitant pleasure, that those faculties which we are endowed with might not remain idle and unemployed. Locke.

Men sour'd with poverty, and unemployed, easily give into any prospect of change. Addison.

2. Not engaged in any particular work.

Pales unhous'd, Ceres unemploy'd,
Were all forgot. Dryd. n.

UNEMPTYABLE. adj. Not to be emptied; inexhaustible. Obsolete.

Whatsoever men or angels know, it is as a drop of that unemptyable fountain of wisdom, which hath diversely imparted her treasures. Hooker.

UNENDOWED. adj. Not invested; not graced.

A man rather unadorn'd with any parts of quickness, and unendow'd with any notable virtues, than notorious for any defect of understanding. Clarendon.

Aspiring, factious, fierce and loud,
With grace and learning unendow'd. Sw. fr.

UNENGAGED. adj. Not engaged; not appropriated.

When we have sunk the only unengaged revenues left, our incumbrances must remain perpetual. Swift.

UNENJOYED. adj. Not obtained; not possessed.

Each day's a mistress unenjoy'd before;
Like travellers, we're pleas'd with seeing more. Dryden.

UNENJOYING. adj. Not using; having no fruition.

The more we have, the meaner is our store;
The unenjoying, craving wretch is poor. Crab.

UNENLARGED. adj. Not enlarged; narrow; contracted.

Unenlarged souls are disgusted with the wonders which the microscope has discovered concerning the shape of little animals, which equal not a pepper-corn. Wau.

UNENLIGHTENED. adj. Not illuminated.

Moral virtue, natural reason, unenlightened by revelation, prescribes. Atterbury.

UNENSLAVED. adj. Free; not enthralled.

By thee
She sits a sovereign, unenlaw'd and free. Addison.

UNENTERTAINING. adj. Giving no delight; giving no entertainment.

It was not unentertaining to oblige by what de-grees I ceased to be a witty writer. Pope.

UNENTOMBED. adj. Unburied; uninterr'd.

Think'st thou unentomb'd to cross the floods? Dryden.

UNENVIED. adj. Exempt from envy.

The fortune which nobody sees makes a man happy and unenvied. Bacon.

This loss
Thus far at least recover'd, hath much more Establish'd in a safe, unenvied throne, Yielded with full consent. Milton's Paradise Lost.

These unenvied stand;
Since what they act, transcends what they command. Denham.

What health promotes, and gives unenvied peace,
Is all expenceless, and procur'd with ease. Blackmore.

Beneath our humble cottage let us haste,
And here, unenvied, rural dainties taste. Pope's Odyssey.

UNEQUAL. adj. Different from itself; diverse.

March and September, the two equinoxes, are the most unsettled and unequal of seasons. Bentley's Sermons.

UNEQUAL.

UNEQUAL, adj. [inequalis, Latin.]

1. Not even.

There sits deformity to mock my body;
To shape my legs of an unequal face. Shakespeare.
You have here more than one example of Chaucer's unequal numbers. Dryden.

2. Not equal; inferior.

Among unequals, what society? Milton.
To bliss unknown my lofty soul aspires;
My lot unequal to my vast desires. Arcturhus.

3. Partial; not bestowing on both the same advantages.

When to conditions of unequal peace
He shall submit, then may he not possess Kingdom nor life! Denham.

4. [Inegal, French.] Disproportioned; ill matched.

Unequal work we find,
Against unequal aims to fight in pain. Milton.
From his strong arm I saw his rival run,
And in a crowd th' unequal combat thum. Dryden.
And oft the furious wasp the hive alarms
With louder hums, and with unequal arms. Addis.
Fierce Belinda on the Baron flies,
Nor fear'd the chief th' unequal fight to try. Pope.

5. Not regular; not uniform.

So strong, yet to unequal pulses beat. Dryden.

UNEQUALABLE, adj. Not to be equalled; not to be paralleled.

Christ's love to God is final and unequalable. Boyle.

UNEQUALLED, adj. Unparalleled; unrivalled in excellence.

By those unequalled and invaluable blessings, he manifested how much he hated sin, and how much he loved sinners. Boyle.

Dominda came, divested of the scorn
Which the unequal'd maid so long had worn. Religion.

UNEQUALLY, adv. In different degrees; in disproportion one to the other.

When we view some well-proportion'd dome,
No single parts unequally surprize;
All comes united to th' admiring eyes. Pope.

UNEQUALNESS, n. f. Inequality; state of being unequal.

UNEQUITABLE, adj. Not impartial; not just.

We force him to stand to those measures which we think too unquitable to press upon a murderer. Ducy of Piety.

UNEQUIVOCAL, adj. Not equivocal.

This conceit is erroneous, making putrefactive generations corrupt adient unto seminal productions, and conceiving unequivocal effects, and univocal conformity unto the efficient. Brown's Vulg. Err.

UNERRABLENESS, n. f. Incapacity of error.

The many innovations of that church witness the danger of presuming upon the unerrableness of a guide. Ducy of Piety.

UNERRING, adj. [inerrans, Latin.]

1. Committing no mistake.

The irresistible infirmities of our nature make a perfect and unerring obedience impossible. Rogers.
Fast in chains constraining the various god;
Who bound obedient to superior force,
Unerring will prescribe your destin'd course. Pope.

His javelin threw:
Hissing in air th' unerring weapon flew. Dryden.

2. Incapable of failure; certain.

The king a mortal shaft lets fly
From his unerring hand. Denham.
Is this th' unerring power? the ghost reply'd;
Nor Phœbus flatter'd; nor his answers ly'd. Dryd.
Of lovers of truth, for truth's sake, there is this one unerring mark: the not entertaining any proposition with greater assurance than the proofs
it is built upon will warrant. Locke.

UNERRINGLY, adv. Without mistake.

What those figures are which should be mecha-

Vol. II.

nically adapted to fall so unerringly into regular compositions, is beyond our faculties to conceive. Glanville.

UNESCHEWABLE, adj. Inevitable; unavoidable; not to be escaped. Not in use.

He gave the mayor sufficient warning to shift for safety, if an uneschewable destiny had not alter'd him. Carew.

UNESPIED, adj. Not seen; undiscovered; undescried.

Treachery, guile, and deceit, are things which may for a while, but do not long, go unespied. Hooker.
From living eyes her open shame to hide,
And live in rocks and caves long unespied. Spenser.
Nearer to view his prey, and unespied
To mark what of their state he more might learn. Milton.

The second shaft came swift and unespied;
And pierc'd his hand, and nail'd it to his side. Dryden.

UNESSENTIAL, adj.

1. Not being of the last importance; not constituting essence.

Tillotson was moved rather with pity, than indignation, towards the persons of those who differed from him in the unessential parts of Christianity. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Void of real being.

The void profound
Of unessential night receives him next. Milton.

UNESTABLISHED, adj. Not established.

From plain principles, doubt may be fairly solved, and not clapped up from petitionary foundations unestablished. Brown.

UNEVEN, adj.

1. Not even; not level.

These high wild hills, and rough uneven ways,
Draw out our miles, and make them wearisome. Shakespeare.

Some said it was best to fight with the Turks in that uneven, mountain country, where the Turk's chief strength consisting in the multitude of his horsemen should stand him in small stead. Kneller's History.

They made the ground uneven about their nest,
inasmuch that the state did not lie flat. Addison.

2. Not suiting each other; not equal.

The Hebrew verse consists of uneven feet. Peacocks.

UNEVENNESS, n. f.

1. Surface not level; inequality of surface.

This softness of the foot, which yields to the ruggedness and unevenness of the roads, renders the feet less capable of being worn than if they were more solid. Ray on the Creation.

That motion which can continue long in one and the same part of the body, can be propagated a long way from one part to another, supposing the body homogeneous; so that the motion may not be reflected, refracted, interrupted, or disordered by any unevenness of the body. Newton.

2. Turbulence; changeable state.

Edward II. though an unfortunate prince, and by reason of the troubles and unevenness of his reign, the very law itself had many interruptions; yet it held its current in that state his father had left it in. Hale.

3. Not smoothness.

Notwithstanding any such unevenness or indistinctness in the style of those places, concerning the origin and form of the earth. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

UNEVITABLE, adj. [inevitabilis, Lat.

inevitabile, Fr.] Inevitable; not to be escaped.

So jealous is she of my love to her daughter, that I never yet begin to open my mouth to the unavoidable Philoclea, but that her unwilful presence gave my tale a conclusion before it had a beginning. Sidney.

UNEXACTED, adj. Not exacted; not taken by force.

All was common, and the fruitful earth
Was free, to give her unexacted birth. Dryden.

UNEXAMINED, adj. Not inquired; not tried; not discussed.

Yet within these five hours Hastings liv'd Untainted, unexamined, free at liberty. Shakespeare.
They utter all they think, with a violence and indisposition, unexamined, without relation to person, place, or times. R. n. Johnson.

The most pompous seeming knowledge, that is built on the unexamined prejudices of sense, stands not. Glanville.

UNEXAMPLED, adj. Not known by any precedent or example.

Charles returned with unexampled loss from Algiers. Raleigh.

O unexampled love!
Love no where to be found less than divine. Milk.
God vouchsafed Enoch an unexampled exemption from death. Boyle.

Your twice conquer'd vassals,
First, by your courage, then your clemency,
Have humbly vow to sacrifice their lives,
The gift of this your unexampled mercy,
To your command. Denham's Rhymer.
I tune my pipe afresh, each night and day,
Thy unexampled goodness to extol. Philips.

UNEXCEPTIONABLE, adj. Not liable to any objection.

Personal prejudices should not hinder us from pursuing, with joint hands and hearts, the unexceptionable design of this pious institution. Atterb.

UNEXCISED, adj. Not subject to the payment of excise.

And beggars taste thee unexcis'd by kings. Brown.

UNEXCUGITABLE, adj. Not to be found out.

Wherein can man resemble his unexcugitable power and perfection? Ral. History of the World.

UNEXECUTED, adj. Not performed; not done.

Leave unexecuted your own renowned knowledge. Shakespeare.

UNEXEMPLIFIED, adj. Not made known by instance or example.

Those wonders a generation returned with so unexemplified an ingratitude, that it is not the least of his wonders, that he would vouchsafe to work
any of them. Boyle.

This being a new, unexemplified kind of policy, must pass for the wisdom of this particular age, forming the examples of all former ages. South.

UNEXEMPT, adj. Not free by peculiar privilege.

You invert the covenants of her trust,
And harshly deal, like an ill borrower,
With that which you receiv'd on other terms,
Stealing the unexempt condition
By which all mortal traity must subsist. Milton.

UNEXERCISED, adj. Not practised; not experienced.

McClaspus, with his ardour, warms
A heartless train, unexercis'd in arms. Dryden.
Abstract ideas are not so obvious to the yet unexercised mind, as particular ones. Locke.

UNEXHAUSTED, adj. [inexhaustus, Lat.] Not spent; not drained to the bottom.

What avail her unexhausted stores,
While proud oppression in her valleys reigns? Addis.

UNEXPANDED, adj. Not spread out.

Every fetus bears a secret board;
With sleeping, unexpanded issue stored. Blackmore.

UNEXPECTED, adj. Not thought on; sudden; not provided against.

Have wisdom to provide always, yet beware, that those evils overtake us not, which death unprepared doth use to bring upon careless men; and although it be sudden in itself, nevertheless, in regard of our prepared minds, it may not be sudden. Hooker.

Sith evils, great and unexpected, do cause oftentimes even them to think upon divine power with fearfullest suspicions, which have been otherwise the most sacred adorners thereof; how should we look for any constant reformation of mind in such cases, saving only where unfeigned affection to God hath bred the most assured confidence to be assisted by his hand? Hooker.

O unexpected stroke! worse than of death!
Must I thus leave thee, paradise? Miln. Par. Lost
Them unexpected joy surpris'd,
When the great enlight of Messiah blaz'd. Milton.

Some amazement;
But such as spring from wonder, not from fear,
It was so unexpected. Dorham's Sayby.

To the pale toes they suddenly draw near,
And summon them to unexpected fight. Dryden.
Deep was the wound; he stagger'd with the blow,
And turn'd him to his unexpected foe. Dryden.

When Barcelona was taken by a most unexpected accident of a bomb lighting on the magazine, then the Catalonians revolted. Swift.

UNEXPECTEDLY. adv. Suddenly; at a time unthought of.

O! he seems to hide his face,
But unexpectedly returns. Milton's Agonistes
A most bountiful present, when I was most in want of it, came most fitly and unexpectedly to my relief. Dryden.

It the concernment be poured in unexpectedly upon us, it overflows us. Dryden.

You have faster warning than others who are unexpectedly cut off. Waker.

My heart was filled with a deep melancholy, to see several dropping unexpectedly in the midst of mirth. Adisson.

UNEXPECTEDNESS. n. f. Suddenness; unthought of time or manner.

He describes the unexpectedness of his appearance. Watts.

UNEXPECTED. adj. Inconvenient; not fit. Milick would not be unexpected after meat, to assist and cherish nature in her first concoction, and send their minds back to study in good time. Milton on Education.

UNEXPERIENCED. adj. Not veried; not acquainted by trial or practice.

The wisest, unexperienced, will be ever Timorous and loth, with novice modesty, Inebriate, unhardy, unadvent'rous. Milton.

Long, we may strengthen men against many such inconveniences, which, to unexperienced persons, may prove very hazardous. Watts's Math. Mag.

The powers of Troy;
Not a raw and unexperienced train,
But firm body of embattled men. Dryden.
These reproaches are the extravagant speeches of those unexperienced in the things they speak against. Tillotson.

Unexperienced young men, if unwarned, take one thing for another. Locke.

The smallest accident intervening, often produces such changes, that a man is just as much in doubt of events, as the most ignorant and unexperienced. Swift.

UNEXPERT. adj. [inexpertus, Latin.] Wanting skill or knowledge.

Receive the partner of my innermost soul;
Him you will find in letters, and in law,
Not unexpert. Pror.

UNEXPLORED. adj.

1. Not searched out.

Oh! say what strange cause, yet unexplored,
Could make a gentle belle reject a lord? Pope.

2. Not tried; not known.

Under thy friendly conduct will I fly
To regions unexplored. Dryden.

UNEXPRESSED. adj. Not laid open to censure.

They will endeavour to diminish the honour of the best, rather than suffer the little misfortune of the author to pass unexpressed. Watts on the Mind.

UNEXPRESSIBLE. adj. Ineffable; not to be uttered.

What unexpressible comfort does overflow the pious soul, from a conscience of its own innocence! Tillotson.

UNEXPRESSIVE. adj.

1. Not having the power of uttering or expressing. This is the natural and analogical signification.

2. Inexpressible; unutterable; ineffable; not to be expressed. Improper, and out of use.

Run, run, Orlando, carve on every tree,
The fair, the chaste, and unexpressive thee. Shak.
With nectar pure his oozy locks he laves,
And hears the unexpressive nuptial song,
In the blest kingdoms, meek, of joy and love. Milton.

The helmed cherubim,
And sworded seraphim,
Are seen in glittering ranks, with wings display'd,
Hoping in loud and solemn quire,
With unexpressive notes, to heaven's new-born heir. Milton.

UNEXTENDED. adj. Occupying no assignable space; having no dimensions.

How inconceivable is it, that a spiritual, i. e. an unextended substance, should represent to the mind an extended one, as a triangle! Locke.

UNEXTINGUISHABLE. adj. [inextinguishable, Fr.] Unquenchable; not to be put out.

Point of unextinguishable fire
Must exercise us, without hope of end. Milton.

What native, unextinguishable beauty must be impressed through the whole, which the defecation of so many parts by a bad printer, and a worse editor, could not hinder from shining forth! Bentl.

UNEXTINGUISHED. adj. [inextinctus, Latin.]

1. Not quenched; not put out.

The souls, whom that unhappy flame invades,
Make endless moans, and, pining with desire,
Lament too late their unextinguish'd fire. Dryden.
E'en o'er your cold, your ever-sacred urn
His constant flame shall unextinguish'd burn. Lyt.

2. Not extinguishable.

An ardent thirst of honour; a soul unsatisfied with all it has done, and an unextinguish'd desire of doing more. Dryden.

UNFAD'D. adj. Not withered.

A lovely flow'r,
Unfaded yet, but yet unfaded below,
No more to mother earth or the green stem shall owe. Dryden.

UNFADING. adj. Not liable to wither.

For her th' unfading rose of Eden blooms,
And wings of scaphe shed divine perfume. Pope.

UNFAILING. adj. Certain; not missing.

Nothing the united voice of all history proclaims so loud, as the certain unfailing curse, that has pursued and overtook sacrilege. South.

Thou, secure of my unfailing word,
Compose thy swelling soul, and sheath thy sword. Dryden.

UNFAIR. adj. Disingenuous; subdulous; not honest.

You come, like an unfair merchant, to charge me with being in your debt. Swift.

UNFAIRLY. adv. [from unfair.] Not in a just manner.

UNFAITHFUL. adj.

1. Perfidious; treacherous.

It you break one jot of your promise, I will think you the most atheistical break-promise; and the most unworthy, that may be chosen out of the gross band of the unfaithful. Bentley's Sermons.

My foe, through wine, unfaithful to their weight,
Betray'd me tumbling from a tow'ry height. Pope.

2. Impious; infidel.

Thence shall come

To judge th' unfaithful dead; but to reward His faithful, and receive them into bliss. Milton.

UNFAITHFULLY. adv. Treacherously; perfidiously.

There is danger of being unfaithfully counselled; and more for the good of them that counsel, than for him that is counselled. Bacon.

UNFAITHFULNESS. n. f. Treachery; perfidiousness.

As the obscurity of what some writers deliver, makes it very difficult to be understood; so the unfaithfulness of too many others, makes it unfit to be relied on. Boyle.

UNFOLLOWED. adj. Not followed.

Th' unfollow'd glebe
Yearly o'ercomes the granaries with stores
Of golden wheat. Philips.

UNFAMILIAR. adj. Unaccustomed; such as is not common.

The matters which we handle, seem, by reason of newness, dark, intricate, unfamiliar. Hooker.
Chaucer's uncouth, or rather unfamiliar language deters many readers. Warren's Spenser.

UNFASHIONABLE. adj. Not modish; not according to the reigning custom.

A man writes good sense, but he has not a happy manner of expression. Perhaps he uses obsolete and unfashionable language. Watts's Logick.

UNFASHIONABLENESS. n. f. Deviation from the mode.

Natural unfashionableness is much better than spitz, affected postures. Locke.

UNFASHIONABLY. adv. [from unfashionable.]

1. Not according to the fashion.

2. Unartfully.

Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
And that so lamely and unfashionably,
That dogs bark at me. Shakspeare. Richard III.

UNFASHIONED. adj.

1. Not modified by art.

Mark but how terribly his eyes appear;
And yet there's something roughly noble there;
Which, in unfashion'd nature, looks divine,
And, like a gem, does in the quarry shine. Dryden.

2. Having no regular form.

A lifeless lump, unfinish'd and unfram'd,
Of jarring seeds, and jostly chaos nam'd. Dryden.

UNFASTEN. v. a. To loose; to unfix.

He had no sooner unfastened his hold, but that a wave forcibly spoiled his weaker hand of hold. Sidney.

Then in the key-hole turns
Th' intricate warts, and every bolt and bar
Of massy iron, or solid rock, with ease
Unfastens. Milton's Paradise Lost.

ly; without hypocrisy.

He pardoneth all them that truly repent, and unfignally believe his holy gospel. Common Prayer

How should they be unfignally just, whom religion doth not cause to be such; or they religious, which are not found such by the proof of their just actions? Hooker.

Prince dauphin, can you love this lady?

—I love her most unfignally. Shak. King Job.

Thou hast brought me and my people unfignally to repent of the sins we have committed. K. Charles

UNFA'YLT. adj. Not felt; not perceived.

All my treasury

Is but yet unfelt thanks, which, more enrich'd,
Shall be your love and labour's recompence. Shak.

Her looks, from that time, infus'd
Sweetness into my heart, unfelt before. Milton.

'Tis pleasant, safely to behold from shore
The rowling ships, and hear the tempest roar;
Not that another's pain is our delight,
But pains unfelt produce the pleasing sight. Dryd.

UNFERNED. adj.

1. Naked of fortification.

I'd play incessantly upon these jades;
Even till unfenced desolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgar air. Shaksf.

2. Not surrounded by any inclosure.

UNFERMENTED. adj. Not fermented.

All such vegetables must be unfermented; for fermentation changes their nature.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

UNFERTILE. adj. Not fruitful; not prolific.

Peace is not such a dry tree, such a sterile, un- fertile thing, but that it might fructify, and increase. Dick. of Pety.

TO UNFETTER. v. a. To unchain; to free from shackles.

Unfetter me with speed;

I see you troubled that I bleed. Dryden.
This most useful principle may be unfettered, and restored to its native freedom of exercise.

Addison's Spectator.

The soul in these instances is not entirely loose and unfettered from the body. Addison's Spectator.

Th' unfetter'd mind by thee sublim'd. Johnson.

UNFIGURED. adj. Representing no animal form.

In unfigured paintings the noblest is the imitation of mables, and of architecture, as arches, frezees. Wotton.

UNFILLED. adj. Not filled; not supplied.

Come not to table, but when thy need invites thee; and if thou beest in health, leave something of thy appetite unfilled. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

The air did not precisely fill up the vacuities of the vessel, since it left so many unfilled. Boyle.

The throne of my forefathers

Still stands unfilled. Addison's Cato

UNFICIAL. adj. Unsuitable to a son.

You offer him a wrong,

Something unficial. Shakespeare.
Teach the people, that to hope for heaven is a mercenary, legal, and therefore unficial, affection.

Boyle.

UNFINISHED. adj. Incomplete; not brought to an end; not brought to perfection; imperfect; wanting the last hand.

It is for that such outward ornament
Was lavish'd on their sex, that inward gifts
Were left for haste unfinish'd. Milton.

I did dedicate to you a very unfinish'd piece.

Dryden.

His hasty hand left his pictures so unfinish'd, that the beauty in the picture faded sooner than in the person after whom it was drawn. Spett.

And now let conscious Cecil view this piece,
Where virtue in her lowly light is shown;

Let these unfinish'd lays in part express
Your great forefather's bounties, and your own.

Heigh.

This collection contains not only such pieces as come under our review, but many others, even un- finish'd. Swift.

UNFIRM. adj.

1. Weak; feeble.

Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm
Than women's are. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

So is the unfirm king

In three divided; and his coffers found
With hollow poverty and emptiness. Shakespeare.

2. Not stable.

Take the time, while stagg'ring yet they stand,
With feet unfirm, and prepossess the strand. Dryd.

UNFIT. adj.

1. Improper; unsuitable.

They easily perceive how unfit that were for the present, which was for the last age convenient enough. Hooker.

Neither can I think you would impute upon me an unfit and over-pomperous argument.

Milton on Education.

2. Unqualified.

Unfit he was for any worldly thing,
And eke unable once to stir or go. Spenser.

Old as I am, for ladies' love unfit,
The pow'r of beauty I remember yet. Dryden.

A genius that can hardly take in the connection of three propositions, is utterly unfit for speculative studies. Watts.

TO UNFIT. v. a. To disqualify.

Those excellencies, as they qual'fied him for dominion, so they unfited him for a satisfaction or acquiescence in his vassals. Govern. of the Tongue.

UNFITLY. adv. Not properly; not suitably.

Others, reading to the church those books which the apostles wrote, are not ther' unfitly
fud to preach. Hooker.

The kingdom of France may be not unfitly compared to a body that hath all its blood drawn up into the arms, breast and back. Howell.

UNFITNESS. n. f.

1. Want of qualifications.

In setting down the form of common prayer,
there was no need that the book should mention either the learning of a fit, or the unfitness of an ignorant minister. Hooker.

It is looked upon as a great weakness, and unfit- ness for business, for a man to be so open, as really to think not only what he says, but what he swears.

South.

2. Want of propriety.

UNFITTING. adj. Not proper.

Although monosyllables, to rise in our tongue, are unfitting for verses, yet are they the most fit for expressing briefly the first contents of the mind.

Candem.

TO UNFIX. v. a.

1. To loosen; to make less fast.

Plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfix in an shake a friend. Shaksf.

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shaksf. Macbeth.

2. To make fluid.

Stiff with eternal ice, and hid in snow,
The mountain stands; nor can the rising sun
Unfix her frosts, and teach them how to run.

Dryden.

UNFIXED. adj.

1. Wandering; errattick; inconstant; vagrant.

So vast the noise, as if not fleets did join,
But lands unfix'd, and floating nations drove.

Dryden.

Her lovely looks a sprightly mind disclose,
Quick as her eyes, and as unfix'd as those. Pope.

2. Not determined.

Indecision on which she should rely:
At last unfix'd in all, is only fix'd to die. Dryden.

UNFLEDGED. adj. That has not yet the full furniture of feathers; young; not completed by time; not having attained full growth.

The friends thou hast, and their adoption try'd,
Grapple them to thy soul with hooks of steel:
But do not dull thy palm with entertainment
Of each new-hatch'd, unfledg'd comrade. Shak.

In those unfledg'd days was my wife a girl. Shak.

Unfledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry. Dryden.

UNFLESHED. adj. Not fleshed; not seasoned to blood; raw.

Nature his limbs only for war made fit;
With some less foe thy unflesh'd valour try. Corway.

As a generous, unflesh'd hound, that hears
From far the hunter's horn and chearful cry,

So will I haste. Dryden's Cenci.

UNFOILED. adj. Unsubdued; not put to the work.

The usurped powers thought themselves secure in the strength of an unfoiled army of sixty thousand men, and in a revenue proportionable. Temple.

UNFO'LD. v. a.

1. To expand; to spread; to open.

I saw on him rising

Out of the water, heav'n above the clouds

Unfold her crystal doors, thence on his head

A perfect dove descend. Milton.

Invas'd his bustling throat, and winding spires,

'Till stretch'd in length th' unfolding toe retires. Dryden.

Ah, what avail—

The vivid green his shining plumes unfolds? Pope.

Sluth unfolds her arms, and wakes;

Lit'ning Envy drops her snakes. Pope's St. Cecilia

2. To tell; to declare.

What tidings with our cousin Buckingham?—

—Such as my heart doth tremble to unfold. Shak.

Unfold to me why you are heavy. Shakespeare.

Unfold the passion of my love;

Surprize her with discourse of my dear faith. Shakespeare.

Helen, to you our minds we will unfold. Shak.

Ship and men unfold

That to this isle convoid you. Chapman.

How comes it thus? Unfold, celestial guide! Milton.

Things of deep sense we may in prose unfold;

But thy move more in lofty numbers told. Mallet.

3. To discover; to reveal.

Time still unfolds what plaited cunning hides:

Who covers faults, at last with shame descides. Shakespeare.

If the object be seen through two or more such convex or concave glasses, every glass shall make a new image, and the object shall appear in the place, and of the bigness of the last image; which consideration unfolds the theory of microscopes and telescopes. Newton's Opticks.

4. To display; to set to view.

We are the inhabitants of the earth, and endow'd with understanding; doth it then properly belong to us, to examine and unfold the works of God? Burnet.

5. To release or dismiss from a fold.

The unfolding star calls up the shepherd. Shak.

TO UNFO'OL. v. a. To restore from folly.

Have you any way to unfool me again? Shakespeare.

UNFORB'D.

UNFORBIDDEN. adj. Not prohibited.

If unforbid thou may'st unfold

What we, not to explore the secrets, ask

Of his eternal empire. Milton's Paradise Lost.

These are the unforbidden tiers; and here we may let loose the reins, and indulge our thoughts. Norris.

A good man not only forbears these gratifica-tions which are forbidden by reason and religion, but even restrains himself in unforbidden instances. Antebury.

UNFORBIDDENNESS. n. f. The state of being forbidden.

The bravery you are so severe to, is no where expressly prohibited in scripture; and this unfor- biddenness they think sufficient to evince, that the sumptuousness you condemn is not in its own nature sinful. Byle.

UNFORCED. adj.

1. Not compelled; not constrained.

'This gentle and unforc'd accord of Hamlet

Sits smiling to my heart. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Unforc'd by punishment, unaw'd by fear,

His words were simple, and his soul sincere. Dryd.

2. Not impelled; not externally urged.

No more can impure men retain and move

In that pure region of a worthy love,

Which earthly substance can, unforc'd, aspire,

And have his nature, to converse with fire. Dante.

3. Not feigned; not artificially heightened.

Upon these tidings they broke forth into such unforced and unfeigned passions, as it plainly appeared that good-nature did work in them. Keyward.

4. Not violent; easy; gradual.

Windfor the next above the valley swells

Into my eye, and doth itself present

With such an easy and unforc'd ascent,

That no stupendous precipice denies

Access, no horror turns away our eyes. Denham.

5. Not contrary to ease.

If one arm is stretched out, the body must be somehow bowed on the opposite side, in a situation which is unforced. Dryden.

UNFORCIBLE. adj. Wanting strength.

The same reason which causeth to yield that they are of some force in the one, will constrain to acknowledge that they are not in the other altogether unforcible. Hooker.

UNFORBODING. adj. Giving no omens.

Unnumber'd birds glide through th' aerial way,

Vagrants of air, and unforboding stray. Pope's Odyssey.

UNFOREKNOWN. adj. Not foreseen by precidence.

It had no less prov'd certain, unforeknown. Milt.

UNFORESEEN. adj. Not known before it happened.

Unforeseen, they say, is unprepar'd. Dryden.

This was the ancient, and is yet the unfor- feited glory of our religion. Rogers's Sermons.

UNFORGIVING. adj. Relentless; implacable.

The fow with her broad snout for rooting up

Th' intus'd seed, was judg'd to spoil the crop;

The covinous churl, of unforgiving kind,

Th' offender to the bloody priest resign'd. Dryden.

UNFORGOTTEN. adj. Not lost to memory.

The thankful remembrance of so great a benefit received, shall for ever remain unforgotten.

Koelle's History of the Turks.

UNFORMED. adj. Not modified into regular shape.

All putrefaction being a dissolution of the first form, is a mere confusion, and unformed mixture of the parts. Bacon.

The same boldness discovers itself in the several adventures he meets with during his passage through the regions of unformed matter. Spitt.

UNFORSAKEN. adj. Not deserted.

They extend no farther to any sort of sins continued in us unforsaken, than as they are reconcedable with sincere endeavours to forsake them. Hammond's Fundamentals.

UNFORTIFIED. adj.

1. Not secured by walls or bulwarks.

Their weak heads, like towns unfortify'd,

'Twixt sense and nonsense daily change their side. Pope.

2. Not strengthened; infirm; weak; feeble.

It shews a will most incorrect to heav'n;

A heart unfortify'd, a mind impatient;

An understanding simple, and unschool'd. Shak.

3. Wanting securities.

They will not restrain a secret mischief, which, considering the unfortified state of mankind, is a great defect. Collier.

UNFORTUNATE. adj. Not successful;

unprosperous; wanting luck; unhappy. It is used both of a train of events, as, an unfortunate life; or of a single event, as, an unfortunate expedition;

or of persons, as, an unfortunate man; or an unfortunate commander.

All things religiously taken in hand, are prof-perously ended; because whether men in the end have that which religion did allow to desire, or that which it teacheth them contentedly to suffer, they are in neither event unfortunate. Hooker.

Whoever will live altogether out of himself, and study other men's humours, shall never be unfortunate. Raleigh.

Vindictive persons live the life of witches, who,

as they are mischievous, end unfortunate. Bacon.

He that would hunt a hare with an elephant, is not unfortunate for missing the mark, but foolish for choosing such an unapt instrument. Taylor.

The virgins shall on fœtid days

Visit his tomb with flowers, only bewalling

His lot unfortunate in nuptial choice,

From whence captivity and lots of eyes. Milton's Agonistes.

UNFORTUNATELY. adv. Unhappily;

without good luck.

Unconsulting affection unfortunately born to mewards, made Zelmene borrow so much of her natural modesty, as to leave her more decent raiments. Sidney.

Most of these artists unfortunately miscarried,

by falling down and breaking their arms. H'kins.

She kept her countenance when the lid, remov'd,

Disclos'd the heart unfortunately lov'd. Dryden.

UNFORTUNATENESS. n. f. [from unfortunate.] Ill luck.

O me, the only subject of the destinies displeasure, whose greatest fortunateness is more unfortunate than my sister's greatest unfortunateness. Sidney.

UNFOUGHT. adj. [un and fought.] Not fought.

They used such diligence in taking the passages, that it was not possible they should escape unfought

with. Kneller.

UNFOUL'D. adj. Unpolluted; uncorrupted; not soiled.

The humors and tunics are purely transparent, to let in light unfoul'd and unsophisticated by any tincture. Morr.

UNFOUN'D. adj. Not found; not met with.

Somewhat in her excelling all her kind,

Excited a desire till then unknown;

Somewhat unfound, or found in her alone. Dryden.

UNFRAMABLE. adj. Not to be moulded. Not used.

The cause of their disposition so unframable unto societies, wherein they live, is for that they discern not aright what force these laws ought to have. Hooker.

UNFRAMED. adj. Not formed; not fas-hion'd.

A lifeless lump, unfashion'd and unfram'd,

Of jarring seeds, and justly chaos nam'd. Dryden.

UNFREQUENT. adj. Uncommon; not happening often.

Part thereof is visible unto any situation; but being only discoverable in the night, and when the air is clear, it becomes unfrequent. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO UNFREQUENT. v. a. To leave; to cease to frequent. A bad word.

Glad to shun his hostile gripe,

They quit their thess, and unfrequent the fields. Philips.

UNFREQUENTED. adj. Rarely visited;

rarely entered.

Many unfrequented plots there are,

Fitted by kind for rape and villainy. Shakespeare.

Retiring from the pop'lar noise, I seek

This unfrequented place to find some ease. Milton.

How well your cool and unfrequented shade

Suits with the chaste retirements of a maid! Reformers.

Can

UNF

Can he not pass an astronomical line,
Nor farther yet in liquid ether roll,
'Till he has gain'd some unfrequented place?

With what caution does the hen provide herself a nest in places unfrequented, and free from noise!

UNFREQUENTLY. adv. Not commonly.
They, like Judas, desire death, and not unfrequently pursue it.

UNFRIENDED. adj. Wanting friends; uncountenanced; unsupported.

These parts to a stranger, Unguided and unfriended, often prove Rough and inhospitable.
Great acts require great means of enterprise;
Thou art unknown, unfriended, low of birth.

Who me unfriended brought't, by wond'rous ways,
The kingdom of my fathers to possess.

UNFRIENDLINESS. n. f. [from unfriendly.] Want of kindness; want of favour.
You might be apt to look upon such disappointments as the effects of an unfriendliness in nature or fortune to your particular attempts.

UNFRIENDLY. adj. Not benevolent; not kind.

What signifies an unfriendly parent or brother?
'Tis friendship only that is the cement which effectually combines mankind.
This fear is not that servile dread, which flies from God as an hostile, unfriendly being, delighting in the misery of his creatures.

UNFROZEN. adj. Not congealed to ice.
Though the more aqueous parts will, by the loss of their motion, be turned into ice, yet the more subtle parts remain unfrozen.

UNFRUITFUL. adj.

1. Not prolific.
Ah! hopeless, lasting flames! like those that burn
To light the dead, and warm th' unfruitful urn.

2. Not fructiferous.
The naked rocks are not unfruitful there;
Their barren tops, with luscious food abound.

3. Not fertile.
Lay down some general rules for the knowing of fruitful and unfruitful soils.

4. Not producing good effects.
UNFULFILLED. adj. Not fulfilled.
Still unfulfilled with pain of longing, pines.

To UNFURL. v. a. To expand; to unfold; to open.

The next motion is that of unfurling the fan,
In which are several little flirts and vibrations.

Her ships anchor'd, and her sails unfurl'd,
In either Indies.

His sails by Cupid's hand unfurl'd,
To keep the fair, he gave the world.

To UNFURNISH. v. a.

1. To deprive; to strip; to divest.

Will bring me to consider that which may Unfurnish me of reason.

2. To leave naked.

The Scot on his unfurnish'd kingdom Came pouring like a tide into a breach.

UNFURNISHED. adj.

1. Not accommodated with utensils, or decorated with ornaments.

It derogates not more from the goodness of God, that he has given us minds unfurnish'd with those ideas of himself, than that he hath sent us into the world with bodies unclothed.
I live in the corner of a vast unfurnish'd house.

2. Unsupplied.

UNG

UNGA'IN. ad. [ungeng, Sax.] Awk-

UNGA'INLY. ad. ward; uncouth.

An ungainly strut in their walk.

UNGALLED. adj. Unhurt; unwounded.

Let the stricken deer go weep,
The hart ungalled play;

For some must watch, whilst some must sleep;
So runs the world away.

UNGARTERED. adj. Being without garters.

You chid at Sir Protheus for going ungartered.

UNGATHERED. adj. Not cropped; not picked.

We wonder'd why she kept her fruit so long:
For whom so late th' ungather'd apples hung.

UNGENERATED. adj. Unbegotten; having no beginning.
Millions of souls must have been ungenerated,
and have had no being.

UNGENERATIVE. adj. Begetting nothing.

He is a motion ungenerative, that's infallible.

UNGENEROUS. adj.

1. Not noble; not ingenuous; not liberal.
To look into letters already opened or dropped,
is held an ungenerous act.

2. Ignominious.

The victor never will impose on Cato Ungenerous terms. His enemies confess
The virtues of humanity are Caesar's.

UNGENIAL. adj. Not kind or favourable to nature.

The northern shires have a more cloudy, ungenial air than any part of Ireland.

In vain at sheen, th' ungiving suppliant stands:
This 'tis to make a vow with empty hands.

UNGLO'RIED. adj. Not honoured; not exalted with praise and adoration.

Left God should be any way unglorified, the greatest part of our daily service consisteth, according to the blessed apostle's own specific rule, in much variety of psalms and hymns; that, out of so plentiful a treasure, there might be for every man's heart to chuse out for his own sacrifice.

UNGLO'VED. adj. Having the hand naked.

When we were come near to his chair, he stood up, holding forth his hand ungloved, and in posture of blessing.

To UNGLUE. v. a. To loose any thing cemented.

Small rains relax and unglue the earth, to give vent to inflamed atoms.

She stretches, gapes, ungirts her eye,
And asks if it be time to rise.

To UNGOD. v. a. To divest of divinity.

Were we wak'd by this tyranny,
T'ungod this child again, it could not be.

I should love her, who loves not me.

Thus men ungodd'd may to places rise,
And seats may be prevail'd without dignity.

UNGODDLY. adv. Impiously; wickedly.

'Tis but an ill essay of that godly way, to use that very gospel to inventively and ungoddily.

UNGODLINESS. n. f. Impiety; wickedness; neglect of God.

How grossly do many of us contradict the plain precepts of the gospel by our ungodlings and worldly lusts!

UNGODLY. adj.

1. Wicked; negligent of God and his laws.

Had driven out th' ungodly from his sight,
And the habitations of the just.

The sinner here intended is the ungodly sinner;
he who neglects or denies his God.

2. Polluted by wickedness.

Let not the hours of this ungodly day
Wear out in peace.

UNGORED. adj. Unwounded; unhurt.

I stand aloof, and will no reconciliation;
'Till, by some elder masters of known honour,
I have a voice and precedent of price,
To keep my name ungored.

UNGORGED. adj. Not filled; not sated.

The hell hounds, as ungorg'd with flesh and blood,
Pursue their prey.

Oh ungorg'd appetite! O ravenous thirst
Of a son's blood.

UNGOTT. adj.

1. Not gained; not acquired.

2. Not begotten.

He is as free from touch or soil with her,
As she from one ungott.

His loins yet full of ungott pain; all
His glory in the bud.

UNGOVERNABLE. adj.

1. Not to be ruled; not to be restrained.

They'll judge every thing by models of their own; and thus are rendered unmanageable by any authority, and ungovernable by other laws but those of the sword.

2. Licentious; wild; unbridled.

So wild and ungovernable a poet cannot be translated literally; his genius is too strong to bear a chain. Dryden.

He was free from any rough, ungovernable passions, which hurry men on to say and do very offensive things. Asterbury.

UNGOVERNED. adj.

1. Being without government.

The estate is yet ungovern'd. Shaksp. Rich. III.

Seek for him,

Left his ungovern'd rage dissolve the life

That wants the means to lead it. Shak. K. Lear.
Themselves they vilify'd

To serve ungovern'd appetite. Milt. Paradise Lost.

Not what to bid, or what forbid, he knows,

Th' ungovern'd temper to such fury grows, Dryden.

From his own back the burthen would remove,

And lays the load on his ungovern'd love. Dryden.

UNGRA'CEFUL. adj. Wanting elegance; wanting beauty.

Raphael answer'd heav'n,

Nor are thy lips ungraceful, fire of men. Milton.

A solicitous watchfulness about one's behaviour, instead of being reined, it will be contrained, uncouth, and ungraceful. Locke.

He enjoyed the greatest strength of good sense, and the most exquisite taste of politeness. Without the first, learning is but an incumbrance; and without the last is ungraceful. Addison.

UNGRA'CEFULNESS. n. f. Inelegance; awkwardness.

To attempt the putting another genius upon him, will be labour in vain, and what is squandered on, will have always hanging to it the ungracefulness of constraint. Locke.

UNGRA'CIOUS. adj.

1. Wicked; odious; hateful.

He, citching hold of her ungracious tongue,
Thereon as iron lock did fasten firm and strong. Spenser.

I'll, in the mature time,

With this ungracious paper strike the sight

Of the death-practis'd duke. Shaksp. King Lear.

Do not, it is time ungracious pastors do,

Show me the steep and thorny way to heav'n;

Whilst it, a pult and reckless libertine,

Limbs the primrose path of dalliance treads,

And seeks not his own rede. Shaksp. Hamlet.

To the gods alone

Our future offspring, and our wives are known;

Th' audacious thumpet, and ungracious ion. Dryden.

2. Offensive; displeasing.

Show me no part which are ungracious to the sight, as all pre-thoughts usually are. Dryden.

Neither is it rare to observe among excellent and learned divines, a certain ungracious manner, or an unhappy tone of voice, which they never have been able to shake off. Swift.

3. Unacceptable; not favoured.

They did not except against the persons of any, though several were most ungracious to them. Clar.

And this ungranted, all rewards are vain. Dryden.

UNGRA'TEFUL. adj.

1. Making no returns, or making ill returns for kindness.

No person is remarkably ungrateful, who was not also intemperately proud. South.

2. Making no returns for culture.

Most when driven by winds, the flaming storm
Of the long files destroys the beautiful form;

Nor will the wither'd stock be green again;

But the wild olive shoots, and shades the ungrateful plain. Dryden.

3. Unpleasing; unacceptable.

It cannot be ungrateful, or without some pleasure to posterity, to see the most exact relation of an action to full of danger. Clarendon.

What is in itself harsh and ungrateful, must make harsh and ungrateful impressions upon us. Asterbury.

UNGRA'TEFULLY. adv.

1. With ingratitude.

When call'd to distant war,

His vanquish'd heart remain'd a victim here;

Oriana's eyes that glorious conquest made;

Not was his love ungratefully repaid. Granville.

We often receive the benefit of our prayers when yet we ungratefully charge heaven with denying our petitions. Waks.

2. Unacceptably; unpleasingly.

UNGRA'TEFULNESS. n. f.

1. Ingratitude; ill return for good.

Can I, without the detestable stain of ungratefulness, abstain from loving him, who, far exceeding the beautifulness of his shape with the beautifulness of his mind, is content to be at his own service to become Demetrius's servant for my sake? Sidney.

2. Unacceptableness; unpleasing quality.

UNGRA'VELY. adv. Without seriousness.

His present portance

Gibingly, and ungravelly, he did fashion. Shaksp.

UNGROUND'ED. adj. Having no foundation.

Ignorance, with an indifferency for truth, is nearer to it than opinion with ungrounded inclination, which is the great source of error. Locke.

This is a confidence the most ungrounded and irrational. For upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity? South.

UNGRU'DGINGLY. adv. Without ill-will; willingly; heartily; cheerfully.

If, when all his art and time is spent,

He say 'twill ne'er be found, yet be content;

Receive from him the doom ungrudgingly,

Because he is the mouth of destiny. Donne.

UNGUARDED. adj.

1. Undefended.

Proud art thou not? Thy hope was to have reach'd

The throne of God unguarded, and his side

Abandon'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

All through th' unguarded gates with joy resort,

To see the slighted camp, the vacant port. Dean.

No door there was th' unguarded house to keep,

On creaking hinges turn'd, to break his sleep. Dryden.

2. Careless; negligent; not attentive to danger.

All the evils that proceed from an untied tongue, and an unguarded, unlimited will, we put upon the accounts of drunkenness. Taylor.

The spy, which does this treasure keep,

Does she ne'er say her prayers, nor sleep?

Or have not gold and flattery pow'r

To purchase one unguarded hour? Prior.

With an unguarded look she now devour'd

My nearer face; and now recall'd her eye,

And heav'd, and strove to hide a sudden sigh. Prior.

It was intended only to divert a few young ladies, of good sense and good humour enough to laugh at not only at their sex's little unguarded follies, but at their own. Pope.

Are we not encompassed by multitudes, who watch every careless word, every unguarded action of our lives? Rogers.

UNGUENT. n. f. [unguentum, Lat.] Ointment.

Pre-occupation of mind ever requireth preface of speech, like a timentation to make the unguent enter. Bacon.

There is an intercourse between the magnetick unguent and the vulnerated body. Glauville.

With unguent smooth the liquid marble stone.

Page.

UNGU'ESSED. adj. Not attained by conjecture.

He me sent, for cause to me unguess'd. Spenser.

UNGUID'ED. adj. Not directed; not regulated.

The blood weeps from my heart, when I do shape,

In forms imaginary, th' unguided days

And rotten times that you shall look upon,

When I am sleeping with my ancestors. Shaksp.

Can unguided matter keep itself to such exact conformities, as not in the least spot to vary from the species? Glauville.

They resolve all into the accidental, unguided motions of blind matter. Locke.

Nature, void of choice,

Does by unguided motion things produce,

Regardless of their end. Blackm. on the Creation.

UNHABITABLE. adj. [inhabitable, Fr. inhabitable, Lat.] Not capable to support inhabitants; uninhabitable.

The night and day was always a natural day of twenty-four hours, in all places remote from the unhabitable poles of the world, and winter and summer always measured a year. Holder.

Though the course of the sun be curbed between the tropics, yet are not those parts direct, subject to his perpendicular beams, unhabitable, or extremely hot. Ray.

UNHACK'ED. adj. Not cut; not hewn; not notched with cuts.

With a blessed and unweary'd retire,

With unhack'd swords, and helmets all unbruise'd,

We will bear home that lusty blond again. Shak.

Part with unhack'd edges, and bear back

Our targe undinted. Shaksp. Antony and Cleopatra.

TO UNHALL'OW. v. a. To deprive of holiness; to profane; to desecrate.

Perhaps the fact

Is not so heinous now, forestall'd fruit,

Profan'd first by the serpent; by him first

Made common, and unhallow'd, ere our taste. Milt.

The vanity unhallows the virtue. L'Estrange.

This one use left such an indelible sacredness upon them, that the impiety of the design could be no sufficient reason to unhallow and degrade them to common use. South.

UNHALL'OWED. adj. Unholy; profane.

Thy curish spirit

Govern'd a wolf, who hang'd for human slaughter

Ev'n from the gallows did his fell soul fleet;

And while thou lay'st in thy unhallow'd dam

Infus'd itself in thee. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

I had not thought to have unlock'd my lips

In this unhallow'd air, but that this juggler

Would think to charm my judgment, as mine eyes,

Obluding false rules, prance'd in reason's garb. Milton.

Nor shall presume to violate these bands,

Or touch thy person with unhallow'd hands. Dryden.

Here cease thy flight, nor with unhallow'd lays

Touch the fair fame of Albion's golden days. Pope.

ed and thatched, that men do even shun the places for the uncomeliness thereof. Spenser.

2. Disingenuously; illiberally.

He raves, Sir; and, to cover my disdain,
Unhandsomely would his denial feign. Dryden.

UNHANDSOMENESS. n. s. [from unhandsome.]

1. Want of beauty.

The sweetness of her countenance did give such a grace to what she did, that it did make handsome the unhandsomeness of it; and make the eye force the mind to believe, that there was a praise in that unkindness. Sidney.

2. Want of elegance.

Be not troublesome to thyself, or to others, by unhandsomeness or uncleanness. Taylor.

UNHAPPINESS. n. s.

1. Misery; infelicity.

If ever he have child, abortive be it,
Prodigious, and untimely brought to light,
And that be heir to his unhappiness! Shakespeare.

The real foundation of our unhappiness would be laid in our reason, and we should be more miserable than the beasts, by how much we have a quicker apprehension. Tillotson.

It is our great unhappiness, when any calamities fall upon us, that we are uneasy and dissatisfied.
Wake.

2. Misfortune; ill luck.

St. Austin hath laid down a rule to this purpose, though he had the unhappiness not to follow it al-

Tim'rous and loth, with novice modesty;
Insolence, unhardy, unadvent'rous. Milton.

UNHARMED. adj. Unhurt; not injured.

In strong proof of chastity well arm'd,
From love's weak, childish bow she lives unharm'd.
Shakespeare.

Though great light be insufferable to our eyes, yet the highest degree of darkness does not discomfort them; for, causing no disorderly motion, it leaves that curious organ unharm'd. Locke.

The Syrens once deluded, vainly charm'd;
Ty'd to the mast, Ulysses sail'd unharm'd. Grav.

UNHARMFUL. adj. Innoxious; innocent.

Themselves unharmful, let them live unharm'd;
Their jaws disabled, and their claws disarm'd. Dryden.

UNHARMONIOUS. adj.

And hills unhing'd, from their deep roots depart.
Buchanan.

3. To disorder; to confuse.

Rather than not accomplish my revenge,
Just or unjust, I would the world unbinge. Waller.
If God's providence did not order its cheats would not only justify private men out of their rights, but unbinge states, and run all into confusion.
Ray on the Creation.

UNHOLINESS. s. f. Impiety; profaneness; wickedness.

Too foul and manifest was the unholy of obtruding upon men remission of sins for money.
Raleigh.

UNHOLY. adj.

1. Profane; not hallowed.

Doth it follow that all things now in the church are unholy, which the Lord hath not himself precisely instituted? Hooker.

From the paradise of God,
Without remorse, drive out the sinful pair
From hallow'd ground th' unholy. Mik. Par. Lost.

2. Impious; wicked.

We think not ourselves the holier, because we use it, so neither should they with whom no such thing is in use, think us therefore unholy, because we submit ourselves unto that which, in a matter so indifferent, the wisdom of authority and law have thought comely. Hooker.

Far other dreams my erring soul employ;
Far other raptures of unholy joy. Pope.

UNHONOURED. *adj.*1. Not regarded with veneration; not celebrated.

Unhonour'd though I am, at least, said she,
Not unrever'd that impious act shall be; Dryden.
Pales unhonour'd, Ceres unemployed,
Were all forgot. Dryden.

2. Not treated with respect.

Grieve'd that a visitant to long should wait
Unmark'd, unhonour'd, at a monarch's gate. Pope.

To UNHOP, v. a. To divest of hoops.

Unhop the fair sex, and cure this fashionable tyranny got among them. Addison.

UNHOPED. } adj. Not expected; UNHOPED for. } greater than hope had promised.

With unhop'd success
Th' ambassadors return with promis'd peace, Dryden.
Heav'n has inspir'd me with a sudden thought,
Whence your unhop'd for safety may be wrought. Dryden.

UNHOPFUL. adj. Such as leaves no room to hope.

Benedict is not the unhopfullest husband that I know; thus far I can praise him; he is of approved valour. Shakespeare.

I thought the rousing style I wrote in, might prove no unhopful way to procure somewhat considerable from those great masters of chymical arcana. Boyle.

To UNHORSE, v. a. To beat from an horse; to throw from the saddle.

He would unhorse the lustiest challengers. Shak.
The emperor rescued a noble gentleman, whom unhorsed and sore wounded, the enemy was ready to have slain. Krollen.

On a fourth he fell, and him unhorses too, Daniel.
They are forc'd.

To quit their boats, and fare like men unhors'd.
Waller.

The knight unhors'd may rise from off the plain,
And fight on foot, their honour to regain. Dryden.

UNHOSPITABLE. adj. [inhospitabilis, Lat.]

Affording no kindness or entertainment to strangers; cruel; barbarous.

The cruel nation, covetous of prey,
Stain'd with my blood th' unhospitable coast. Dryden.

UNHOTTLE. adj. Not belonging to an enemy.

The high-prancing steed
The low, or dismounted riders; they expire by unhottle wounds destroy'd. Philips.

To UNHOUSE, v. a. To drive from the habitation.

Seek true religion: O where? Shakespeare.
Thinking her unhous'd here, and fled from us,
Sack her at Rome. Dante.
Death unwarms, with his cold, kind embrace,
Unhous'd my virgin soul from her last hiding place.
Addison.

1. Homeless; wanting a house.

Call the creatures,
Whole naked natures live in all the night
Of wretched heav'n; whose bare, unhous'd trunks,
To the conflicting elements expos'd,
Answer mercynators. Shakespeare's Titus.

2. Having no settled habitation.

But that I love the gentle Deidamia,
I would not my unhous'd, free condition
Put into circumscription and confine. Shakespeare's Othello.
Hear this.

You unhous'd, lawless, raphallaz libertines!
Southern.

UNHOUSELESS. adj. Having not the sacrament.

Thus was I sleeping, by a brother's hand,
Of life, of crown, of queen, at once dispos'd
Cut off even in the blossoms of my age, Unhous'd, obnoxious, unarm'd, Shakespeare's Hamlet.

UNHUMILIATED. adj. Not humbled; not touched with shame or confusion.

Should I of these the liberty receive,
Who feed, as to their constant patrimony, Unhous'd, unarm'd, unarm'd, Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Headlong would follow? Shakespeare's Paradise Regained.

UNHURT. adj. Free from harm.

Of fifteen hundred, eight hundred were slain in the field; and of the remaining seven hundred, two men only came off unhurt. Hayes's History of England.

I tread more lightly on the ground;
My nimble feet from unhurt flowers rebounding;
I walk in air. Dryden's State of Lancaster.

Supported by this cut,
Through burning flames I pass'd unhurt;
And breath'd in tainted air. Shakespeare's Spenser.

The stars shall fade away;
But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth;
Unhurt amidst the war of elements;
The wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds. Addison.

UNHURTFUL. adj. Innoxious; harmless; doing no harm.

You hope the duke will do you no more of you;
I imagine me too unhurtful an opponent. Shakespeare.
Flames unhurtful, however, dance in air. Blackburn.

UNHURTFULLY. adv. Without harm;
innocently.

We laugh at others as innocents, and as un-hurtfully as at ourselves. Pope's Swift.

UNICORN. adj. [unicornis, unus and cornu, Latin.]1. A beast, whether real or fabulous; that has only one horn.

Were thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would tenfold thee. Shakespeare's Titus.

Unicornes may be believ'd with reason,
Beasts with intelligence, men with detraction. Shakespeare.

Nature in corrigentious animals hath plac'd the horns inverted upwards, as in the rhinoceros, Indian ox, and unicorn beetles. Brown's Fable Err.

It is a proof consequence, that because Dioscorides hath made no mention of a unicorn's horn, there is therefore no such thing in nature. Brown's Fable Err.

Some unicornes we will allow even among insects,
as these ridiculous vermin described by Maffius.
Brown.

Will the fierce unicorn thy voice obey,
Stand at the gr.b, and feed upon thy prey? Shakespeare.

A bird.

Of the unicorn bird, the principal marks are three: headed and tufted like the penguin cock, and like a goose, horned on his forehead, with long, blunt, or the unicorn, is said to be found on his wings, bigger than a swan.

UNIFORM. adj. [unus and forma.]

1. Keeping its tenour; similar.

Though when confusedly mix'd it may put on a face never to be seen alike, yet it is in reality very different. Boyle.

2. Conforming to one rule; acting in the same manner; agreeing with each other.

The only point is about the manner of their unity, how far churches are bound to be uniform in their ceremonies, and what way they ought to take for that purpose. Hooker.

Crucifixes of what condition soever, though each in different manner, yet all with a uniform consent, admit her, as the mother of their peace and joy. Hooker.

Numbers, being neither uniform in their designs, nor direct in their views, neither could manage nor maintain the power they got. Swift.

UNIFORMITY. s. f. [uniformitas, Fr.]

1. Resemblance to itself; even tenour.

There is no uniformity in the design of Spenser;
he aims at the accomplishment of no one action. Dryden.

Queen Elizabeth was remarkable for that steady-ness and uniformity which ran through all her actions. Addison.

2. Conformity to one pattern; resemblance of one to another.

The unity of that visible body and church of Christ, consisteth in that uniformity which all the several persons thereunto belonging have, by reason of that one Lord whose servants they all profess themselves; that one faith which they all acknowledge; that one baptism wherewith they are all initiated. Hooker.

The great council of Nice ordain'd that there should be a constant uniformity in the case. Nelson.

UNIFORMITY. s. f. [from uniform.]

1. Without variation; even tenour.

That firm resolution from the church, though dispersed through many lands, each notwithstanding kept a single heart, as if they were within the walls of some one temple, and of some one fold; as if it had but one heart and soul. Hooker.

The uniformity of the nature of each of them is not uniformity, and the uniform motion of them is not uniformity, may be propagated along them from one end to the other, and yet without uniformity. Newton's Opticks.

2. Without diversity of one from another.

UNIMAGINABLE. adj. Not to be imagined by the fancy; not to be conceived.

Things to their thought,
So unimagined, as late in heaven, Addison's Par. Lost.

The faintest organ that flies his grave-fetted de-cant in lofty fumes, or the whole symphony, with united and unimagined touches, adorns and graces
the well-tuned organs of some choice composer. Milton in Education.

An infinite succession of the generations of men, without any permanent foundation, is barely unimaginable. Tulstien.

UNIMAGINABLE. adv. To a degree not to be imagined.

Little could be said, where they allure, may not be so much enough to begethous at the unimaginably subtle corporeal, that make up the beams of light.
Boyle.

UNIMITABLE. adj. [inimitabilis, Fr. inimitabilis, Lat.] Not to be imitated.

Both these are unimitable.

Brown's Theory of the Earth.

UNIMORTAL. adj. Not immortal; mortal.

They denote them several ways,
From the history, or unimortal make.
Shakespeare.

UNIMORTAL. adj. Not liable to waste or diminution.

If the superior be unimpaired, it is a strong presumption that the inferior will be so also.

UNIMPAIRED, adj. Not diminished; not worn out.

Yet unimpaired with labour, or with time,
Your age but seems in a new youth to climb. Dryd.
If our silver and gold diminish, our publick credit continues unimpaired. Blackmore

Address to the State of the War.
UNIMPAIRED, adj. Not affected.

If agreeable to the state of the world,
My celestial patroness, who designs
Her nightly visitation unimpair'd. Mist. Par. Lof.

UNIMPAIRED, adj. Not affected.

1. Not momentous.
2. Assuming no airs of dignity.

A free, unimpaired, natural, easy manner; diverting others just as we diverted ourselves.

UNIMPAIRED, adj. Not affected; not teased to compliance.

Who ever ran
To danger unimpaired, he was then
No better than a sanguine, virtuous man. Denne.

UNIMPROVABLE, adj. Incapable of melioration.

UNIMPROVABLENESS, n. f. [from unimprovable.] Quality of not being improvable.

This must be imputed to their ignorance and unimprovableness in knowledge, being generally without literature. Hammond.

UNIMPROVED, adj.

1. Not made better.
2. Not made more knowing.

Not a man went unimproved away. Pope.

3. Not taught; not meliorated by instruction.

Young Fortinbras,
Of unimproved mettle hot and full. Shak. Hamlet.
Shallow unimproved intellects are constant offenders to humanity. Glaville.

UNIMPROVED, adj. Admitting no increase.

That which ought to be appropriated to God, results chiefly from an altogether, or almost unimprovable elevation and edifice of affection. Boyle.

UNIMPROVED, adj. Partial; leaning to a side.

His disposition touching the catholic church was unimproved; he, touching our church, was the opinion of those that favour his pretended reformation is. Houly.

UNIMPROVED, adj. Not diligent; not laborious.

Since we cannot think in sluggish or unimproved agents, as not to find our experiments for the purpose. Dryd. of Pity.

UNIMPROVED, adj. Not set on fire.

When weak bodies come to be inflamed, they gather a much greater heat than others have unimproved. Bacon.

UNIMPROVED, adj. Not capable of being set on fire.

The unimprovable spirit of such congregations may be pretended to be but a species of phlegm and bile. Boyle.

UNIMPROVED, adj. Not improved.

Of nuptial sanctity, and marriage ties,
No unimproved union can be made; it is noble to us, that unimprovable had yielded to her. Pope.

UNIMPROVED, adj. Unimproved.

Unimproved, not improved.

UNIMPROVED, adj. Unimproved.

Unimproved, not improved.

Unimproved, not improved.

Unimproved, not improved.

Unimproved, not improved.

UNIMPROVED, adj. Unimproved.

If there be any place upon earth of that nature that paradise had, the same may be found within that supposed unimprovable burnt zone, or within the tropicks. Raleigh.
Had not the deep been form'd, that might contain
All the collected treasures of the main;
The earth had still o'erwhelm'd with water flood,
To man an unimprovable flood. Blackmore.

UNIMPROVED, adj. Unimproved.

UNYINTED. adj. Not asked.

His honest friends, at thine hour of dusk,
Come uninted. Philips.

UNJOINTED. adj.

1. Disjoined; separated.

I hear the found of words, their sense the air Dissolves unjointed ere it reach my ear. Milt. Agonist.

2. Having no articulation.

They are all three immovable or unjointed, of the thickness of a little pin. Crow's Museum.

UNION. n. f. [unio, Latin.]

1. The act of joining two or more, so as to make them one.

Adam, from whose dear side I boast me sprung,
And gladly of our union hear thee speak,
One heart, one soul, in both! Milton's Par. Lost.
One kingdom, joy, and union without end. Milt.

2. Concord; conjunction of mind or interests.

The experience of these profitable emanations from God, most commonly are the first motive of our love; but when we once have tasted his goodness, we love the spring for its own excellency, passing from considering ourselves, to an union with God. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

3. A pearl. Not in use.

The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath;
And in the cup an union shall be throw,
Richer than that which four successive kings
In Denmark's crown have worn. Shakspeare. Hamlet.

4. [In law.] Union is a combining or consolidation of two churches in one, which is done by the consent of the bishop, the patron, and incumbent. And this is properly called an union; but there are two other sorts, as when one church is made subject to the other, and when one man is made prelate of both,
and when a conventual is made cathedral. Touching union in the first signification, there was a statute, an. 37 Hen.
VIII. chap. 21. that it should be lawful in two churches, whereof the value of the one is not above six pounds in the king's books, of the first fruits, and not above one mile distant from the other.
Union in this signification is personal,
and that is for the life of the incumbent; or real, that is, perpetual, whosoever is incumbent. Corvel.

UNIPAROUS. adj. [unus and pario.]
Bringing one at a birth.

Others make good the paucity of their breed with the duration of their days, whereof there want not examples in aninals uniparous.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UNISON. adj. [unus and sonus, Latin.] Sounding alone.

Sounds intermix'd with voice Choral, or unison. Milton's Paradise Lost.

UNISON. n. f.

1. A string that has the same sound with another.

When moved matter meets with any thing like that from which it received its primary impulse, it will in like manner move it, as in musical strings tuned unisons. Glanville.

2. A single unvaried note.

Lost was the nation's sense, nor could be found,
While a long, solemn unison went round. Pope.
Diversity'd midst unison of rhyme,
Freer than air, yet manacled with rhyme. Harte.

UNIT. n. f. [unus, unitus, Lat.] One;
the least number; or the root of numbers.

If any atom should be moved mechanically, without attraction, 'tis above a hundred million millions odds to an unit, that it would not strike upon any other atom, but glide through an empty interval without contact. Bentley.

Units are the integral parts of any large number.
Watts.

TO UNITE. v. a. [unitus, Latin.]

1. To join two or more into one.

The force which went in two to be dispersed,
In one alone right hand he now unites. Spenser.
Whatever truths
Redeem'd from error, or from ignorance,
Thin in their authors, like rich veins of ore,
Your works unite, and still discover more. Dryden.
A proposition for uniting both kingdoms was begun. Swift.

2. To make to agree.
The ing proposed nothing more than to unite
his kingdom in one form of worship. Clarendon.

3. To make to adhere.
The peritonaeum, which is a dry body, may be united with the muscular flesh. Wifeman's Surgery.

4. To join.
In the lawful name of marrying,
To give our hearts united ceremony. Shakspeare.
Charity is of a softening and uniting nature. Pearson.

Let the ground of the picture be well united with colours of a friendly nature. Dryd. Dufres.

5. To join in interest.
Unto their assembly mine honour be not thou united. Genesi.

TO UNITE. v. n.

1. To join in an act; to concur; to act in concert.
If you will now unite in your complaints,
And force them with a constancy, the cardinal Cannot stand under them. Shakspeare. Henry VIII.

2. To coalesce; to be cemented; to be consolidated.

3. To grow into one.

UNITEDLY. adv. With union; so as
to join.

The eyes, which are of a watry nature, ought to be much printed, and unitedly on their lower parts;
but boldly touched above by the light and shadows.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

UNITER. n. f. The person or thing that unites.

Suppose an uniter of a middle constitution, that should partake of some of the qualities of both.
Glanville.

UNITION. n. f. [union, Fr. from unite.]
The act or power of uniting; conjunction; coalition. A word proper, but little used.

As long as any different substance keeps off the unition, hope not to cure a wound. Wifeman's Surg.

UNITIVE. adj. [from unite.] Having the power of uniting.

That can be nothing else but the unitive way of religion, which consists of the contemplation and love of God. Norris.

UNITY. n. f. [unitas, Latin.]

1. The state of being one.

Those heretics introduced a plurality of gods; and so made the profession of the unity part of the symbolism, that should discriminate the orthodox from them. Hammond.

The production of one being the destruction of another, although they generate, they increase not; and must not be said to multiply, who do not transcend an unity. Brown.

Man is to beget
Like of his like; his image multiply'd
In unity defective; which requires Collateral love, and dearest unity. Milt. Par. Lost.

Whatever we can consider as one thing, suggests to the understanding the idea of unity. Locke.

2. Concord; conjunction.

That which you hear, you'll swear
You see, there is such unity in the proofs. Shak.

Nor can we call those many, who endeavour to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace.
By this, said our Saviour, shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another; and this is the unity of charity. Jerom.
Take unity then out of the world, and it dissolves into a chaos. Holyday.

We, of all Christians, ought to promote unity among ourselves and others. Spott's Sermons.

3. Agreement; uniformity.

To the avoiding of dissension, it availeth much, that there be amongst them an unity, as well in ceremonies as in doctrine. Hooker.

4. Principle of dramattick writing, by which the tenour of the story, and propriety of representation, is preserved.

The unities of time, place, and action, are exactly observed. Dryden's Preface to All for Love.

Although in poetry it be absolutely necessary that the unities of time, place, and action should be thoroughly understood, there is still something more essential, that elevates and astonishes the fancy. Addison.

5. [In law.]

Unity of possession is a joint possession of two rights by several titles. For example, I take a lease of land from one upon a certain rent; afterwards I buy the fee-simple. This is an unity of possession, whereby the lease is extinguished, by reason that I, who had before the occupation only for my rent, am become lord of the same, and am to pay my rent to none. Covent.

UNJUDGED. adj. Not judicially determined.

Causes unjudg'd disgrace the loaded file,
And sleeping laws the king's neglect revile. Prior.

UNIVERSAL. adj. [universalis, Latin.]

1. General; extending to all.

All forrow'd: if all the world could have seen't, the woe had been universal. Shak. Wint. Tale.

Appetite, an universal wolf,
So doubly seconded with will and power,
Must make perforce an universal prey,
And last eat up itself. Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida.

Divine laws and precepts simply and formally moral, are universal, in respect of persons, and in regard of their perpetual obligation. White.

This excellent epistle, though, in the front of it, it bears a particular inscription, yet in the drift of it is universal, as designing to convince all mankind of the necessity of seeking for happiness in the gospel. South.

No subject can be of universal, hardly can it be of general concern. Reynolds.

2. Total; whole.

From harmony, from heav'nly harmony,
This universal frame began. Dryden.

3. Not particular; comprising all particulars.

From things particular
She doth abstract the universal kinds. Davies.

An universal was the object of imagination, and there was no such thing in reality. Arbutnot and Puff.

UNIVERSAL. n. f. The whole; the general system of the universe. Not in use.

To what end had the angel been set to keep the entrance into paradise after Adam's expulsion, if the universal had been paradise?

Raleigh's History of the World.

Plato calleth God the cause and original, the nature and reason of the universal. Raleigh.

UNIVERSALITY. n. f. [universalitas, school Latin.] Not particularity; ge-nerality; extension to the whole.

This catholicism, or second affection of the church, consisteth generally in universality, as embracing all sorts of persons, as to be disseminated through all nations, as comprehending all ages, as containing all necessary and saving truths, as obliging all conditions of men to all kind of obedience, as curing all diseases, and planting all graces in the souls of men. Pearson.

This

This catalogue of sin is but of sin under a limitation; an ununiversality of sin under a certain kind; that is, of all sins of direct and personal commission. Smith.

The ununiversality of the deluge I insist upon; and that marine bodies are found in all parts of the world. Woodward.

A special conclusion cannot be inferred from a moral ununiversality, nor always from a physical one; though it may be always inferred from an ununiversality that is metaphysical. Watts.

He might have seen it in an instance or two; and he mistook accident for ununiversality. Reynolds.

UNIVERSALLY. adv. [from universal.]

Throughout the whole; without exception.

As he began, and not cut himself
The web: knot he made! Shakspeare. Coriolanus.

2. To open.

Unknot that threat'ning, unkind bow,
And dart not scornful glances from those eyes. Shakspeare.

To UNKNOWN. v. a. To cease to know.

It's already known;
Oh! can you keep it from your lives, unknown it? Swift.

UNKNOWNABLE. adj. Not to be known.
Distinguish well between knowables and unknownables. Watts.

UNKNOWNING. adv.

1. Ignorant; not knowing; with of.

Let me speak to th' yet unknown world,
How the strange crime about. Shakspeare. Hamlet.
Though unknown persons may accuse others, yet can they never the more absolve themselves. Decay of Piety.

Unknowning I prepar'd thy bridal bed;
With empty hopes of happy issue fed. Dryden.
Unknowning he requires it; and when known,
He thinks it his; and values it, 'tis gone. Dryden.
His hounds, unknowning of his change, pursue
The chase, and their mistaken master slew. Dryden.
Pious, mounting from the hoary deep,
Surveys his charge, unknowning of deceit. Pope.

2. Not practised; not qualified.

So Libyan huntsmen, on some sandy plain,
From shady coverts rou'd, the lion call.
The kingly beast roars out with loud disdain,
And slowly moves, unknowning to give place. Dryden.
These were they, whose souls the furies steel'd,
And curs'd with hearts unknowning how to yield. Pope.

UNKNOWNINGLY. adv. Ignorantly; without knowledge.

The beauty I beheld has struck me dead:
Unknowningly she strikes, and kills by chance. Dryden.
They are like the Syrians, who were first smitten with blindness, and unknowningly led out of their way, into the capital of their enemy's country. Addison's Freeholder.

UNKNOWN. adj.

1. Not known.

'Tis not unknown to you,
How much I have disabled my estate. Shakspeare.
Many are the trees of God, that grow
In Paradise, and various, yet unknown to us. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Here may I always on this downy grass,
Unknown, unseen, my easy minutes pass: Roscommon.
If any chance has hitherto brought the name
Of Palamedes, not unknown to fame,
Accus'd and sentenc'd for pretended crimes. Dryden.
Though incest is indeed a deadly crime,
You are not guilty, since unknown 'twas done,
And, known, had been abhor'd. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

At fear of death, that fadens all
With terrors round, can reason hold her throne;
Despise the known, nor tremble at th' unknown? Pope.

2. Greater than is imagined.

The planting of hemp and flax would be an unknown advantage to the kingdom. Bacon.

3. Not having communication.

I am yet
Unknown to woman; never was forsworn. Shakspeare.

4. Without communication.

At a little inn, the man of the house, formerly a servant in the family, to do honour to his old master, had, unknown to Sir Roger, put him up in a sign-post. Addison.

UNLABOURED. adj.

1. Not produced by labour.

Unlaboured harvests shall the fields adorn,
And unlaboured grapes shall blush on ev'ry thorn. Dryden.

2. Not cultivated by labour.

Not eastern monarchs, on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple shine to gay,
As the bright natives of th' unlaboured field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd. Blackmore.

3. Spontaneous; voluntary.

Their charms, if claims they have, the truth supplies,
And from the theme unlaboured beauties rise. Nichols.

To UNLACED. v. a.

1. To loose any thing fastened with strings.

He could not endure to cruel case,
But thought his arms to leave, and helmet to unlace. Spenser.

A little river roll'd,
By which there sat a knight with helm unlac'd,
Himself refreshing with the liquid cold. Spenser.
The helmet from my brow unlac'd. Pope's Ode.

2. To loose a woman's dress.

Can I forget, when they in prison placing her,
With swelling heart, in spite, and due disdainfulneis,
She lay for dead, till I help'd with unlacing her? Swiv.
Unlace youth's, for that harmonious chime Tells me from you, that now it is bed-time. Donne.

3. To divest of ornaments.

You unlace your reputation,
And spend your rich opinion for the name
Of a night-brawler. Shakspeare's Othello.

To UNLAD. v. a.

1. To remove from the vessel which carries.

He's a foolish seaman,
That, when his ship is sinking, will not Unlade his hopes into another bottom. Dante.

2. To exonerate that which carries.

The virtuous merchant, who design'd for far,
And touches on our hospitable shore,
Charm'd with the splendour of this northern star,
Shall here unlade him, and depart no more. Dryden.

3. To put out. Used of a vessel.

We landed at Tyre; for there the ship was to unlade her burden. Acts, xxi. 3.

UNLAD. adj.

1. Not placed; not fixed.

Whatever we do hold now in this present world, it was unwrapped within the bowels of divine mercy, written in the book of eternal wisdom, and held in the hands of omnipotent power, the first foundations of the world being as yet unlaid. Hooker.

2. Not pacified; not filled; not suppressed.

No evil thing that walks by night,
Blue, meagre hag, or stubborn unlaid ghost,
Hath hurtful power o'er true virginity. Milton.

UNLAMENTED. adj. Not deplored.

After six years spent in outward opulency, and inward murmur that it was not greater, he died unlamented by any. Clarendon.

Thus unlamented pass the proud away,
The pride of fools, and pageant of a day. Pope.

To UNLATCH. v. a. To open by lifting up the latch.

My worthy wife
The door unlatch'd; and, with repeated calls, Invites her former lord within my walls. Dryden.

UNLAWFUL. adj. Contrary to law; not permitted by the law.

Before I be convict by course of law,
To threaten me with death is most unlawful. Shakspeare.

It is an unlawful thing for a Jew to come unto one of another nation. Acts, x. 28.
Shew me when it is our duty, and when unlawful, to take these courses, by some general rule of a perpetual, never-failing truth. South.

The secret ceremonies I conceal,
Uncouth, perhaps unlawful to reveal. Dryden.

UNLAWFULLY. adv.

1. In a manner contrary to law or right.

He that gains all that he can lawfully this year, next year will be tempted to gain something unlawfully. Taylor.

2. Illegitimately; not by marriage.

I had rather my brother die by the law, than my son should be unlawfully born. Shakspeare.
Gives me your opinion, what part I, being unlawfully born, may claim of the man's affection who begot me. Addison.

UNLAWFULNESS. n. f.

1. Contrariety to law; state of being not permitted.

If those alleged testimonies of scripture did indeed concern the matter to such effect as was pretended, that which they should infer were, unlawfulness. Hooker.

The original reason of the unlawfulness of lying is, that it carries with it an act of injustice, and a violation of the right of him to whom we were obliged to signify our minds. South.

2. Illegitimacy.

To UNLEARN. v. a. To forget, or disuse, what has been learned.

Antiquities, being ask'd of one, what learning was most necessary for man's life? answered, To unlearn that which is naught. Bacon.

This were to imply, that all books in being should be destroyed; and that all the age should take new pains to unlearn those habits which have cost them so much labour. Hobbes.

The government of the tongue is a piece of morality which sober nature dictates, which yet our greatest scholars have unlearned. Decay of Piety.
Some cyders have by art, or age, unlearn'd
Their genuine relish, and of sundry wines Assum'd the flavour. Philips.

What they thus learned from him in one way,
they did not unlearn again in another. Atterbury.
A wicked man is not only obliged to learn to do well, but unlearn his former life. Rogers.

UNLEARNED. adj.

1. Ignorant; not informed; not instructed.

This selected piece, which you translate,
Foretells your studies may communicate,
From darker dialect of a strange land,
Wisdom that here th' unlearn'd shall understand. Davenant.

And by succession of unlearned times,
As bards began, so monks rung on the chimes. Roscommon.

Some at the bar with subtilty defend
The cause of an unlearned, noble friend. Dryden.
Though unlearned men well enough understood the words white and black, yet there were philosophers found, who had subtilty enough to prove th' it white was black. Locke.

2. Not gained by study; not known.

They learn more words, or such things chiefly as were better unlearned. Milton on Education.

3. Not suitable to a learned man.

I will prove those verses to be very unlearned, neither favouring of poetry, wit, or invention. Shakspeare.

UNLEARNEDLY. adv. Ignorantly; grossly.

He, in his epistle, plainly affirmeth, they think unlearnedly who are of another belief. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UNLEAVENED. adj. Not fermented; not mixed with fermenting matter.

They baked unleavened cakes of the dough, for it was not leavened. Exodus, ii. 39.

UNLEISURELY. n. f. Business; want of time; want of leisure. Not in use.

My essay touching the scripture having been written partly in England, part y in another kingdom, it were strange if there did not appear much unevenness, and if it did not betray the unlesured-ness of the wandering author. Boyle.

UNLESS. conjunct. Except; if not; sup-posing that not.

Let us not say, we keep the commandments of the one, when we break the commandments of the other.

the other: for, unless we observe both, we obey neither. Hooker.

Unless I look on Sylvia in the day,
There is no day for me to look upon. Shakespeare.

What hidden strength,
Unless the strength of heav'n, if you mean that? Milton.

For sure I am, unless I win in arms,
To stand excluded from Emilia's charms;
Nor can my strength avail, unless by thee
Endu'd with force I gain the victory. Dryden.

The commendation of adversaries is the greatest triumph of a writer, because it never comes unless extorted. Dryden.

No poet ever sweetly sung,
Unless he were, like Phœbus, young;
Nor ever nymph inspir'd to rhyme,
Unless, like Venus, in her prime. Swift.

UNLESSONED. adj. Not taught.
The full sum of me
Is an unless'd girl, unless'd, unpractis'd;
Happy in this, she is not yet so old
But she may learn. Shakespeare.

UNLETTERED. adj. Unlearned; untaught.
When the apostles of our Lord were ordained to alter the laws of heathenish religion, St. Paul excepted, the rest were unlettered and unlettered
men. Hooker.

Such as the jocund flute, or gamester pipe
Sings up among the loose, unletter'd hinds,
Who thank the gods amiss. Milton.

Th' unletter'd Christian, who believes in grofs, Plods on to heav'n, and ne'er is at a loss. Dryden.

UNL'VEILED. adj. Not laid even.
All unveil'd the gay garden lies. Tickell.

UNL'RIDINOUS. adj. Not lustful; pure from carnality.
In those hearts
Love unl'ridinous reign'd: not jealousy
Was understood, the injur'd lover's hell. Milton.

UNL'CNSED. adj. Having no regular permission.
Ask what boldness brought him hither
Unl'cn'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Wait the thoughtless, self-confiding train,
No more, unl'cn'd, thus to brave the main. Pope.

UNL'CKED. adj. Shapeless; not formed: from the opinion that the bear licks her young to shape.
Shape my legs of an unequal size,
To disproportion me in every part,
Like to a chaos, or unl'ck'd bear-whelp. Shaksp.
These unl'ck bear-whelps. Dante.

The bloody bear, an independent beast,
Unl'ck'd to form, it groans his hate express. Dryden.

UNL'GHTED. adj. Not kindled; not set on fire.
There lay a log unlighted on the earth:
For th' unborn chief the fatal sisters came,
And rais'd it up, and rais'd it on the flame. Dryden.

The sacred wood, which on the altar lay,
Untouch'd, unlighted glows. Pope.

UNL'GHSOME. adj. Dark; gloomy; wanting light.
First the sun,
A mighty sphere! he fram'd, unl'ghsome first,
Thou, h of æthereal mould. Milton.

UNL'KE. adj.
1. Dissimilar; having no resemblance.
Where tales are to unlike as theirs and ours, I see not how that which they did should induce, much less introduce us to the same practice. Hooker.

So the twins humours, in our Telenor, are
Unlike; this harsh and rude, that smooth and fair.
Dante.

Unlike the niceness of our modern dames;
Affected nymphs, with new affected names. Dryden.
Our ideas, whilst we are awake, succeed one another not much unlike the images in the inside of a lantern. Locke.

Some she disgrac'd, and some with honours
crown'd;

Unlike successes equal merits found. Pope.

2. Improbable; unlikely; not likely.
Make not impossible that which but seems unlike. Shakespeare.

What befel the empire of Almsigne were not unlike to befall to Spain, if it should break. Becon.

UNL'KELIHOOD. } n. s. [from unlikely.]
UNL'KELINESS. } Improbability.

The work was carried on, amidst all the unlike-lihoods and discouraging circumstances imaginable;
the builders holding the sword in one hand, to defend the towel working with the other. South.
There are degrees herein, from the very neighbourhood of demonstration, quite down to impossibility and unlikeliness, even to the condense of impossibility. Locke.

UNL'KELY. adj.
1. Improbable; not such as can be reasonably expected.
A very unlikely entry she hath stumbled upon. Sidney.

2. Not promising any particular event.
Effects are miraculous and strange, when they grow by unlikely means. Hooker.
My advice and actions both have met Success in things unlikely. Denham's Sophy.

This collection we thought not only unlikely to reach the future, but unworthy of the present age. Swift.

UNL'KELY. adv. Improbably.
The pleasures we are to enjoy in that conversation, not unlikely may proceed from the discoveries each shall communicate to another, of God and nature. Pope.

UNL'KENESS. n. s. Dissimilitude; want of resemblance.
Imitation pleases, because it affords matter for enquiring into the truth or falsehood of imitation, by comparing its likeness or unlikeness with the original. Dryden.

UNL'MITABLE. adj. Admitting no bounds.
He tells us 'tis unlimited and unlimitable. Locke.

UNL'IMITED. adj.
1. Having no bounds; having no limits.
So unlimited is our impotence to recompense or repay God's dilection, that it fetters our very wishes. Boyle.
It is some pleasure to a finite understanding, to view unlimited excellencies, which have no bounds, though it cannot comprehend them. Tillotson.

2. Undefined; not bounded by proper exceptions.
With grofs and popular capacities, nothing doth more prevail than unlimited generalities, because of their plainness at the first sight; nothing less, with men of exact judgment, because such rules are not safe to be trusted over far. Hooker.

3. Unconfined; not restrained.
All the evils that can proceed from an untied tongue, and an unguarded, unlimited will, we put upon the account of drunkenness. Taylor.

Alas, he not unto God such an unlimited exercise of mercy, as may destroy his justice. Rogers.

Husbands are counsel'd not to trust too much to their wives' owning the doctrine of unlimited conjugal felicity. Arbutnot.

UNL'IMITEDLY. adv. Boundlessly; without bounds.
Many advise to unlimitedly to the force of a good meaning, to think that it is able to bear the stress of whatsoever commissions they shall lay upon it. Ducay of Piety.

UNL'NEAL. adj. Not coming in the order of succession.
They put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unl'neal hand,
No son of mine succeeding. Shaksp. Macbeth.

To UNL'NE. v. a. To untwist; to open.
About his neck

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself;
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly Sewing Orlando, it unl'ne'd itself. Shakespeare.

UNL'QUIFIED. adj. Unmelted; undiffolved.
These huge, unwieldy lumps remained in the melted matter rigid and unliquified, floating in it like cakes of ice in a river. Addison on Italy.

To UNL'OAD. v. a.
1. To disburden; to exonerate; to free from load.
Like an ass, whose back with ingots bows,
Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloads thee. Shak. Meas. for Meas.
Vain man, forbear, of cares unload thy mind;
Forget thy hopes, and give thy fears to wind. Creech.

Some to unload the fertile branches run. Pope.
2. To put off any thing burdensome.
To you duke Humphry must unload his grief. Shakespeare.
Nor can my tongue unload my heart's great burthen. Shakespeare.

To UNL'OCK. v. a.
1. To open what is shut with a lock.
I have seen her unlock her closet, take forth paper. Shakespeare.
She springs a light,
Unlocks the doot, and, ere ring out of breath,
The dying law, and instruments of death. Dryden.

2. To open in general.
My purse, my person, my extremest means,
Lie all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.

I yielded, and unlock'd her all my heart,
Who, with a grain of manhood well reliev'd,
Might easily have shook off all her snares. Milto.

Sand is an advantage to cold clays, in that it warms them, and unlocks their binding qualities.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

A lixivium of quick lime unlocks the salts that are entangled in the viscid juices of some scorbutick persons. Arbutnot.

Thy forests, Windsor! and thy green retreats Invite my lays. Be present, Sylvan maids!
Unlock your springs, and open all your shades. Pope.

UNL'OCKED. adj. Not fastened with a lock.
UNL'OKED. } adj. Unexpected; not
UNL'OKED for. } foreseen.

Yet perhaps had their number prevailed, if the king of Pontus had not come unlooked for to their succour. Sidney.

How much unlook'd for is this expedition! Shakespeare.

God, I pray him
That none of you may live your natural age,
But by some unlook'd accident cut off. Shakespeare.

Whatsoever is new is unlooked for; and ever it mends some, and pares others. Bacon.

From that high hope, to what relapse
Unlook'd for are we fall'n! Paradise Regained.

Your affairs I have recommended to the gods,
but with unlook'd success. Dryden.

Nor fame I flight, nor for her favours call;
She comes unlook'd for, if she comes at all. Pope.

To UNL'OSE. v. a. To loose. A word perhaps barbarous and ungrammatical, the particle prefixed implying negation;
so that to unloose, is properly to bind.

York, unloose your long imprison'd thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart. Shak.

The weak, wanton Cupid,
Shall from your neck unloose his am'rous fold;
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.

Turn him to any cause of policy;
The gordian knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his garter. Shakespeare's Henry V.

It rested in you,
To unloose this tied-up justice when you pleas'd.

Shakespeare.

The latchet of his shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose.

Mark, i. 7.

He that should spend all his time in tying in-extricable knots, only to baffle the industry of those that should attempt to unloose them, would be thought not much to have served his generation.

Decay of Piety.

To UNLOOSE. v. n. To fall in pieces;
to lose all union and connexion.

Without this virtue, the publick union must unloose; the strength decay; and the pleasure grow faint.

Collins.

UNLOUSABLE. adj. [A word rarely used.]
Not to be lost.

Whatever may be said of the unlovable mobility of atoms, yet divers parts of matter may compose bodies that need no other cement to unite them, than the juxtaposition and resting together of their parts, whereby the air, and other fluids that might dissipate them, are excluded.

Boyle.

UNLOVED. adj. Not loved.

As love does not always reflect itself, Zelmane, though deaf in there was to love Palladius, yet could not ever persuade her heart to yield with that pain to Palladius, as they feel, that feel unloved love.

Sidney.

What though I be not fortunate;
But miserable most, to love unloved!

Shakespeare.

He was generally unloved, as a proud and supercilious person.

Clarendon.

UNLOVELINESS. n. f. Unamiableness;
inability to create love.

The old man, growing only in age and affection, followed his suit with all means of dishonest servants, large promises, and each thing else that might help to counteract his own unloveliness.

Sidney.

UNLOVELY. adj. That cannot excite love. There seems by this word generally more intended than barely nega-tion. See UNLOVELINESS.

UNLOVING. adj. Unkind; not fond.

Thou, liest with a goodly son,
Didst yield consent to disinherit him;
Which argu'd thee a most unloving father.

Shak.

UNLUCKILY. adv. Unfortunately; by ill luck.

Things have fallen out so unluckily,
That we have had no time to move our daughter.

Shaksp.

An ant dropt unluckily into the water.

Leff.

A fox unluckily crossing the road, drew off a considerable detachment.

Addison's Freeholder.

UNLUCKY. adj.

1. Unfortunate; producing unhappiness.
This word is generally used of accidents slightly vexatious.

You may make an experiment often, without meeting with any of those unlucky accidents which make such experiments a misfary.

Boyle.

2. Unhappy; miserable; subject to frequent misfortunes.

Then shall I recount a rueful case,
Said he; the while with this unlucky eye
I late beheld.

Sperber.

3. Slightly mischievous; mischievously waggish.

His friendship is counterfeit, seldom to trust,
His things unlucky, and ever unjust.

Tupper.

Why, cries an unlucky wag, a less bag might have served.

Leff.

There was a lad, th' unlucky of his crew,
Was still contriving something bad, but new.

King.

4. Ill-omen'd; inauspicious.

When I appear, see you avoid the place,
And haunt me not with that unlucky face.

Dryd.

UNLUSTRIOUS. adj. Wanting splen-dour; wanting lustre.

Should I join gripe with hands
Made bare with hourly falsehood, as with labour;
Then glad myself with peeping in an eye,
Bare and unlustrous as the smoky light
That's fed with stinking tallow?

Shakespeare.

To UNLUSTR. v. n. To separate vessels closed with chymical cement.

Our antimony thus handled, affordeth us a source of sulphur, of so sulphurous a smell, that, upon the unlustring the vessels, it infected the room with a scarce supportable stink.

Boyle.

UNMADE. adj.

1. Not yet formed; not created.

Thou wast begot in Demogorgon's hall,
And saw'st the secrets of the world unmade.

Spens.

Then might'st thou tear thy hair,
And fill upon the ground as I do now,
Taking the measure of an unmade grave.

Shaksp.

2. Deprived of form or qualities.

The first earth was perfectly unmade again, taken all to pieces, and framed a-new.

Hoodward's Natural History.

3. Omitted to be made.

You may the world of more defects upbraid,
That other works by art are unmade;
That she did never at her own expence
A palace rear.

Blackmore.

UNMAIMED. adj. Not deprived of any essential part.

An interpreter should give his author entire and unmaimed; the diction and the versification only are his proper province.

Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

UNMAKEABLE. adj. Not possible to be made.

If the principles of bodies are unalterable, they are also unmakeable by any but a divine power.

Grew's Cosmologia.

To UNMAKE. v. a. To deprive of former qualities before possessed. To deprive of form or being.

They've made themselves, and their fitness now
Does unmake you.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

God does not make or unmake things, to try experiments.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Empire! thou poor and despicable thing,
When such as these make, or unmake a king.

Dryd.

Bring this guide of the light within to the trial;
God, when he makes the prophet, does not unmake
the man.

Locke.

To UNMAKE. v. a.

1. To deprive of the constituent qualities of a human being, as reason.

What, quite unmann'd in folly? Shak. Macbeth.

Gross errors unman, and strip them of the very principles of reason and sober discourse.

South.

2. To emasculate.

3. To break into irresolution; to deject.

Her clamours pierce the Trojans' ears,
Unman their courage, and augment their fears.

Dryden.

Ulysses veil'd his pensive head;
Again unmann'd, a shower of sorrows shed.

Pope.

UNMANAGEABLE. adj.

1. Not manageable; not easily governed.

They'll judge every thing by models of their own, and thus are rendered unmanageable by any authority but that of absolute dominion.

Glanv.

None can be concluded unmanageable by the milder methods of government, till they have been thoroughly tried upon him; and if they will not prevail, we make no excuses for the obstinate.

Locke.

2. Not easily wadded.

UNMANACED. adj.

1. Not broken by horsemanship.

Like colts, or unmanaged horses, we start at dead bones and lifeless blocks.

Taylor's Rule of Liv. Holy.

2. Not tutored; not educated.

Savage princes flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought, and betray, in their actions, an unguided force, and unmanaged virtue.

UNMANLY. adj.

1. Unbecoming a human being.

It is strange to see the unmanlike cruelty of mankind, who, not content with their tyrannous ambition, to have brought the others' virtuous patience under them, think their masterhood nothing, without doing injury to them.

Sidney.

Where the act is unmanly, or the expectation contradictious to the attributes of God, our hopes we ought never to entertain.

Collier against Despair.

2. Unsuitable to a man; effeminate.

By the greatness of the cry, it was the voice of man; though it was a very unmanlike voice, so to cry.

Sidney.

New customs,

Though never so ridiculous,

Nay, let them be unmanly, yet are follow'd.

Shak.

This is in thee a nature but affected;

A poor unmanly melancholy, sprung

From change of fortune.

Shakespeare's Timon.

My servitude, ignoble,

Unmanly, ignominious, infamous.

Milt. Agonistes.

Unmanly dread invades the French astonish'd,

And fright their usefuk arms they quit.

Philips.

Think not thy friend can ever feel the soft

Unmanly warmth and tenderness of love.

Addison.

UNMANNERED. adj. Rude; brutal;
uncivil.

You have a slanderous, beastly, unwalk'd tongue

In your rude mouth, and favouring yourself,

Unmanner'd lord.

Ben Jonson's Cataline.

If your barking dog disturb her ease,

Th' unmanner'd malefactor is arraign'd.

Dryden's Juvenal.

UNMANNERLINESS. n. f. Breach of civility; ill behaviour.

A sort of unmannerliness is apt to grow up with young people, if not early restrained; and that is a forwardness to interrupt others speaking.

Locke on Education.

UNMANNERLY. adj. Ill-bred; not civil; not complaisant.

Sweetheart,

I were unmannerly to take you out,

And not to kiss you.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

He call'd them untaught knaves, unmannerly,

To bring a slovenly, unhandfome corse

Berwixt the wind and his nobility.

Shak. Henry IV.

He will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmannerly sadness in his youth.

Shakespeare.

Bare-faced ribaldry is both unmannerly in itself,

and fustian to the reader.

Dryden.

A divine dares hardly shew his person among fine gentlemen; or, if he fall into such company, he is in continual apprehension that some pret man of pleasure should break an unmannerly jest, and render him ridiculous.

Swift.

UNMANNERLY. adv. Uncivilly.

Forgive me,

If I have us'd myself unmannerly.

Shakespeare.

UNMANURED. adj. Not cultivated.

The land,

In antique times, was savage wilderness;

Unpeopled, unmanur'd, unprov'd, unprais'd.

Spens.

UNMARKED. adj. Not observed; not regarded.

I got a time, unmarked by any, to steal away,

I cared not whither, so I might escape them.

Sul.

This place unmark'd, though oft I walk'd the green,

In all my progress I had never seen.

Dryden.

Entering at the gate, conceal'd in clouds,

He mix'd, unmark'd, among the busy throng,

Borne by the tide, and pass'd unseen along.

Dryd.

Unmark'd, unhonour'd at a monarch's gate.

Pope.

UNMARRIED. adj. Having no husband, or no wife.

Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects, for they are light to run away.

Bacon.

Husbands.

Husbands and wives, boys and unmarry'd maids.
Dryden.

To UNMASK. v. a.

1. To strip of a mask.

2. To strip of any disguise.

With full cups they had unmask'd his soul.

Roscommon.

Though in Greek or Latin they amuse us, yet a translation unmask's them, whereby the cheat is transparent. Glanville.

To UNMASK. v. n. To put off the mask.

My husband bids me; now I will unmask.

This is that face was worth the looking on. Shak.

UNMASKED. adj. Naked; open to the view.

O, I am yet to learn a statesman's art;
My kindness and my hate unmask'd I wear,
For friends to trust, and enemies to fear. Dryden.

UNMASTERABLE. adj. Unconquerable; not to be subdued.

The factor is unmasterable by the natural heat of man; not to be dulcified by concoction, beyond unfavourable condition. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UNMASTERED. adj.

1. Not subdued.

2. Not conquerable.

Weigh what loss your honour may sustain, if you
On life your heat, or your chaste treasure open
To his unmaster'd impotency. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

He cannot his unmaster'd grief sustain,
But yields to rage, to madness and disdain. Dryden.

UNMATCHABLE. adj. Unparalleled;
unequaled.

The soul of Christ, that saw in this life the face of God, was, through so visible presence of Deity, filled with all manner of graces and virtues in that unmatchable degree of perfection; for which, of him we read it written, that God with the oil of gladness anointed him. Hobbes.

England breeds very valiant creatures; their maffists are of unmatchable courage. Shak. Hen. V.

UNMATCHED. adj. Matchless; having no match, or equal.

That glorious day, which two such navies saw,
As each, unmatch'd, might to the world give law;
Neptune, yet doubtful whom he should obey,
Held to them both the trident of the sea. Dryden.

UNMEANING. adj. Expressing no meaning; having no meaning.

With round, unmeaning face. Pope.

UNMEANT. adj. Not intended.

The flying spear was after thus sent;
But Rhettus happen'd on a death unmeant. Dryden.

UNMEASURABLE. adj. Boundless; unbounded.

Common mother! thou Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast Looms and feeds all. Shakspeare's Timon.
You preserved the lustre of that noble family, which the unmeasurable profusion of ancestors had expended. Swift.

UNMEASURED. adj.

1. Immense; infinite.

Does the sun dread th' imaginary sign,
Nor farther yet in liquid ether roll,
'Till he has gain'd some unfrequented place,
Lost to the world, in vast, unmeasur'd space? Blackmore.

2. Not measured; plentiful beyond measure.

From him all perfect good, unmeasur'd out, descends. Milton.

UNMEDDLED WITH. adj. Not touched;
not altered.

The flood-gate is opened and closed for six days, confining other ten days unmeddled with. Carew.

UNMEDITATED. adj. Not formed by previous thought.

Neither various style,
Nor holy rapture, wanted they, to praise

Their Maker, in fit strains pronounced, or sung.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

UNMET. adj. Not fit; not proper;
not worthy.

Madam was young, unmet the rule of sway. Spenser.

I am unmet;
For I cannot flatter thee in pride. Shakspeare.
O my father!

Prove you that any man with me convers'd
At hours unmet, refuse me, hate me. Shakspeare.
Alack! my hand is sworn

Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn;

Vow, alack! for youth unmet,

Youth so apt to pluck a sweet. Shakspeare.

Its fellowship unmet for thee,

Good reason was thou freely should'st dislike. Milton.

That muse desires the last, the lowest place,

Who, though unmet, yet touch'd the trembling

string

For the fair fame of Anne. Prior.

UNMELLOWED. adj. Not fully ripened.

His years but young, but his experience old;

His head unmelior'd, but his judgment ripe. Shak.

UNMELTD. adj. Undissolved by heat

Snow on Aetna does unmelted lie,

Whence rowling flames and scatter'd cinders fly. Wallers.

UNMENTIONED. adj. Not told; not named.

They left not any error in government unmentioned or unpressed, with the sharpest and most pathetical expressions. Clarendon.

Oh let me here sink down

Into my grave, unmentioned and unmourn'd! Southey.

UNMERCHANTABLE. adj. Unsaleable; not vendible.

They feed on salt, unmerchantable pilchard. Carew.

UNMERCIFUL. adj.

1. Cruel; severe; inclement.

For the humbling of this unmerciful pride in the eagle, providence has found out a way. L'Estr.

The pleasant lustre of flame delights children at first; but when experience has convinced them, by the exquisite pain it has put them to, how cruel and unmerciful it is, they are afraid to touch
it. Locke.

Whatever doctrine represents God as unjust and unmerciful, cannot be from God, because it subverts the very foundation of religion. Rogers.

2. Unconscionable; exorbitant.

Not only the price of the honest, unwasting subject was daily molested, but unmerciful demands were made of his applause. Pope.

UNMERCIFULLY. adv. Without mercy; without tenderness.

A little warm fellow fell most unmercifully upon his Gallick majesty. Addison.

UNMERCIFULNESS. n. f. Inclemency;
cruelty; want of tenderness.

Consider the rules of friendship, left justice turn into unmercifulness. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

UNMERITABLE. adj. Having no desert.
Not in use.

Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert, unmeritable, thuns your high request. Shakspeare.

UNMERITED. adj. Not deserved; not obtained otherwise than by favour.

This day, in whom all nations shall be blest,

Favour unmerited by me, who sought

Forbidden knowledge by forbidden means. Milton.

A tottering pinnacle unmerited greatness is.

Gon. of Tongue.

UNMERITEDNESS. n. f. State of being undeserved.

As to the freeness or unmeritedness of God's love; we need but consider, that we to little could at first deserve his love, that he loved us even before we had a being. Boyle.

UNMILKED. adj. Not milked.

The ewes still folded, with distended thighs,
Unmilk'd, lay bleating in distressful cries. Pope.

UNMINDFUL. adj. Not heeded; not regarded.

He was

A poor, unminded outlaw, breaking home;

My father gave him welcome to the shore. Shak.

He after Eve ledue'd, unminded, flunk

Into the wood. Milton.

UNMINDFUL. adj. Not heedful; not regardful; negligent; inattentive.

Worldly wights in place

Leave off their work, unmindful of this law.

To gaze on them: Spenser.

I shall let you see, that I am not unmindful of the things you would have me remember. Boyle.

Who now enjoys the, credulous, all gold;

Who always vacant, always amiable,

Hopes thee; of flattering gales

Unmindful. Milton.

Unmindful of the crown that virtue gives,

After this mortal change, to her true servants,

Amongst the enthroned gods on sainted fears. Milton.

He, not unmindful of his usual art,

First in dissembled fire attempts to part;

Then roaring beats he tries. Dryden's Fingl.

When those who dislike the constitution, are very zealous in their efforts for the service of their country, they are not wholly unmindful of their party, or their lives. Swift.

To UNMINGLE. v. a. To separate things mixed.

It will unmingl the wine from the water; the wine ascending, and the water descending.

Bacon's Natural History.

UNMINGLEABLE. adj. Not susceptible of mixture. Not used.

The sulphur of the concrete loses by the fermentation, the property of oil being unmingleable with water. Boyle.

The unmingleable liquors retain their distinct surfaces. Boyle.

UNMINGLED. adj. Pure; not vitiated
by any thing mingled.

As easy may it thou fall

A drop of water in the breaking gulph,

And take unmingled thence your drop again,

Without addition or diminishing. Shakspeare.

Springs on high hills are pure and unmingled.

Bacon.

His cup is full of pure and unmingled sorrow.

Taylor.

Vessels of unmingled wine,

Mellissacus, undecaying, and divine. Pope.

Fair, with fate, unmixed feet,

Where the raw'd pavement leads athwart the street. Gay.

UNMIXED. adj. Not softened.

With jacob accusation, unsoften'd flander, unmingled slander. Shakspeare's Much Ado.

UNMIXED. } adj. Not mingled with any

UNMIXT. } thing; pure; not corrupted by additions.

Thy commandment all alone shall live

Within the book and volume of my brain,

Unmix'd with baser matter. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

It exhibits a mixture of new concepts and old;

whereas the inflation gives the new, unmixed

otherwise than with some little asperion of the old. Bacon.

Thy constant quiet fills my peaceful breast

With unmix'd joy, uninterrupted rest. Roscommon.

What is glory but the blaze of fame,

The people's praise, if always praise unmixed? Milton.

Thy Arethusa stream remains unsoften'd;

Unmix with foreign filth, and undefil'd. Dryden.

Together our they fly,

Inseparable now, the truth and lie:

And this or that unmixed no mortal ear shall find. Pope.

UNMIXED.

UNMO'ANED. adj. Not lamented.

Faithless distress was left unmoan'd;

Your widow's laments likewise be unwept. Shaksp.

UNMOIST. adj. Not wet.

Volatile Herons, fluid and unmoist,

Mounts on the wings of air. Philips.

UNMOISTENED. adj. Not made wet.

The incident light that meets with a grosser liquor, will have its beams more or less interruptedly reflected, than they would be if the body had been unmoistened. Boyle.

UNMOISTED. adj. Free from disturbance; free from external troubles.

Cleopatra was read o'er,

While Scot, and Wake, and twenty more,

That teach one to deny one's self,

Stood unmoistened on the shelf. Prior.

The fowls of the air, and the beasts of the field, are supplied with every thing, unmoistened by hopes or fears. Rogers.

Safe on my shore each unmoistened swain
Shall tend the flocks, or reap the bearded grain. Pope.

To UNMOOR. v. a.

1. To loose from land, by taking up the anchors.

We with the rising morn our ships unmoor'd,
And brought our captives and our stores aboard. Pope.

2. Prior seems to have taken it for caking anchor.

Soon as the British ships unmoor,
And jolly long-boat rows to shore. Prior.

UNMORALIZED. adj. Untutored by morality.

This is censured as the mark of a dissolute and unmoralized temper. Norris.

UNMORTGAGED. adj. Not mortgaged.

Is there one God unworn to my destruction?

The least unmortgag'd hope? for, if there be,

methinks I cannot fall. Dryden's All for I over.

This he has repeated so often, that at present there is scarce a single gabel unmortgaged. Addison on Italy.

UNMORTIFIED. adj. Not subdued by sorrow and severities.

If our conscience reproach us with unmortified sin, our hope is the hope of an hypocrite. Rogers.

UNMOVEABLE. adj. Such as cannot be removed or altered.

Wherein consist the precise and unmoveable boundaries of that species. Locke.

UNMOVED. adj.

1. Not put out of one place into another.

Vipers that do lly
The light, oft under unmov'd slabs do lie. May's Virgil.

Nor winds, nor winter's rage o'erthrows
His bulky body, but unmov'd he grows. Dryden.

Chefs-men standing on the same squares of the chess-board, we say they are all in the same place, or unmov'd; though, perhaps, the chess-board hath been carried out of one room into another. Locke.

2. Not changed in resolution.

Among innumerable false, unmov'd, Unshaken, unscand'd. Milton.

3. Not affected, not touched with any passion.

Cæsar, the world's great master and his own,
Unmov'd, superior still in every state,
And scarce detested in his country's fate. Pope.

4. Unaltered by passion.

I meant to meet
My fate with face unmov'd, and eyes unwept. Dryden.

UNMOVING. adj.

1. Having no motion.

The celestial bodies, without impulse, had continued unactive, unmoving heaps of matter. Cleyn's Philosophical Principles.

2. Having no power to raise the passions; unaffecting.

To UNMOV'LD. v. a. To change as to the form.

Its pleasing prison
The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious likeness of a beast
Fixes instead, unmoulding reason's mintage, Character'd in the face. Milton.

UNMOV'RNED. adj. Not lamented; not deplored.

O let me here sink down
Into my grave unmention'd and unmourn'd. Switzerland.

To UNMUFFLE. v. a. To put off a covering from the face.

Unmuffle, ye faint stars! and thou, fair moon,
That wou'st to love the traveller's benison,
Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud,
And disinherit chaos, that reigns here
In double night, of darkness and of shades. Mih.

UNMUSICAL. adj. Not harmonious; not pleasing by sound.

Let argument bear no unmusical sound,
Nor jets interpolate, sacred friendship to grieve. Ben Jonson.

One man's ambition wants satisfaction, another's a vice, a third's spleen; and this discord makes up the very unmusical harmony of our nature. Decay of Piety.

To UNMUZZLE. v. a. To loose from a muzzle.

Now unmuzzle your wisdom. Shakspere.
Is we you not set mine honour at the stake,
And baited it with all th' unmuzzled thoughts
Thy tyrannous heart can think? Shakspere's Twelfth Night.

UNNAMED. adj. Not mentioned.

Author of evil, unknown till thy revolt,
I nam'd in heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.

UNNATURAL. adj.

1. Contrary to the laws of nature; contrary to the common instincts.

Her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it. Shakspere's King Lear.
People of weak heads on the one hand, and vile affections on the other, have made an unnatural divorce between being wife and good.
Glavinille's Scyllis.

'Tis irreverent and unnatural, to scoff at the infirmities of old age. 1. Ephraim.

2. Acting without the affections implanted by nature.

Rome, whose gratitude
Tow'rd her deserving children is enroll'd
In Jove's own book, like an unnatural dam, Should now eat up her own. Shakspere's Coriolanus.

If the tyrant were,
To a son so noble, so unnatural,
What will he be to us? Dentan's Sople.

3. Forced; not agreeable to the real state of persons or things; not representing nature.

They admire only glittering titles, that in a serious poem are nauseous, because they are unnatural. Would any man, who is ready to die for love, describe his passion like Narcissus? Dryden.

In an heroic poem, two kinds of thoughts are carefully to be avoided; the first, are such as are affected and unnatural; the second, such as are mean and vulgar. Addison.

UNNATURALLY. adv. In opposition to nature.

All the world have been feighted with an apparition of their own fancy, or they have most unnaturally conspired to coren themselves. Milton.

UNNATURALNESS. n. f. Contrariety to nature.

The God which is the God of nature doth never teach unatural. Injs.

UNNAVIGABLE. adj. Not to be passed by vessels, not to be navigated.

Pindar's unnavigable song
Like a swift stream from mountains pours along. Cowley.

Some who the depths of eloquence have found,
In that unnavigable stream were drown'd. Dryden.

Let wit her sails, her oars let wisdom lend;
The helm let politick experience guide:

Yet eate to hope thy front liv'd bark shall ride Down spreading fate's unnavigable tide. Prior.

The Indian seas were believed to be unnavigable. Arbutnot.

UNNECESSARILY. adv. Without necessity; without need; needlessly.

To abrogate, without constraint of manifest harm thereby arising, had been to alter unnecessarily, in their judgment, the ancient received custom of the whole church. Hooker.

'Tis highly imprudent in the greatest of men, unnecessarily to provoke the meanest. L'Estrange.

The words come in without any connexion with the story, and consequently unnecessarily. Brown.

UNNECESSARINESS. n. f. Needlessness.

There are such extremes as afford no middle for industry to exist, hope being equally out-cast by the desirateness or unnecessaryness of an undertaking. Pray of Piety.

UNNECESSARY. adj. Needless; not wanted; useless.

The doing of things unnecessary, is many times
the cause why the most necessary are not done. Hooker.

Thou whorefoned; thou unnecessary lett r. Shakspere.

Let brave spirits, fitted for command by sea or land, not be laid by as persons unnecessary for the time. Bacon.

Lay that unnecessary fear aside;
Mine be the cue new people to provide. Dryden.

Unnecessary coinage, as well as unnecessary revival of words, runs into affectation; a fault to be avoided on either hand. Dryden.

They did not only shun perfection, but affirmed that it was unnecessary for their followers to bear their religion through such fiery trial. Addison.

UNNEIGHBOURLY. adj. Not kind; not suitable to the duties of a neighbour.

Parnassus is but a barren mountain, and its inhabitants make it more so by their unneighbourly deportment. Guth.

UNNEIGHBOURLY. adv. In a manner not suitable to a neighbour; with malevolence; with mutual mischief.

These two Christian armies might combine
The blood of malice in a vein of leagur,
And not to spend it to unneighbourly. Shakspere.

UNNERVATE. adj. Weak; feeble. A bad word.

Scaliger calls them fine and lively in Mæxus;
but abject, unnervate, and unharmonious in Homer. Brown.

To UNNERVE. v. a. To weaken; to enfeeble.

The precepts are often so minute and full of circumstances, that they weaken and unnerve his verse. Adams.

UNNERVED. adj. Weak; feeble.

Pyrrhus at Priam dives, in rage strikes wide;
But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword
The unnerv'd father falls. Shakspere's Hamlet.

UNNETH. } adv. [This is from un and net, Saxon, easy; and ought therefore to be written unentth.]

Scarcely; hardly; not without difficulty. Obsolete.

Diggon, I am so stiff and flanke,
That unnetth I may stand any more;
And how the western wind bloweth fore,
Beating the wither'd leaf from the tree. Spenser.

UNNETHES. } adv. [This is from un and net, Saxon, easy; and ought therefore to be written unentth.]

Scarcely; hardly; not without difficulty. Obsolete.

Diggon, I am so stiff and flanke,
That unnetth I may stand any more;
And how the western wind bloweth fore,
Beating the wither'd leaf from the tree. Spenser.

O fish unparalled! (Charles) but of king's What state, then, black, diffident, whence med
On the nation. Philips.

UNPARDONABLE, adj. [impardonable, Fr.] Irremissible.

It was a fault on him an unpardonable offence
To utter any thing, in us as intolerable, that we Should ever think to remain unaltered. Hooker.

Oh, 'twas a fault too unpardonable. Shakespeare's
To look under the mask, the most unpardonable
The traitor. Leigh Hunt.

Consider how unpardonable the refusal of so much Grace must be. Reynolds.

UNPARDONABLY, adv. Beyond forgiveness.

Luther's conscience turns these offenses upon him, and into, that Luther might have been unpardonably wicked in using masses for fifteen years.
Atterbury.

UNPARDONED, adj.

1. Not forgiven.

How know we that our souls shall not this night be requir'd, laden with these unpardoned sins for which we propose to repent to-morrow. Rose.

2. Not discharged; not-cancelled by a legal pardon.

My returning into England unpardoned, hath deserved that opinion. Philips.

UNPARDONING, adj. Not forgiving.

Curse on the unpardoning prince, whom tears
dew. Philips.

Thou art more, who rules by lion's law;
And let it pass, by no submission how'd,
Rends all alike, the gentler and the proud. Dryden.

UNPARLIAMENTARINESS, n. f. Contrariety to the usage or constitution of parliament.

in use.

Chalmers' evidence of truth, after a serious and partial examination. Chalmers.

UNPARTIALLY, adv. Equally; indif-ferently.

Deem it not impossible for you to err; list un-partially your own heart, whether it be force of reason, or vehemency of affection, which hath bred
these opinions in you. Hooker.

UNPASSABLE, adj.

1. Admitting no passage.

Every country, which shall not do according to these things, shall be made not only unpassable for men, but most hateful to wild beasts. Isidore, xvi. 24.

They are vast and unpassable mountains, which the labour and curiosity of no mortal has ever yet known. Temple.

You swell yourself as though you were a man of learning already; you are thereby building a wall unpassable barrier against all improvement.
Harris on the Mind.

2. Not current; not suffered to pass.

Making a new standard for money, must make all money, which is lighter than that standard, un-

UNPASSIONATED, adj. Free from passion; calm; impar-

He attended the king into Scotland, and was found a confidant in that kingdom; where, as I have been informed, he was a most unpassionate man, he did carry himself with singular facetiousness.
Hutton's Buckingham.

More sober heads have a set of miscontents, which are as absurd to an unpassionate reasoner,
as to our unbridled senses. Gloucester's Scepter.

The rebukes, which then faults will make hardly to be forgot, should not only be in sober, grave, and unpassionate words, but also alone and in private.
Lectures on Education.

UNPASSIONATELY, adv. Without passion.

Make us unpassionately to see the light of reason and religion. King Charles.

UNPAVED, adj. Untracked; unmarked

Early my unpremeditated verse. Milton's Par. Lost.
The flow of speech make unpremeditated harrangues, or converse readily in languages that they are but little acquainted with. Addison.

UNPREPARED. adj.

1. Not fitted by previous measures.

In things which most concern
Unpractis'd, unprepared, and still to seek. Milton.
To come unprepared before him, is an argument that we do not esteem God.

Dutton's Rules for Devotion.
Fields are full of eyes, and woods have ears;
For this the wife are ever on their guard,
For unforeseen, they say, is unprepared. Dryden.

2. Not made fit for the dreadful moment of departure.

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No, heavens forefend! Shakspeare's Othello.
My unprepared and unrepenting breath
Was snatch'd away by the swift hand of death.
Reliance.

UNPREPAREDNESS. n. f. State of being unprepared.

I believe my innocency, and unpreparedness to assert my rights and honour, make me the most guilty in their esteem, who would not so easily have declared a war against me, if I had first assaulted them. King Charles.

UNPREPOSSESED. adj. Not prepossessed; not preoccupied by notions.

The unprepossessed on the one hand, and the well-disposed on the other, are affected with a due fear of these things. South.

It finds the mind naked, and unprepossessed with any former notions, and so easily and infinitely gains upon the assent. South.

UNPREST. adj.

vantages, than by so unprincipally an inconstancy.
King Charles.

UNPRINCIPLED. adj. Not settled in tenets or opinions.

I do not think my sister so to seek,
Or so unprincipled in virtue's book,
As that the finger's want of light and no'se,
Could stir the constant mood of her calm thoughts.
Milton.

Others betake them to state affairs, with souls so unprincipled in virtue and true generous breeding, that flattery, and court shifts, and tyrannous aphorisms, appear to them the highest points of wisdom. Milton on Education.

UNPRINTED. adj. Not printed.

Defer it, till you have finished these that are yet unprinted. Pope.

For shallow draught and bulk unprisable. Shakspeare.

UNPRISONED. adj. Set free from confinement.

Several desires led parts away,
Water declin'd with earth, the air did stay;
Fire rose, and each from other but untied,
Themselves unprison'd were and purified. Dorset.

UNPRIZED. adj. Not valued.

Not all the dukes of war'ish Burgundy
Can buy this unprized, precious mind of me. Shak.

UNPROCLAIMED. adj. Not notified by a publick declaration.

The Syrian king, who to surprize
One man, assassins like, had levied war, War unproclaim'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

UNPROFANED. adj. Not violated.

Unspoil'd shall be her arms, and unprofan'd
Her holy limbs with any human hand;
And in a marble tomb laid in her native land.
Dryden.

UNPROFITABLE. adj. Useless; serving no purpose.

The church being eased of unprofitable labours, needful offices may the better be attended. Hobbes.
Should he reason with unprofitable talk?

Joh. xv. 3.
My son Onesimus I have begotten in my bonds; which in time past was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and me. Philemon, 11.
They received aliment sufficient, and yet no more than they can well digest; and withal sweat out the coarsest and unprofitable juice.

Bacon's Natural History.
It is better to fall honourably, than to survive in an unprofitable and unglorious life. L'Estrange.
Then they, who brothers' better claim disown,
Defraud their clients, and, to lucre fold,
Sit brooding on unprofitable gold. Dryden.

With shame and sorrow fill'd,
For plotting an unprofitable crime. Dryden.
An ox that waits the coming blow,
Old and unprofitable to the plough. Dryden.

With tears so tender,
As any heart, but only hers, could move;
Trembling before her bolted doors he stood,
And there pour'd out his unprofitable flood. Dryden.

UNPROFITABLENESS. n. f. Uselessness.
We are so persuaded of the unprofitableness of your science, that you can but leave us where you find us; but if you succeed, you increase the number of your party. Addison.

UNPROFITABLY. adv. Uselessly; without advantage.

I should not unprofitably spend Myself in words, or catch at empty hope,
By airy ways, for solid certainties. Ben Jonson.

Our country's safety,
That drew our swords, now wrests 'em from our hands,

And bids us not delight in Roman blood
Unprofitably shed. Addison's Cato.

UNPROFITED. adj. Having no gain.

Be clamorous, and leap all civil bounds;
Rather than make unprofited return. Shakspeare.

UNPROLIFICK. adj. Barren; not productive.

Great rains drown many insects, and render their eggs unproliffick, or destroy them. Hall.

UNPROMISING. adj. Giving no promise of excellence; having no appearance of value.

If he be naturally listless and dreading, this un- promising disposition is none of the easiest to be dealt with. Lubbock.

An attempt as difficult, and unpromising of success, as if he should make the essay to produce some new kinds of animals out of such senseless materials. Bentley.

UNPRONOUNCED. adj. Not uttered; not spoken.

Mad'st impetuous words, with childish trips,
Unpronounced, slide through my infant lips. Milton.

1. Not peculiar.

Millions nightly lie in those unproper beds,
Which they dare swear peculiar. Shakef. Othello.

2. Unfit; not right.

UNPROPERLY. adv. Contrarily to propriety; improperly.

I kneel before thee, and unproperly Shew duty as mistaken all the while Between the child and parent. Shakef. Coriolanus.

UNPROFITIOUS. adj. Not favourable; inauspicious.

'Twas when the dog-star's unprofitous ray Saw't every brain, and wither'd every day, Sick was the sun. Pope.

UNPROPORTIONED. adj. Not suited to something else.

Give thy thoughts no tongue,
Nor any unproportion'd thought his ear. Shakef.

UNPROPOSED. adj. Not proposed.

The man is unpropos'd. Dryden.

UNPROPPED. adj. Not supported; not upheld.

He lives at random, carelessly dispos'd,
With languish'd head unpropp'd, as one past hope,
Abandoned, and by himself given over. Milton's Agonistes.

The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves; the nerves no more sustin'd
The bulk; the bulk, unpropp'd, falls headlong on The plain. Dryden.

UNPROSPEROUS. adj. [improsper, Lat.] Unfortunate; not prosperous.

The winter had been very unprosperous and unsuccessful to the king.
Nought unprosperous shall thy ways attend,
Born with good omens, and with heav'n thy friend. Pope.

UNPROSPEROUSLY. adv. Unsuccessfully.

When a prince fights justly, and yet unprosperously, if he could see all those reasons for which God hath so ordered it, he would think it the most reasonable thing in the world. Taylor.

UNPROTECTED. adj. Not protected; not supported; not defended.

By woful experience, they both did learn, that to forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth, as men, either destitute of grace divine, may commit, or, unprotected from above, endure. Hooker.

UNPROVED. adj.

1. Not tried; not known by trial.

The land
In antique times was savage wilderness,
Unpeopled, unmanur'd, unprov'd, unprais'd. Spenser.

There I found a flesh unprov'd knight,
Whose manly hands imbrued in guilty blood
Had never been. Fairy Queen.

2. Not evinced by argument.

There is much of what should be demonstrated
I find unprov'd by those chymical experiments. Boyle.

To UNPROVIDE. v. a. To divest of resolution or qualifications; to unfurnish.

I'll not expostulate with her, lest
Her beauty unprovide my mind again. Shakef. Othello.

Prosperity, inviting every sense
With various arts to unprovide my mind;
What but a Spartan spirit can sustain
The shocks of such temptations? Southern.

UNPROVIDEN. adj.

1. Not secured or qualified by previous measures.

Where shall I find one that can steal well? O for a fine thief of two and twenty, or thereabout;
I am helplessly unprovided. Shakef. Henry IV.

With his prepared sword he charges home.
My unprovided body, lanc'd my arm. Shakef. Lear.
Leas't, for a stroke foreseen, afford relief;
But, unprovided for a sudden blow,
Like Niobe we marble grow,
And perish with grief. Dryden.

2. Not furnished; not previously supplied.

Those unprovided of tackling and victual are forced to sea. King Lear.
The seditious had neither weapons, order, nor counsel; but, being in all things unprovided, were vain like beasts. Hayward.

The ambitious empires with her son is join'd,
And, in his brother's absence, has design'd
The unprovided down to take. Dryden.

True zeal is not a solitary, melancholy grace, as if only fit to dwell in mean minds; such as are utterly unprovided of all other natural, moral, or spiritual abilities. Spurr.

Courts are seldom unprovided of persons under this character, on whom most employments naturally fall. Swift.

UNPROVOKED. adj. Not provoked.

The scum'g earth, yet guiltless of the plough,
And unprovok'd, did furnish thee res'allow. Dryden.
Let them forbear all open and secret methods of encouraging a rebellion so destructive, and so unprovok'd. Addison.

I stabbed him a stranger, unprovoking, inoffensive.
Pharosod.

UNPRUNED. adj. Not cut; not lopped.

The whole land is full of weeds,
Her fruit-trees all unprun'd. Shakef. Lear.

UNPUBLIC. adj. Private; not generally known, or seen.

Virgine must be retired and unpublic: for all freedom of society is a violence done to virginity, not in its natural, but in its moral capacity, that is, it loses part of its severity and strictness, by publishing that person, whose work is religion, whose thoughts must dwell in heaven. Taylor.

UNPUBLISHED. adj.

1. Secret; unknown.

All blest secrets;
All you unpublished virtue of the earth,
Spring with my tears. Shakef. King Lear.

2. Not given to the publick.

Apply your care wholly to those which are unpublished. Pope.

UNPUNISHED. adj. [impunitus, Fr.] Not punished; suffered to continue in impunity.

Kind not one sin upon another, for in one thou shalt not be unpunish'd. Feather, viii. S.
Divine justice will not let unpunish'd go unpunish'd.
The vent'rous victor march'd unpunish'd home,
And seem'd to boot his fortune at all need. Dryden.

UNPURCHASED. adj. Unbought.

Unpurchas'd plenty our full tables loads,
And part of what they lent, return'd our gods. Dryden.

UNPURGED. adj. Not purged; unpurified.

Is Brutus sick?
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To tempt the sly one unpurg'd air,
To add unto his sickness? Shakef. Julius Caesar.

In her way round those spots, unpurg'd,
Vapours not yet into her substance turn'd. Milton.

UNPURIFIED. adj.

1. Not freed from recrement.

Do it,
Or thy precedent services are all
But accidents unpurpos'd. Shakef. Ant. and Cleopatra.

UNPURSUED. adj. Not pursued.

All night the dreadful angel pursued
Through heav'n's wide champion held his way. Milton.

UNPUTRIED. adj. Not corrupted by rottenness.

Meat and drink last longer unputried, or unsour'd, in winter than in summer. Bacon's Natural History.

No animal unputried, being burnt, yields any alkaline salt; but, putried, yields a volatile alkali. Airbuthnot.

UNQUALIFIED. adj. Not fit.

Till he has denuded himself of all these incumbrances, he is utterly unqualified for these agonies. Decay of Piety.

All the writers against christianity, since the Revolution, have been of the lowest rank in regard to literature, wit, and sense, and upon that account wholly unqualified to propagate heresies, unless among a people already abandoned. Swift.

Toies are more hated by the zealous whigs than the very papist, and as much unqualified for the smallest offices. Swift.

To UNQUALIFY. v. a. To disqualify; to divest of qualification.

Arbitrary power to diminish the basis of the female figure, as to unqualify a woman for attending walks. Addison.

Our private misfortunes may unqualify us for charity: but reflect, whether they may not have been inflicted by God, as a just punishment of our former unneighbourly. Atterbury.

Death is unqualifying me for all company. Swift.

UNQUALIFIABLE. adj. Such as cannot be impugned.

These arise upon the examination such satisfactory and unqualifiable reasons, as may confirm the causes generally received. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To UNQUEEN. v. a. To divest of the dignity of queen.

Embalm me,
Then lay me forth; although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me. Shakef.

UNQUENCHABLE. adj. Unextinguishable.

We represent wildfires burning in water and unquenchable. Bacon.

The people on their holidays,
Impetuous, intemperate, unquenchable. Milt. Agonistes.

The criminal's penitence may have numbered him among the saints, when our untractable un-charitableness may lead us to unquenchable flames. Greenham of the Tongue.

Our love of God, our unquenchable desire to promote our well-grounded hopes to enjoy his glory, should take the chief place in our zeal. Spurr's Sermons.

I was amazed to see the unquenchableness of this fire. Halewell.

UNQUENCHED. adj.

1. Not extinguished.

We have heats of dung, and of lime unquench'd. Bacon.

2. Not extinguishable.

Sacred, or great joy, equally dissipate the spirits, and immerse in extreme in hot air, with un-quench'd thirst. Atterbury.

UNQUESTIONABLE. adj.

1. Indubitable; not to be doubted.

The duke's carriage is a fairly noble throughout, of unquestionable courage in himself, and rather fearful of fame than danger. Wotton.

One reason that mathematical demonstrations are unquestionable, is, because interest hath no place in those unquestionable notions. Glavin's Sermons.

There is an unquestionable magnificence in every part of Paradise lost. Addison.

1. Such as cannot bear to be questioned without impatience: this seems to be the meaning here.

What were his marks? —
— A lean cheek, which you have not; an unquestionable spirit, which you have not. Shaksp.
UNQUESTIONABLY. adv. Indubitably; without doubt.

If the father were unquestionably of the household of faith, and all to do good to them; then certainly their children cannot be strangers in this household. Spratt.

St. Austin was unquestionably a man of parts, but, interposing in a controversy where his talent did not lie, shewed his zeal against the antipodes to very ill purpose. Burrot.

INQUESTIIONED. adj.

Not doubted; passed without doubt.

Other relations in good authors, though we do not positively deny, yet have they not been unquestioned by time. Brown.

Indisputable; not to be opposed.

And his glad heart with artful sighs shall brate. Smith.

UNRELIABLE. adj. Admitting no success.

As no degree of distress is unreliable by his power, so no extremity of it is inconsistent with his compassion. Boyle.

UNRELIABLE. adj.

1. Not succoured.

The goddess's griev'd,
Her favour'd self should perish unreliev'd. Dryden.

2. Not eased.

The unkindness of unreliev'd thirst is not lessened by continuance, but grows the more unsupportable. Boyle.

UNREMARKABLE. adj.

1. Not capable of being observed.

Our understanding, to make a complete notion, must add something else to this fleeting and unremarkable superficies, that may bring it to our acquaintance. Dryden.

2. Not worthy of notice.

UNREMEDIAL. adj. Admitting no remedy.

He to hand it, that it rather seem'd he had more come into a den of an unremedial mischief already committed, than that they had done it at first by his consent. Sidney.

UNREMEMBERED. adj. Not retained in the mind; not recollected.

I cannot pass unremembered their manner of disguising the shifts of channies in various fashions, whereof the noblest is the pyramidal. Watson's Architecture.

UNREMEMBERING. adj. Having no memory.

That, unremembering of its former pain,
The soul may suffer mortal death again. Dryden.

UNREMEMBRANCE. n. f. Forgetfulness; want of remembrance.

Some words are negative in their original language, but seem positive, because the negation is unknown; as amnesia, an unremembrance, or general pardon. Watson's Logic.

UNREMOVABLE. adj. Not to be taken away.

Never was there any woman, that with more unremovable determination gave herself to love, after she had once set before her mind the worthiness of Amphialus. Sidney.

You know the fiery quality of the duke,
How unremovable and fixt he is In his own course. Shakespeare.

UNREMOVABLY. adv. In a manner that admits no removal.

His discontents are unremovably coupled to his nature. Shakespeare.

UNREMOVED. adj.

1. Not taken away.

It is impossible, where this opinion is imbibed and unremoved, to found any convincing argument.
Hammond.

We could have had no certain prospect of his happiness, while the last obstacle was unremoved.
Dryden's Virgil.

2. Not capable of being removed.

Like Teneriff or Atlas unremov'd. Milton.

UNREPAID. adj. Not recompensed; not compensated.

Hadst thou full power
To measure out his torments by thy will;
Yet what couldst thou, tormentor, hope to gain?
Thy loss continues, unrepaid by pain. Dryden.

UNREPEALED. adj. Not revoked; not abrogated.

When you are pitched with any unrepealed act of parliament, you declare you will not be obliged by it. Dryden.

Nature's law, and unrepeal'd command,
That gives to lighter things the greatest height. Blackmore.

UNREPENTED. adj. Not expiated by penitential sorrow.

They are no fit supplicants to seek his mercy in the behalf of others, whose own unrepented sins provoked his just indignation. Hooker.

If I, venturing to displease
God for the fear of man, and man prefer,
Set God behind: which in his jealousy
Shall never, unrepented, find forgiveness. Milton's Agonistes.

As in unrepented sin he died, Doom'd to the same bad place, is punish'd for her proud. Dryden.

With what confusion will he hear all his unrepentant sins produced before men and angels? Rogers.

UNREPENTING. } adj. Not repenting;
UNREPENTANT. } not penitent; not fallow for sin.

Should I of these the liberty regard,
Who freed, as to their ancient patrimony,
Unhumbly, unrepentant, uninform'd, Headlong would follow? Milton's Par. Regained.
My unrepentant and unrepenting breath
Was snatched away by the swift hand of death. Rogers.

All his arts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden.
Not torments fierce, that unrepenting die,
Ere to much rage as thou. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

UNREPINING. adj. Not peevishly complaining.

Barefoot as she trod the stony pavement,
Her footsteps all along were mark'd with blood;
Yet silent on the pangs, and unrepining. Rena.

UNREFRESHED. adj. Not filled.

Some air retreated thither, kept the mercury out of the unrefreshed space. Boyle.

UNREFRESHABLE. adj. Not to be respired from penal death.

Within me is a hell; and there the poison
Is, as a fiend, confid'd, to tyrannise
In unrefreshable condemned blood. Shakespeare's King John.

UNREPROACHED. adj. Not upbraided; not censured.

Sir John Hotham, unreproach'd, uncensured by any imputation of mine, pays his head. King Charles.

UNREPROVEABLE. adj. Not liable to blame.

You hath he reconcil'd, to perfect you holy,
unblameable, and unreprovable in his sight.
Calvary, l. 22.

UNREPROVED. adj.

1. Not censured.

Christian, have their churches, and unreproved exercise of religion. Sandys's Journey

2. Not liable to censure.

The antique wound, in his first flow'ring youth,
With glancing thanks, and unreproved blaths,
The gifts of foreign bounty did embrace. Spens.
If I give thee honour due,
Mirth, about me of thy crew,
To live with her, and live with thee,
In amorous pleasures free. Milton.

UNREPUGNANT. adj. Not opposite.

When keeping one's self to moral laws, what particular order is there most agreeable, where reflexive, which way to make laws unrepugnant unto them. Hobbs.

UNREPUTABLE. adj. Not creditable.

When we see wide men examples of duty, we are convinced that piety is no unreputable qualification, and that we are not to be ashamed of our virtue. Rogers.

UNREQUESTED. adj. Not asked.

With what security can our ambassadors go, un- requested of the Turkish emperor, without his late consent? Knollys.

UNREQUITABLE. adj. Not to be retaliated.

Some will have it that all mediocrity of folly is sollicit, and because an unrequitable evil may ensue, an indifferent convenience must be omitted.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

So unrequitable is God's love, and so insupportable, that that love still improves the benefit, by which none we might have pretended to some ability of retribution. Boyle.

UNRESENTED. adj. Not regarded with anger.

The failings of these holy persons passed not un- resented by God; and the same scripture which informs us of the sin, records the punishment. Rogers.

UNRESENTED. adj.

1. Not limited by any private convenience.

The piety our heavenly Father will accept, must consist in an entire, unresented obedience to his commands, since whoever offends in one precept, is guilty of the whole law. Rogers.

2. Open; frank; concealing nothing.

UNRESERVEDLY. adv.

1. Without limitations.

I am not to embrace absolutely and unreservedly
the opinion of Aristotle. Boyle.

2. Without concealment; openly.

I know your friendship to me is extensive; and it is what I owe to that friendship, to open my mind unreservedly to you. Pope.

UNRESERVEDNESS. n. s.

1. Unlimitedness; frankness; largeness.

The tenderness and unreservedness of his love made him think those his friends, or enemies, that were so to God. Boyle.

2. Openness; frankness.

I write with more unreservedness than ever ma-wrote. P. p.

UNRESISTED. adj.

1. Not opposed.

The celestial spaces are perfectly fluid; they neither assist nor retard the planets, which roll through as free and unresisted as if they moved in a vacuum. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Resistless; such as cannot be opposed.

These gods, whose unresisted might hath sent me to this region, void of light. Dryd.
What wonder then, thy hairs should feel the conquering force of unresisted steel? Pope.

UNRESISTING. adj. Not opposing; not making resistance.

The sheep was sacrific'd on no pretence,
But mark and unresisting innocence!
A patient useful creature. Dryden.

Since the planets move horizontally through the liquid and unresisting spaces of the heavens, where no bodies at all, or inconsiderable ones, occur, they may preserve the same velocity which the first impulse impressed. Bentley.

UNRESOLVABLE. adj. Not to be solved; insoluble.

For a man to run headlong, while his ruin stares him in the face, still to press on to the embraces of sin, is a problem unresolvable upon any other ground, but that sin intrudes before it desists. South.

UNRESOLVABLE. adj.

1. Not determined; having made no resolution: sometimes with of.

On the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy to our shores
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted fiends, Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back. Shaks.
Turnus, unresolv'd of flight,
Moves tardy back, and just needs from flight. Dryden.

2. Not solved; not cleared.

I do not so magnify this method, to think it will perfectly clear every hard place, and leave no doubt unresolved. Locke.

UNRESOLVING. adj. Not resolving;
not determined.

She her arms about her unresolving husband threw. Dryden.

UNRESPECTIVE. adj. Inattentive; taking little notice.

I will converse with iron-witted fools,
And unrespecting boys; none are for me
That look into me with confederate eyes. Shakspeare.

UNREST. n. s. Disquiet; want of tranquillity; uneasiness. Not in use.

Wise behoof,
Those creeping flames by reason to subdue,
Before their rage grew to so great unrest. Spenser.
Repose, for gold, for their unrest,
That have the unrest out of the emperor's chest. Shakspeare.

Dismiss'd confusion all possess'd
Th' afflicted troop, hearing their plot decry'd:
Then runs amaz'd distrust, with sad unrest,
To this, to that, to fly, to stand, to hit. Daniel.
Silence, in truth, would speak my sorrows best,
For deepest wounds can best their feelings tell,
Yet let me borrow from mine own unrest
But time to bid him, whom I lov'd, farewell. Wotton.

Up they rose,
As from unrest; and each the other viewing,
Soon found their eyes now open'd, and their mind.
How darken'd! Milton's Paradise Lost.

UNRESTORED. adj.

1. Not restored.

2. Not cleared from an attainder.

The loss of an unrestored traitor has no pretence to the quality of his ancestors. Collier on Duelling.

UNRESTRAINED. adj.

1. Not confined; not hindered.

My travels age in luxury was train'd,
With idle ease and pageants entertain'd,
My hours my own, my pleasures unrestrain'd. Dryden.

2. Licentious; loose.

The tavern he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained, loose companions. Shakspeare.

3. Not limited.

Were there in this aphorism an unrestrained truth, yet were it not reasonable to infer from a caution a non-usage, or abolition.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UNRETRACTED. adj. Not revoked; not recalled.

The penitence of the criminal may have numbered him amongst the saints, when our unretract'd unchristianities may send us to unquenchable flames. Government of the Tongue.

Nothing but plain malevolence can justify dis-union, malevolence shown in a single outward act, unretract'd, or in habitual ill-nature. Collier on Friendship.

UNREVEALED. adj. Not told; not discovered.

Had ye once seen these her celestial treasures,
And unrevealed pleasures,
Then would ye wonder, and her praises sing. Spenser.

Dear, fatal name! rest ever unrevealed,
Nor pass these lips, in holy silence seal'd. Pope.

UNREVENGED. adj. Not revenged.

So might we die, not envying them that live;
So would we die, not unrevenge'd all. Fairfax.
Unhonour'd though I am,
Not unrevenge'd that impious act shall be. Dryden.
Great Pompey's shade con plains that we are slaves,
And Scipio's ghost walks unrevenge'd amongst us. Addison.

UNREVEREND. adj. Irreverent; disrespectful.

See not your bride in these unreverent robes. Shakspeare.
Fie! unreverent tongue! to call her bad,
Whole sovereignty so oft thou hast pretend'd,
With twenty thousand soul-confirming oaths. Shakspeare.

UNREVERENTLY. adv. Disrespectfully.

I did unreverently blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou sware for thyself. B. Jonson.

UNREVERSED. adj. Not revoked; not repented.

She hath offer'd to the doom,
Which unreversed stands in effectual force,
A sea of melting tears. Shakspeare.

UNREVOKED. adj. Not recalled.

Hear my decree, which unrevok'd shall stand. Milton.

UNREWARDED. adj. Not rewarded; not recompensed.

Providence takes care that good offices may not pays unreward'd. L'Estrange.
Since for the common good I yield the fault,
My private loss let grateful Greece repair;
Not unrewarded let your prince complain,
That he alone has fought and bled in vain. Pope.

To UNRAIDDLE. v. a. To solve an enigma; to explain a problem.

Some kind power unriddle where it lies,
Whether my heart be faulty, or her eyes. Suckling.
The Platonick principles will not unriddle the doubt. Glanville.

A reverse often clears up the passage of an old poet, as the poet often serves to unriddle the reverse. Addison.

UNRIDICULOUS. adj. Not ridiculous.

If an indifferent and unridiculous object could draw this audience unto a smile, he hardly could with perpetuity resist proper motives thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To UNRIG. v. a. To strip of the tackle.

Rhodes is the sovereign of the sea no more;
Their ships unrigg'd, and spent their naval store. Dryden.

UNRIGHT. adj. Wrong. In Spenser, this word should perhaps be unright.

What in most English writers useth to be loose, and as it were unright, in this author is well grounded, timely framed, and strongly trusted up together.
Spenser's Glossary to Keblendar.
Shew that thy judgment is not unright. Wisdom, xii.

UNRIGHTEOUS, adj. Unjust; wicked; sinful; bad.

Quarrel here kept in his room,
And it was by day, and by night;
But he his side justifying by night.
Within a month.

Yet yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her galled eyes.
She married—O most wicked speed! Shakspeare.
Let the wicked man forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord. Isaiah, lv.

UNRIGHTEOUSLY, adv. Unjustly; wickedly; sinfully.

For them.
Their foes a deadly Shibboleth devise:
By which unrighteously it was decreed,
That none to trust or profit should be freed,
Who would not swallow first a poisonous wicked weed. Dryden.

A man may fall undeservedly under publick disgrace, or is unrighteously oppressed. Gulliver on Pride.
UNRIGHTEOUSNESS, n. f. Wickedness; injustice.

Our Romanists can no more abide this proposition converted than themselves. All sin, say they, is a transgression of the law; but every transgression of the law is not sin. The apostle, therefore, turns it for us: all unrighteousness, say he, is sin; but every transgression of the law is unrighteousness, saith Austin upon this place. Hall.

Some things have a natural deformity in them, as perjury, perfidiousness, unrighteousness, and ingratitude. Tillotson.

UNRIGHTFUL, adj. Not rightful; not just.

Thou, which know'st the way
To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again
To pluck him headlong from th' usurped throne.
Shakspeare.

TO UNRING, v. a. To deprive of a ring.

Be forc'd to impeach a broken hedge,
And p'ge unring'd at vit' frons' pledge. Rudib.

TO UNRIP, v. a. [This word is improper, there being no difference between rip and unrip, and the negative particle is therefore of no force; yet it is well authorized.] To cut open.

Like a traitor

Didst break that vow, and, with thy treacherous blade,

Unrip'dst the bowels of thy sov'reign's son. Shak.
He could not now, with his honour, so unrip, and put a lie upon all that he had said and done before, as to deliver him up. Bacon's Henry VII.

We are angry with searchers when they break open trunks, and unrip packs, and open sealed letters. Taylor.

Cato well observes, that friendship ought not to be unripp'd, but unditch'd. Gallier.

UNRIPED, adj.

1. Immature; not fully concocted;

Purport is of violent birth, but poor validity;
Which now, like fruits unrip'd, sticks on the tree,
But fall unshaken when they mellow be. Shakspeare.
In this northern tract, our hoarse throats Utter unrip'd and ill-constrained notes. Waller.

2. Not seasonable; not yet proper.

He, that his unrip'd vengeance to defer,
Sought not the garden, but retir'd unseen
To Arnold in secret on his gather'd spleen. Dryden.

3. Too early.

Who hath not heard of the valiant wild, and just Dorilian, whose unripe death hath yet, in many years since, draw tears from virtuous eyes? Stedley.

UNRIPED, adj. Not matured.

Were you with these, you'd soon forget
The pale, unrip'd beauties of the north. Add. Goss.
UNRIPENESS, n. f. Immaturity; want of ripeness.

The ripeness of unripe of the occasion must always be well weighed; and generally it is good to

Vol. II.

commit the beginnings of all great actions to Au-gus, with his hundred eyes; and the ends to Bri-reus, with his hundred hands. Bacon.

UNRIVALLED, adj.

1. Having no competitor.

Honour forbid! at whose unrivall'd shrine
Ease, pleasure, virtue, all our sex resign. Pope.

2. Having no peer or equal.

TO UNROLL, v. a. To open what is rolled or convolved.

O horror!

The queen of nations from her ancient seat
Is sunk for ever in the dark abyss;
Time has unroll'd her glories to the last,
And now clor'd up the volume. Dryd. All for Love.

UNROMANTICK, adj. Contrary to romance.

It is a base-unromantick spirit not to wait on you.
Swift.

TO UNROOF, v. a. To strip off the roof or covering of houses.

The rabble should have first unroof'd the city,
Ere so prevail'd with me. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.

UNROOSTED, adj. Driven from the roost.

Thou dotard! thou art woman-til'd, unroosted,
By thy old dame Pardest here. Shak. Wint. Tale.

TO UNROOT, v. a. To tear from the roots; to extirpate; to eradicate.

Since you've made the days and nights as one,
To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold; you do so grow in my requital,
That nothing can unroot you. Shakspeare.

Unroot the forest oaks, and bear away
Flocks, folds, and trees, an undistinguish'd prey.
Dryden.

UNROUGH, adj. Smooth.

Sward's son,

And many unrough youths, that even now
Protest their first of manhood. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

UNROUND, adj. Not shaped; not cut to a round.

Those unroll'd pistolets,

That more than cannon-shot avails or lets;
Which negligently left unrounded, look Like many-angled figures in the book
Of some dread conjurer. Dumfries.

UNROYAL, adj. Unprincely; not royal.

By the advice of his envious counsellors, he sent them with unroyal reproaches to Musidorus and Pyrocles, as if they had done traitorously. Shakspeare.

TO UNRUFFLE, v. n. To cease from commotion, or agitation.

Where'er he guides his finny couriers,
The waves unruuffle, and the sea subsides. Dryden.

UNRUFFLED, adj. Calm; tranquil; not tumultuous.

Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its shock
Calm and unruffled as a summer's sea,
When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface.
Addison.

UNRULY, adj. Not directed by any superior power.

The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging surges, unrul'd and undirected of any; for they, to whom the war committed falcon in their labour, or for whom their charge. Spenser.

UNRULINESS, n. f. [from unruly.] Turbulence; tumultuousness; licentiousness.

By the negligence of some who were hardly to be commanded, and by the unruliness of others who without leave were gone abroad, so fair an occasion of victory was neglected. Rollin.

No care was had to curb the unruliness of anger, or the exorbitance of desire. Amongst all their licentious they never fastidied to in change one habit.
Smith.

UNRULY, adj. Turbulent; ungovernable; licentious; tumultuous.

In sacred bands of widowhood tied
To Theron, a lion's wayward train;
Who had more joy to range the forest wide,
And chase the savage beast with busy pain. Spenser.
Down I come, like gliding Phaeton,
Wanting the manage of unruly jades.

Shakspeare's Richard II.

The best and fountest of his time hath been but rash; then must we look from his eye to receive but unruly waywardness. Shakspeare, King Lear.
The tongue is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. James, lii.

Thou dost a better life, and nobler vigour give;
Dost each unruly appetite controul. Rasselas.

Love insinuates, disguised in the cloud
And welcome force of that unruly crowd. Waller.
Passions kept their place, and trincereated not the boundaries of their proper natures; nor were the disorders begun, which are occasioned by the licence of unruly appetites. Chambliss.

You must not go where you may dangers meet,
Th' unruly sword will no distinction make,
And beauty will not there give wounds, but take.
Dryden.

UNSAFE, adj. Not secure; hazardous;
dangerous.

If they would not be drawn to from his adversaries, yet others should be taught how unsafe it was to continue his friends. Hooker.

With speed retir'd,

Where erst was thickest fight, th' angelick throng,
And left large fields, unsafe within the wind
Of such commotion. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Uncertain ways unsafe are,
And doubt a greater mischief than despair. Dryden.
Phlegyan robbers make unsafe the road. Dryden.

UNSAFELY, adv. Not securely; dangerously.

Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage,
Unsafely just, break loose on this bad age;
So bad, that thou thyself hadst no defence
From vice, but barely by departing hence. Dryden.
As no man can walk, so neither can he think, unsaferly or unsafely, but in using, as his legs, to his thoughts, amiss; which a virtuous man never doth. Grave.

UNSAID, adj. Not uttered; not mentioned.

Chanticleer shall with his words unsaid. Dryden.
That I may leave nothing material unsaid, among the several ways of imitation, I shall place contention and paraphrase. Pelton's Glosses.

UNSALED, adj. Not pickled or seasoned with salt.

The musiatick scurvy, induced by too great quantity of sea-salt, and common among mariners, is cured by a diet of fresh unsalted things; and watery liquor acidulated. Arbuthnot.

UNSATURATED, adj. [insaturatus, Latin.]
Not saturated.

Gods! I pray;

And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unsaturated. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

UNSATURATED, adj. Unholy; not consecrated; not pious.

Her obsequies have been so far enlarged
As we have warranty; her death was doubtful;
And, but that great commandment o'erways the order,
She should in ground unsaturated have lodg'd
Till the last trumpet. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

UNSATURATED, adj. [insatibilis, Latin.]
Not to be satisfied; greedy without bounds.

Unsatisfiable in their longing to do all manner of good to all the creatures of God; but especially
men. Hooker.

Crassus, the Roman, for his insatiable greediness, was called the gulph of avarice. Railings.

UNSATISFACTORINESS, n. f. Failure of giving satisfaction.

That which most detests the first rank trials, is their unsatisfactoriness, though they should be used.

UNSATISFACTORY. adj.

1. Not giving satisfaction.
2. Not clearing the difficulty.

That speech of Adam, The woman thou gavest me to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat, is an unsatisfactory reply, and therein was involved a very impious error. Brown's Vulg. Err.
Latria to the cross, is point blank against the definition of the council of Nice; and it is an unsatisfactory answer to say, they only were against latria given to images for themselves. Stillingfleet.

UNSATISFIED. adj.

1. Not contented; not pleased.

Queen Elizabeth being to resolve upon a great office, and being by some put in some doubt of that person whom she meant to advance, said, She was like one with a lantern seeking a man, and seemed unsatisfied in the choice of a man for that place. Bacon.

Witty wits, who cannot fathom a large discourse, must be very much unsatisfied of me. Digby.

2. Not settled in opinion.

With follen clouds, should be defac'd. Waller.
2. Not revealed.
Obscene words are very indecent to be heard;
for that reason, such a tale shall be left untold by me. Dryden.
3. Not numbered.
UNTOUCHED, adj.

1. Not touched; not reached.
Achilles, though dip't in Styx, yet having his heel untouched by that water, was slain in that part.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Three men pass'd through a fiery furnace untouched, unscor'd. Stephen's Sermons.
2. Not moved; not affected.
They, like persons wholly untouched with his appeals, and unmoved with his passionate entreaties, set away all concern for him or themselves. Shak.
3. Not meddled with.
We must pursue the Syrian lands;
Th' shade of nymphs, untouch'd by former hands.
Dryden.
Several very ancient trees grow upon the spot;

from whence they conclude, that their particular tracts must have lain untouch'd for some ages. Add.

UNTOWARD, adj.

1. Froward; perverse; vexatious; not easily guided, or taught.
Have to my window, and if she be froward,
Then hast thou taught Horatio to be untoward.
Shakespeare.
The ladies prove averse,
And more untoward to be won,
Than by Caligula the moon. Hudibras.
They were a cross, odd, untoward people. South.
Some men have made a very untoward use of this; and such as he never intended they should.
Woodward.

2. Awkward; ungraceful.

Va! is my theme, yet unconceiv'd, and brings
Untoward words; scarce loosen'd from the things.
Creech.
Some clergymen hold down their heads within an inch of the cushion; which, besides the untoward manner, blunders them from making the best advantage of their voice. Swift.
3. Inconvenient; troublesome; unmanageable.
The rabbins write, when any Jew
Did make to God or man a vow,
Which afterwards he found untoward,
Or stubborn to be kept, or too hard;
Any three other Jews o' th' nation
Might sue him from the obligation. Hudibras.

UNTOWARDLY, adj. Awkward; perverse; froward.

They learn, from unbred or debauched servants,
untowardly tricks and vices. Locke on Education.
UNTOWARDLY, adv. Awkwardly; ungainly; perversely.
He that provides for this short life, but takes no care for eternity, acts as untowardly and as crostly to the reason of things as can be. Tillotson.
He explained them very untowardly. Tillotson.

UNTRACEABLE, adj. Not to be traced.

The workings of providence are secret and untraceable, by which it disposes of the lives of men.
South's Sermons.

UNTRACEABLE, adj. Not marked by any footsteps.

Nor wonder if, advantage'd in my flight
By taking wing from thy suspicious height,
Through untrace'd ways and airy paths I fly,
More boundless in my fancy than my eye. Denb.

UNTRACEABLE, adj. [intraceable, Fr. intraceabilis, Latin.]

1. Not yielding to common measures and management; not governable; stubborn.
The French, supposing that they had advantage over the English, began to be stiff, and almost untraceable, sharply pressing for speedy resolutions and short meetings. Hayward.
If any father have a son thus perverse and untraceable, I know not what more he can do but pray for him. Locke.
Ulcers untraceable in the legs, with a gangrenous appearance in the skin. Arbuthnot on Diet.
2. Rough; difficult.
I forc'd to ride th' untraceable abyss. Milton.

UNTRACEABLENESS, n./s. Unwilling-ness or unstiness to be regulated or managed; stubbornness.

The great difference in men's intellectual abilities from a defect in the organs of the body, particularly adapted to think; or in the subjects or untraceable-ness of their faculties, for want of also. Locke.

UNTRACED, adj. Not engaged in commerce.

Men leave cities to their children in hand, as not liable to necessities as money in untraced and untraced hands. Locke.

UNTRAINED

1. Not educated; not instructed; not disciplined.

My wit untrain'd in any kind of art. Shakespeare.
The king's forces charged lively, and they again as stoutly received their charge; but being an un- trained multitude, without any soldier or guide, they were soon put to flight. Hayward.

Life,
To noble and ignoble, is more sweet
Untrain'd in arms, where rashness leads not on.

Milton.
No expert general will bring a company of raw,
untrained men into the field; but will, by little bloodless skirmishes, instruct them in the manner of the fight. Disney of Pity.

2. Irregular; ungovernable.

Had not abridg'd at every quest and call
Of an untrained hope or passion:
To court each place of fortune that doth fall,
Is wantonness in contemplation. Herbert.

UNTRANSFERABLE. adj. Incapable of being given from one to another.

In parliament there is a rare co-ordination of power, though the sovereignty remain still entire and untransferable in the prince.

Howell's Pre-eminence of Parliament.

UNTRANSPARENT. adj. Not diaphanous; opaque.

Though held against the light, they appeared of a transparent yellow; yet looked on with one's back turned to the light, they exhibited an untransparent blue. Boyle on Colours.

UNTRAVELLED. adj.

1. Never trodden by passengers.

We find no open track or constant manuduction in this labyrinth, but are oftentimes fain to wander in America and untravell'd parts.

Brown's Preface to Vulgar Errors.

2. Having never seen foreign countries.

An untravell'd Englishman cannot relish all the beauties of Italian pictures; because the pictures expressed in them are often such as are peculiar to that country. Addison.

To UNTRAVEL. v. a. To tread back; to go back in the same steps.

We will untravel the steps of damned flight,
And, like a bated and retired flood,
Leaving our rankness and irregular course,
Stoop low within those bounds we have o'look'd.

Shakespeare.

UNTRAVELED. adj. Not laid up; not reposit.

Her attendants

Saw her ached, and in the morning early
They found the bed untravel'd of their mistress.

Shakespeare.

UNTRACTABLE. adj. Not treatable; not practicable.

Men are of so untractable a temper, that nothing can be obtained of them. Disney of Pity.

UNTRIED. adj.

1. Not yet attempted.

It believes,

From hard essays and ill success past,
A faithful lesson not to hazard all Through ways of danger, by himself untry'd. Milton.
That the new ways but months may leave untry'd.
Thus to her sister the harvest apply'd. Drummond.

2. Not yet experienced.

Never more

Mean I am, say, what can untry'd I thought,
The gate of absence from thy sight. Milton's Par. Reg.
The happiest of mankind, even calling those sold blessings which they already have, for their hearts upon some what which they want; some untried pleasures, which if they could but taste, they would then be completely blest. Alford.

Self-pretension; the long acquaintance of fault and beauty; the married condition of a separation, are sufficient reasons not to turn our backs upon life, but to be an element. Collier.

Perjury; thou pleasing dreadful thought!

Through what variety of untry'd being,
Through what new losses and changes must we pass? Milford.

3. Not having passed trial.

The Father, secure,
Ventures his filial virtue, though untry'd, Against whatever may tempt. Milton's Par. Reg.
UNTRIUMPHABLE. adj. Which allows no triumph.

What towns, what garrisons might you,
With hazard of this blood, subdue;
Which now you are bent to throw away
In vain, untriumphable fray? Hudibras.

UNTROD. adj. Not passed; not UNTRODDEN, marked by the foot.

The way he came not having mark'd, return
Was difficult, by human steps untrod. Par. Reg.
Now while the hearer, by the sun's beam untrod,
Hath took no print of the approaching light,
And all the spangled host keep watch. Milton.

A garland made of such new bays,
And fought in such untrodden ways,
As his man's temples e'er did crown. Waller.
Who was the first to explore th' untrodden path,
When life was hazarded in every step? Addison.

UNTRILLED. adj. Not bowled; not rolled along.

Hard fate! untroll'd is now the charming eye;
The playhouse and the park unvisited must lie.

Dryden.

UNTRUBLED. adj.

1. Not disturbed by care, sorrow, or guilt.

Quiet, untrubled soul; awake! awake!
Arm, fight, and conquer, for fair England's sake.

Shakespeare.

2. Not agitated; not confused; free from passion.

Our Saviour meek, and with untrubled mind,
After his airy flight, though hurry'd sore,
Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest. Milton.

3. Not interrupted in the natural course.

Would they think with how small allowance
Untroubled nature doth herself suffice,
Such superfluities they would despise. Spenser.

4. Transparent; clear; not muddled.

The equal distribution of the spirits in the liquor with the tangible parts, ever representeth bodies clear and untroubled. Bacon.

UNTRUE. adj.

1. False; contrary to reality.

By what construction shall any man make those comparisons true, holding that distinction untrue?

Hooker.

That a vessel filled with ashes will receive the like quantity of water that it would have done if it had been empty, is utterly untrue, for the water will not go in by a fifth part. Bacon.

2. False; not faithful.

I cannot break so sweet a bond,
Unless I prove untrue;
Nor can I ever be so fond,

To prove untrue for you. Shakespeare.

Flies commands these nymphs and knights,
Who liv'd in slothful ease, and taste delights,
Whence ever acts of honour dark pursue,
The men, ingenious knights, the ladies all untrue.

Dryden.

UNTRUTH. adv. Falsely; not according to truth.

It was their hurt untruth to attribute so great power unto false gods.

Hooker.

On these mountains it is generally received that the ark rested, but untruth. Rel. Hist. of the World.

UNTRUTHFUL. n. s. Unfaithfulness.

Secretary Peter under pretences of privacy covered much untruthfulness of heart. Bayard.

UNTRUTH. n. s.

1. Falseness; contrary to reality.

2. Moral falseness; not veracity.

He who is perfect, and abhors untruth,
With heavenly influence inspires my youth. Sandys.

3. Treachery; want of fidelity.

I would,
Some untrue had not provok'd him to it,
The king had cut off my head with my brother's. Shakespeare.

4. False assertion.

In matter of speculation or practice, no untruth can possibly assail the patron and defender long;
and things most truly are likewise most behovefully spoken. Hooker.

There is little hope for common justice, in this dispute, from a man who lays the foundations of his reasonings in so notorious an untruth. Arter.

UNTUNABLE. adj. Unharmonious; not musical.

My news in dumb silence will I bury,
For they are harsh, untunable, and bad. Shakespeare.

A lute-string, merely unequal in its parts, gives a harsh and untunable sound; which strings we call false. Bacon.

His harsh untunable pipe is no more fit than a raven's, to join with the music of a choir. Taylor.

To UNTUNE. v. a.

1. To make incapable of harmony.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
And hark what discord follows. Shakespeare.

When the last and dreadful hour
This crumbling pageant shall devour,
The trumpet shall be heard on high,
The dead shall live, the living die,
And music shall untune the sky. Dryden.

The captives, as their tyrant shall require That they should breathe the song, and touch the lyre,

Shall say; can Jacob's servile race rejoice,
Untune the music, and disperse the voice? Prior.

2. To disorder.

O you kind gods!

Cure this great breach in his abused nature;
Th' untune d and jarring senses O wind up
Of this child-changed father! Shakespeare. King Lear.

UNTURNED. adj. Not turned.

New crimes invented, lest untune d no stone,
To make my guilt appear, and hide his own. Dryden.
So eager hath the inquisitive part of mankind been to bring this matter to a fair issue, that as stones hath been left untune d, so way, whereby these things could have been brought forth of the sea but one or other hath pitched upon. Woodward.

UNTURNED. adj. Uninstructed; un-
taught.

Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untune d child; and noble souls
Was graft with crab-tree slip, while fruit thou art.

Shakespeare.

Thy even thoughts with so much plainness flow,
Thy sense untune d infancy may know:
Yet to such height is all that plainness brought,
We may admire, and better d pride be taught.

Prior.

To UNTWINE. v. a.

1. To open what is held together by convolution.

But since the sisters did so soon untwine
So fair a thread, I'll strive to piece the line. Shakespeare.

2. To open what is wrapped up in illusion.

It turns finely and softly three or four times caused by the untwining of the beard by the instruture. Bacon.

3. To separate that which clasps round any thing.

Many worthy gentlemen of England, all the sea-fords of Italy could never untwine from the mist of God's word. Alford.

To UNWYVE. v. a. To separate any things involved in each other, or wrapped up on themselves.

Unwiv'ing his deceitful sleight
He ran to weave a web of wicked guile. Spenser.
The interest of prince and people is so enclosed in a mortal embrace, that they cannot be unwiv'd without pulling a lion off. Taylor's Holy Living.

Untwining

UNV

UNU

UNW

Untwisting all the chains that tie
The hidden soul of harmony.
No, I'll unwist you;
I have occasion for your stay on earth.
Tattered hempen ropes, cut small and untwisted, are beneficial for lands.
Unwist a wire, and from her gums
A set of teeth completely comes.
To UNTY, v. a. [See UNTIE.] To loose.

O time! thou must untangle this, not I:
It is too hard a knot for me t'untie.
Unlac'd her stays, her night-gown is unty'd,
And what she has of head-dress is aside.
To UNVAIL, v. a. To uncover; to strip of a veil. This word is unvail, or unveil, according to its etymology. See VAIL, and VEIL.

Troy reviv'd, her mourning face unvail'd.
UNVALUABLE, adj. Inestimable; being above price.

Secure the innocence of children, by imparting to them the unvaluable blessing of a virtuous and pious education.

UNVALUED, adj.

1. Not prized; neglected.

He may not, as unvalued persons do,
Carve for himself; for on his choice depend
This safety and the health of the whole state.

2. Inestimable; above price.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
Inestimable flocks, unvalued jewels.

UNVANQUISHED, adj. Not conquered;
not overcome.

Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but viceroy of the whole?
Victory doth more often fall by error of the un- vanquish'd, than by the valour of the victorious.

They rise unvanquish'd.
UNVARIABLE, adj. [invariable; French.]

Not changeable; not mutable.

The two great hinges of morality stand fast and unvariable as the two poles: whatever is naturally conducive to the common interest, is good; and whatever has a contrary influence, is evil.

UNVARIED, adj. Not changed; not diversified.

If authors cannot be prevailed with to keep close to truth and instruction, by unvaried terms, and plain, unsophisticated arguments; yet it concerns readers not to be imposed on.

They ring round the same unvaried chimes,
With false returns of still-expected rhymes.

UNVARNISHED, adj.

1. Not overlaid with varnish.

2. Not adorned; not decorated.

I will a round, unvarnish'd tale deliver,
Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what charms,

I won his daughter with.

UNVARYING, adj. Not liable to change.

We cannot keep by as any standing, unvarying measure of duration, which consists in a constant fleeting succession, as we can of certain lengths of extension, as is marked out in permanent parcels of matter.

To UNVEIL, v. a. [See VEIL and VAIL.]

1. To uncover; to divest of a veil.

Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerless light.
To the limpid stream direct thy way,
When the gay morn unveils her smiling eye.

2. To disclose; to show.

The providence that's in a watchful state,
Known to every grain of Pluto's gold;
Down our thoughts unveil'd in their dumb crables.

Unveil'd, the toilet stands display'd,
In silver vase in myrtle order laid.

UNVEILED, adj. Plainly; without disguise.

Not knowing what use you will make of what has been unveiled communicated to you, I was unwilling that some things, which have cost me pains, should fall into any man's hands that seems to purchase knowledge with pains.

UNVENTILATED, adj. Not fanned by the wind.

This, animals, to succour life, demand;
Not should the air unventilated stand;
The idle deep corrupted would contain.

Blue death! Blackmore's Creation.

UNVERITABLE, adj. Not true.

All these proceeded upon unveritable grounds.

UNVERSED, adj. Unacquainted; unskilled.

Not eastern monarchs, on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple shine so gay
As the bright natives of th' unlabour'd field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd.

UNVEX'D, adj. Untroubled; undisturbed.

With a light and unvex'd retire,
With unback'd sword, and helmet all unbruise'd,
We will bear home that lusty blood again!

Unvex'd with thought of wants which may be-

Or for to-morrow's dinner to provide.

UNVIOLATED, adj. Not injured; not broken.

Retain you war against your reputation,
And draw within the compass of suspect
Th' unviolated honour of your wife.

He, with singular constancy, preserved his duty and fidelity to his majesty unviolated.

This strength diffus'd

No less through all my sinews, joints, and bones,
Than thine, while I preserv'd these locks unshorn,
The pledge of my unviolated vow.

UNVIRTUOUS, adj. Wanting virtue.

If they can find in their hearts that the poor,

unvirtuous, fat knight shall be any further afflicted,
we two will be the ministers.

UNVIT'S, adj. Not referred to.

Dwell, not unvit's of heavy'n's fate light, Secure.

The playhouse and the park unvit's must lie.

UNUNIFORM, adj. Wanting uniformity.

Such an ununiform piety is in many to easily apportioned to Satan's interest, that he has no cause to wish the change of his tenure.

UNVOYAGEABLE, adj. Not to be passed over or voyaged.

Not this unvoyageable gulph obscure,
Detain from following thy illustrious track.

UNVULNERABLE, adj. Not incited; not pressed.

The time was once, when thou unvul'd wouldst row.

That never words were music to thine ear,
Unless I spoke.

UNUSED, adj.

1. Not put to use; unemployed.

She whose husband about that time died, forgetting the absent Plangus, or, at least, not hoping of him to attain to inspiring a purpose, left go art unused, which might keep the line from breaking, whereas the fish was already taken.

2. Not accustomed.

He, unused to such entertainment, did shortly and patently answer what he was.

One, what's that?

Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Dropt tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum.

What art thou?

Not from above: no, thy wan looks betray Diminish'd light, and eyes unused to day.

UNUSFUL, adj. Useless; serving no purpose.

I was persuaded, by experience, that it might not be unusful in the capacities it was intended for.

Birds flutter with their wings, when there is but a little down upon them, and they are as yet utterly unusful for flying.

As when the building gains a surer stay,
We take th' unusful scaffolding away.

Declining not unusful to his lord.

UNUSUAL, adj. Not common; not frequent; rare.

With this unusual and strange course they went on, till God, in whose heaviest worldly judgments
I nothing doubt but that there may lie hidden mercy, gave them over to their own inventions.

You gain your point, if your industrious art
Can make unusual words, easy and plain.

A brightly red vermilion all her face;
And her eyes languish with unusual grace.

That peculiar turn, that the words shall appear new, yet not unusual, but very proper to his auditors.

The river flows redundant, and attacks
The lingering remnant with unusual tide.

UNUSUALNESS, n. s. Uncommonness; in-frequency.

It is the unusualness of the time, not the appearance, that surprises Alcinous.

UNUSUALLY, adv. [from unusual.] Not in the usual manner.

UNUTTERABLE, adj. Ineffable; inexpressible.

Sighs now breath'd
Unutterable; which the spirit of prayer
Inspir'd, and wing'd for heaven with speedier flight
Than loudest oratory.

What thinks he of the happiness of another life, wherein God will fill us with unutterable joy?

It wounds my soul -
To think of your unutterable sorrows,
When you shall find Hippolitus was guiltless.

UNVULNERABLE, adj. Exempt from wound; not vulnerable.

The god of soldiers inform Thy thoughts with nobleness, that thou may'st prove
To shame unvulnerable, and stick th' wars
Like a great sea mark, standing every flow!

UNWAKING, adj. Not roused from sleep.

His wonder was, to find unwaken'd Eve
With crosses discompos'd.

UNWALLED, adj. Having no walls.

He came to Tauris, a great and rich city, but unwalled, and of no strength.

UNWAKINGLY, adv. Unexpectedly; before any caution, or expectation.

She, by her wicked arts,
Too false and strong for earthly skill or might,
Unwaken'd brought into her wicked will.

Tha Deity

Hath given so many other signs and cures
To my attendant fate, that will assuredly
You might be hurt for me.

His loving mother came upon a day -
Unto the woods, to see her little son -
And chanc'd unwaken'd to meet him in the way.

After his sports and ceaseless passions done.

Still we fall, while prosperous blows the wind,
Till on some secret rock unwarn'd we light. Fairfax.
UNWAKINGLY. adv. Without caution;
carelessly; heedlessly.

The best part of my powers
Were in the watches all unawaresly
Devoured by the unexpected flood. Shakespeare.
If I had not unawaresly engaged myself for the present publishing it, I should have kept it till I had looked over it. Digby.

By such principles, they renounce their legal claim to liberty and property, and unawaresly submit to what they really abhor. Freeholder.

UNWAKINGNESS. n. f. [from unwary.] Want of caution; carelessness.

The same temper which inclines us to a desire of fame, naturally betrays us into such slips and unwaringness, as are not incident to men of a contrary disposition. Spectator.

UNWAKELIKE. adj. Not fit for war; not used to war; not military.

He safely might old troops to battle lead
Against th' unwarklike Persian, and the Mede;
Whose hasty flight did, from a bloodless field,
Moorish, then honour to the victory yield. Waller.
Avert unwarklike Inroads from his Rome,
Triumph abroad, secure our peace at home. Dryd.

UNWARNED. adj. Not cautioned; not made wary.

Unexperienced young men, if unwarned, take one thing for another, and judge by the outside. Locke.

May hypocrites,
That sily speak one thing, another think,
Drink on unwarn'd, till by enchanting cups
Inebriate, they their wily thoughts disclose! Phil.

UNWARRANTABLE. adj. Not defensible; not to be justified; not allowed.

At very distant removes an extemporary intercourse is feasible, and may be compassed without unwarrantable correspondence with the people of the air. Glanville.

He who does an unwarrantable action through a false information, which he ought not to have believed, cannot in reason make the guilt of one in the excuse of another. Soub.

UNWARRANTABLY. adv. Not justifi-ably; not defensibly.

A true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, will not suffer you to rise up to that confidence, which some men unwarrantably pretend to, nay, unwarrantably require of others. Wake on Death.

UNWARRANTED. adj. Not ascertained; uncertain.

The subjects of this kingdom believe it is not legal for them to be enforced to go beyond the seas, without their own consent, upon hope of an unwarranted conquest; but, to resist an invading enemy, the subject must be commanded out of the counties where they inhabit. Bacon.

The breath of heav'n's soft-blowing, pure and sweet,
With day-spring's glory here leave me to repose.

How can any one be assured, that his meat and drink is not poisoned, and made unwholesome, before they are brought to him?

Rome is never fuller of nobility than in summer; for the country towns are so infested with unwholesome vapours, that they dare not trust themselves in them while the heats last.

Children, born healthy, often contract diseases from an unwholesome nurse.

2. Corrupt; tainted.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity; this gross, watry pumpkin: we'll teach him to know turtles from jays.

UNWIELDILY. adv. Heavily; with difficult motion.

Unwieldily they wallow first in ooze; Then in the shady covert seek repose.

UNWIELDINESS. n. f. Heaviness; difficulty to move, or be moved.

To what a cumbersome unwieldiness, And burdensome corpulence, my love had grown, But that I made it feed upon

That which love worst endures, discretion! Dante.
The supposed unwieldiness of its massy bulk, grounded upon our experience of the inaptitude of great and heavy bodies to motion, is a mere imposture of our senses.

UNWIELDY. adj. Unmanageable; not easily moving or moved; bulky; weighty; ponderous.

An huge, meeting many humours in a fat unwieldy body of fifty-eight years old, in four or five fits carried him out of the world.

Part, huge of bulk! Wallowing unwieldy, enormous in their gait, Tempest the ocean.

Unwieldy sums of wealth, which higher mount Than files of marshall's figures can account.

Nothing here th' unwieldy rock avails, Rebouncing harmless from the plated scales, That, firmly join'd, preserv'd him from a wound, With native armour cruell'd all around.

What carriage can bear away all the rude and unwieldy loppings of a branchy tree at once?

UNWILLING. adj. Loath; not contented; not inclined; not complying by inclination.

The nature of man is unwilling to continue doing that wherein it shall always condemn itself.

If thou dost find him tractable, Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons; If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling.

Be thou so too. If the sun rise unwilling to his race, Clouds on his brows, and spots upon his face, Suspect a drazling day.

Heaven's unchang'd decrees attentive hear! More powerful gods have torn thee from my side, Unwilling to resign, and doom'd a bride.

At length I drop, but in unwilling ears, This saving counsel, keep your piece nine years.

UNWILLINGLY. adv. Not with good will; not without loathsness.

The whining school-boy, with his satchel, And sighing morning face, creeping like snail Unwillingly to school.

A feast the people hold to Oson, and forbid Laborious work; unwillingly this rest Their superstition yield.

By fear or flattery, unwillingly they flatter; These men were once the prince's foes, and then Unwillingly they made him great; but now

Being his friends, shall willingly undo him.

The contagion spreads to all, That which seizes all, all is vain; And therefore must unwillingly we waste

The country, which would else be for man's use.

UNWILLINGNESS. n. f. Loathsness; disinclination.

Obstacles with unwillingness to obey, Is no better than manifest disobedience.

What moved the man to yield to her persuasions? Even the same cause that hath moved all mankind, an unwillingness to grieve her, and make her sad, left the dissuades, and he overcome with sorrow.

You lay upon me this command, and through your tears

Discern your love, and therefore must obey you.

There is in most people a reluctance and unwillingness to be forgotten. We observe, even among the vulgar, how loath they are to have an inscription over their grave.

To UNWIND. v. a. pret. and part. passive unwound.

1. To separate any thing convolved; to untwist; to untwine.

All his subjects having by some years learned to repose in good and fear harm, only from her, that it should have needed a stronger virtue than his, to have unwound so deeply an entered vice.

Empirick politicians use deceit: You boldly shew that skill which they pretend, And work by means as noble as your end

Which should you sell, we might unwind the chie, As men do nature, till we came to you.

2. To disentangle; to loose from entanglements.

Desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not successful as in every point to unwind themselves, where the snares of glossing speech lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear to sister unwind against that, which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy.

As you unwind her lace from him, Let it should ravel, and be good to none, Bottom it on me.

To UNWIND. v. a. To admit evolution. Put the bottoms into clean, scalding water, and they will easily unwind.

UNWIPED. adj. Not cleaned by rubbing.

That hand which we were all mad'd with blood, Shows their dreggers, which unwiped we found Upon their pillows.

UNWISE. adj. Weak; defective in wisdom.

O good, but most unwise politicians! why, You grave, but reckless senators, have you thus Giv'n Hydra here to chuse an officer?

Be not so tardy by unwise delay. He who of those delights can judge, and spare

To interpolate them oft, is not unwise. This the Greeks say, this the historians, the wise and the unwise.

When kings grow stubborn, foolish, or unwise, Each private man for public good should rise.

When the balance of power is duly set in a state, nothing is more dangerous or unwise, than to give way to the first steps of popular encroachments.

UNWISELY. adv. Weakly; not prudently; not wisely.

Lady Zelmira, like some unwisely liberal, that more delight to give presents than pay debts, chide rather to bestow her love upon me, than to recompense him.

Unwisely we did enter this Play, exposing them to scorn

With Hyacinth's force.

To UNWISER. v. a. To wish that which is, not to be.

My finger marks you and I alone, Without more help, than this royal bathroom

Why now thou dost unwisely five thousand men?

Which like me better than to wish to see, To unwisely were as God, were plainly to unwisely their own being, which must be unwisely in the foundation of that agency which unwisely supporteth them.

UNWISER. adj. Not fought; not desired.

So jealous is she of my love to her daughter, that I never yet began to open my mouth to the inevitable Philocles, but that her unwisest presence gave my tale a conclusion before it had a beginning.

To his unwisest yoke My soul consents not to give low reign, While heaping unwisest wealth I distant roam,

The best of brothers at his natal home, By the dire story of a traitress wife, Ends the sad evening of a stormy life.

UNWISER. adj. Unthought of; not known.

To UNWISER. v. a. To deprive of understanding. Not used.

Friends all but now; even now In quarter, and in terms like bride and groom Directing them for bed; and then but now, As if some planet had unwisest men, Swords out, and lifting one at other's breasts.

UNWITHDRAWING. adj. Continually liberal.

Wherefore did Nature pour her bounties forth, With such a full and unwithdrawing hand, Covering the earth with odours, fruits, and flocks?

UNWITHSTOOD. adj. Not opposed.

And Agincourt, deep flag'd with blood, confess What the Silures vigour unwithstood Could do in rigid fight.

UNWITNESSED. adj. Wanting testimony; wanting notice.

Left their zeal to the cause should any way be unwitnessed.

UNWITTINGLY. adv. [properly unwittingly, from unwitting.] Without knowledge; without consciousness.

In these fatal things it falls out that the high-working powers make second causes unwittingly necessary to their determinations. These things are termed most properly natural agents, which keep the law of their kind unwittingly, as the heavens and elements of the world, which can do no otherwise than they do.

Attends repudiates all title to heaven, merely for present pleasure; bolder the extreme madness of running such a desperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive themselves here of that tranquillity they seek for.

UNWISER. adj.

1. Uncommon; unusual; rare; infrequent. His sad, full eyes, sunk deep in hollow pain, Could not endure the unwisest sun to view.

Than he appears by speech; and is unwisest Which now came from him.

Every unwisest meteor is pernicious, and false divine prophecies.

Thick breath, quick pulse, and heaving of my heart.

All signs of some unwisest change appear.

2. Unacquainted; unused. Philocles, with blushing, and without smiling, making unwisest pleasants, and pleasure unwisest, tenderly moved her feet, accounted to feel the sacred ground.

So unwisest to rush water fly, Or how art thou so

On false and changeable gods, and false Rough with their winds and storms.

Unwisest.

UNWORTHY. adj. Lacking without labour.

Lazy and unworthy philosophers in this being worse than gossamers, do not only keep so much of the money of a country in their hands, but make the public pay them for it. Locke

UNWORTHY. adj. Not adored.

His refusal to leave Unworth's, unbecom'd, the throne supreme. Milton

UNWORTHILY. adv. Not according to desert; either above or below merit.

I vow'd, base knight, To tear the garter from thy craven leg, Which I have done, because unworthily Thou wast installed. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Fearing lest my jealous aim might err; And so unworthily disgrace the man, I gave him gentle looks. Shakespeare

If we took upon the Odyssey as all a fiction, we consider it unworthily. It ought to be read as a story founded upon truth, adorned with embellishments of poetry. Bryant

UNWORTHINESS. n. f. Want of worth; want of merit.

A mind fearing the unworthiness of every word that should be presented to her ears, at length brought it forth in this manner. Sidney

O let not an excellent spirit do itself such wrong, as to think where it is placed, embraced, and loved, there can be any unworthiness; since the weakest mist is not easier driven away by the sun, than that is chased away with so high thoughts. Sidney

Every night he comes with songs compos'd To her unworthiness; it is nothing that us To chide him from our ears, for he persists. Shak. I fear'd to find you in another place; But, since you're here, my jealousy grows less; You will be kind to my unworthiness. Dryden

Have a true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, which will not suffer you to rise to a confidence unwarrantably pretended to by some. Wake on Death

UNWORTHY. adj.

1. Not deserving: whether good or bad.

The Athanasian creed and doxology should remain in use; the one as a most divine explication of the chiefest articles of our Christian belief; the other as a heavenly acclamation of joyful applause to his praises, in whom we believe: neither the one nor the other unworthy to be heard sounding, as they are in the church of Christ. Hooker

Every particular accident, not unworthy the remembrance, for brevity I wittingly pass over. Knollys

2. Wanting merit.

Degree being vizarded, Th' unworthiness shows as fairly in the mask. Shak. Are there unworthy men chosen to offices? Whiggin

So may I, blind fortune leading me, Miss that which one unworthy may attain; And die with grieving. Shak. Merchant of Venice

3. Mean; worthless; contemptible.

Tell me, Philistines, did you ever see such a shepherd? did you ever hear of such a prince? and then tell me if a small or unworthy assault have conquered me? Sidney

4. Not suitable; not adequate.

I kiss at her feet a work, which was unworthy her, but which I hope she will forgive. Dryden

Our friend's papers are in my hands, and I will take care to suppress things unworthy of him. Pope to Swift

Care is taken to interpolate additions in such a manner, that scarce any book can be bought, without purchasing something unworthy of the author. Swift

5. Unbecoming; vile.

The brutal action rose his manly mind; Moan'd with unworthy rage of the maid, He, though unarm'd, resolv'd to give her aid. Dryden

UNWRAP. v. a. [from un and wrap.] To open what is folded.

To UNWRAP. v. a. To untwine. The beads of wild oars, and of divers other wild plants, continually wreath and unweave themselves, according to the temperature of the ambient air. Boyle

UNWRITING. adj. Not assuming the character of an author.

The peace of the honest unwriting subject was daily molested. Arbuthnot

UNWRITTEN. adj.

1. Not written; not conveyed by writing; oral; traditional.

Rule of right unwritten, but delivered by tradition from one to another. Spenser's State of Ireland

2. Not containing writing.

As to his understanding, they bring him in void of all notions, a rude, unwritten blank; making him to be created as much an infant, as others are born. South

UNWROUGHT. adj. Not laboured; not manufactured.

Or prove at least to all of wiser thought, Their hearts were fertile land, although unwrought. Railton

Yet thy moist clay is pliant to command; Unwrought and easy to the potter's hand; Now take the mold, now bend thy mind to feel The first sharp motions of the forming wheel. Dryden

UNWRUNG. adj. Not pinched.

We that have free souls, it touches us not; for the galled jade winch, our withers are unwrung. Shakespeare's Hamlet

UNYIELDED. adj. Not given up.

O'erpowered at length, they force him to the ground, Unyielded as he was, and to the pillar bound. Dryden

UNYOKED. v. a.

1. To loose from the yoke.

Our army is dispers'd already: Like youthful steers unyok'd, they took their course East, west, north, south. Shakespeare's Henry IV. Homer calls them like gods, and yet gives them the employment of slaves; they unyoke the mules. Bacon

2. To part; to disjoin.

Shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood, So join'd in love, so strong in both, Unyoke the seizure, and this kind regret? Shak.

1. Having never worn a yoke.

Seven bullocks yet unyok'd for Phœbus chafe, And for Diana's unyok'd swags. Dryden

2. Licentious; unrestrained.

I will awhile uphold The unyok'd humour of your idleness. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

UNYOKED. adj. Not bound with a girdle.

Easy her motion seem'd, to loose her air; Full, though unyok'd, her bosom. Prior

VOCABULARY. n. f. [from vocabularium, Lat. vocabulari, Fr. vocabulaire.] A dictionary; a lexicon; a word book.

Some have delivered the quality of spirits, and

VOCAL. adj. [from vocalis, Lat. vocalis.] Having a voice.

Eyes are vocal, wear have tongues; And there be words, not made with lungs; Sententious shows! O let them fall! Their cadence is rhetorical. Granger

VOCAL. adj. [from vocalis, Lat. vocalis.] Having a voice.

Eyes are vocal, wear have tongues; And there be words, not made with lungs; Sententious shows! O let them fall! Their cadence is rhetorical. Granger

Witness if I be silent, morn or even, To hill, or valley, fountain, or fresh shade, Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise. Milton

Smooth sliding Miniclus, crown'd with vocal reeds, That strain I heard was of a higher mood. Milford

None can animate the lyre, And the mute strings with vocal souls inspire, As Helen, in whose eyes ten thousand Cupids dwell. Dryden

Memnon, though stone, was counted vocal; But 'twas the god, mean while, that spoke all. Some oft has heard a cross haranguing, With prompting priest behind the hanging. Prior

They which, under presence of the law ceremonial being abrogated, require the abrogation of instrumental music, approving nevertheless the use of vocal melody to remain, must show some reason, wherefore the one should be thought a legal ceremony, and not the other. Hooker

They join'd their vocal worship to the choir Of creatures wanting voice. Milton's Paradise Lost

VOCALITY. n. f. [from vocalis, Lat. vocalis.] Power of utterance; quality of being utterable by the voice.

A and R being in extremes, one of roughness, the other of smoothness and sweetness of vocalizing, are not easily in tract of vocal speech to be pronounced spiritality. Holder

TO VOCALIZE. v. a. [from vocalis.] To form into voice.

It is one thing to give an impulse to breath along, another thing to vocalize that breath, i. e. in its passage through the larynx to give it the sound of human voice. Holder

4. It is used ironically in contempt.
But lest you should for honour take
The drunken quarts of a cake,
Or when a whore in her devotion
Kneels punctual to his signification.

VO'CATIVE. n. f. [vocativus, Fr. vocativus, Lat.] The grammatical case used in calling or speaking to.

VOCIFERATION. n. f. [vociferatio, vocifero, Latin.] Clamour; outcry.
The lungs, kept too long upon the stretch by vociferation, or loud singing, may produce the same effect.

VOCIFEROUS. adj. [vocifero, Lat.] Clamorous; noisy.
Thrice three vociferous heralds rose to check the rout.

Several templates, and others of the more vociferous kind of critics, went with a resolution to hiss, and confessed they were forced to laugh.

VOGUE. n. f. [vogue, Fr. from voguer, to float, or fly at large.] Fashion; mode.
It is not more absurd to undertake to tell the name of an unknown person by his looks, than to vouch a man's faintship from the vogue of the world.

Use may revive the obsoletest words, And banish those that now are most in vogue.
What factions th' have, and what they drive at in public vogue, or what in private. In the vogue of the world, it passes for an exploit of honour, for kings to run away with whole countries that they have no pretence to.

No periodical writer, who always maintains his gravity, and does not sometimes sacrifice to the graces, must expect to keep in vogue for any time.

At one time they keep their patients in clothes and warm, as almost to stifle them; and all on a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue.

VOICE. n. f. [vox, Fr. vox, Latin.]

1. Sound emitted by the mouth.
The works of men; or hearse mortalities expire a voice.
2. Sound of the mouth, as distinguished from that uttered by another mouth.
Air in sounds that are not tones, which are all equal, admitteth much variety, as in the voices of living creatures, and in the voices of several men; for we can discern several men by their voices.

3. Any sound made by breath.
O Marcus, I am warm'd; my heart leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory.

4. Vote; suffrage; opinion expressed.
Are you all resolv'd to give your voices? But that's no matter, the greater part carries it.

My voice is in my sword: thou blustering villain thin terms can give thee out! The state was betrayed by the multitude and corruption of voices, and must shortly perish, if not committed to the grave judgment of some few; for two hundred gave voices, rejecting that multitude to fifty, who, for their experience, were holden for men of greatest gravity.

5. Language; words; expression.
Let us call on God in the voice of his church.

To VOICE. v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To rumour; to report. Out of use.
Is this th' Athenian minion, whom the world thought to respect fully? It was voiced that the king purposed to put to death Edward Plantagenet, prisoner in the Tower; whereupon there was great rumour.

To VOICE. v. a. To clamour; to make outcries. Obsolete.
Str. not questions of justification; and rather assume thy right in silence, than voice it with claims.

It is not the gift of every person to harangue the multitude, to voice it loud and high.

VOICED. adj. [from the noun.] Furnished with a voice.
That's Erythrae, Or some angel voice like her. 'Tis she! my struggling soul Would fain go out to meet and welcome her!

VOID. adj. [vide, French.] 1. Empty; vacant.
The earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep.

2. Vain; ineffectual; null; vacated.
If it be void, and to no purpose, that the names of men are so frequent in their books, what did move them to bring them in?

3. Wanting; unfurnished; empty.
If some be admitted into the ministry, void of learning, or low in life, are all the rest to be condemned?

4. To quit; to leave empty.
If they will fight with us, bid them come down, Or void the field.

5. Unsubstantial; unreal.
Senseless, lifeless idly, void and vain.

VOID. n. f. [from the adjective.] An empty space; vacuum; vacancy.
Pride, where wit fails, steps in to our defence, And fills up all the mighty void of sense.

To VOID. v. a. [from the adjective; videri, French.] 1. To quit; to leave empty.
If they will fight with us, bid them come down, Or void the field.

The caterpillar towards the end of summer was eth volatile, and turneth to a butterfly.

2. [volatilis, Fr.] Having the power to pass off by spontaneous evaporation.
In vain, though by their powerful art they bid volatile matters.

When arsenick with soap gives a regulus, a rich mercury sublimates a volatile soluble salt, li better of antimony; doth not this shew that ar rick, which is a substance totally volatile, is compounded of fixed and volatile parts, strongly cohering by a mutual attraction; so that the volatile will not ascend without carrying up the fixed? Newton.

3. Lively; fickle; changeable of mind; full of spirit; airy.

Active spirits, who are ever skimming over the surface of things with a volatile temper, will fix nothing in their mind. Watson on the Mind.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever, just the reverse of Mr. Pope, who hath always loved a domestic life. Swift.

VOLATILE. n. f. [volatile, Fr.] A winged animal.

The air conveys the heat of the sun, maintains fires, and serves for the flight of volatiles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VOLATILENESS. } n. f. [volatilité, Fr.]
VOLATILITY. } from volatile.]

1. The quality of flying away by evaporation; not fixity.

Upon the compound body, chiefly observe the colour, fragility, or pliancy, the volatility or fixation, compared with simple bodies. Bacon.

Of volatility the utmost degree is, when it will fly away without returning. Bacon.

Heat causes the spirits to search some issue out of the body, as in the volatility of metals. Bacon.

The animal spirits cannot, by reason of their subtilty and volatileness, be discovered to the sense. Hale.

The volatility of mercury argues that they are not much bigger; nor may they be much less, lest they lose their opacity. Newton's Opticks.

By the spirit of a plant, we understand that pure, elaborated oil, which, by reason of its extreme volatility, exhales spontaneously, in which the odour or smell consists. Arbuthnot.

2. Mutability of mind; airiness; liveliness.

VOLATILIZATION. n. f. [from volatilize.] The act of making volatile.

Chemists have, by a variety of ways, attempted in vain the volatilization of the salt of tartar. Boyle.

To VOLATILIZE. v. a. [volatiliser, Fr. from volatile.] To make volatile; to subtilize to the highest degree.

Spirit of wine has a refractive power, in a middle degree between those of water and oily substances, and accordingly seems to be composed of both, united by fermentation: the water, by means of some saline spirits with which it is impregnated, dissolving the oil, and volatilizing it by the action. Newton's Opticks.

Spirituous liquors are so far from attenuating, volatilizing, and rendering perishable the animal fluids, that they rather condense them. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

VOLCANO. n. f. [Italian, from Vulcan.] A burning mountain.

Navigators tell us there is a burning mountain in an island, and many volcanos and fiery hills. Brown.

When the Cyclops o'er their anvils sweat,
From the volcanos groins eruptions rite,
And curling sheets of smoke obscure the skies. Garth.

Subterraneous minerals ferment, and cause earthquakes, and cause furious eruptions of volcanos, and tumble down broken rocks. Bentley's Sermons.

Why want we then encomiums on the storm,
Or famine, or volcanos? They perform
Their mighty deeds; they hero-like can slay,
And spread their ample deserts in a day. Young.

VOLS. n. f. [vole, Fr.] A deal at cards, that draws the whole tricks.

Pat fix, and not a living soul
I might by this have won a vole. Swift.

VOLRY. n. f. [volerie, Fr.] A flight of birds.

An old boy, at his first appearance, is sure to draw on him the eyes and chirping of the whole town volery; amongst which, there will not be wanting some birds of prey, that will presently be on the wing for him. Locke.

VOLITATION. n. f. [volito, Latin.] The act or power of flying.

Birds and flying animals are almost erect, advancing the head and breast in their progression, and only prone in the act of volitation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VOLITION. n. f. [volitis, Lat.] The act of willing; the power of choice exerted.

To say that we cannot tell whether we have liberty, because we do not understand the manner of volition, is all one as to say, that we cannot tell whether we see or hear, because we do not understand the manner of sensation. Wilkins.

There is as much difference between the approbation of the judgment, and the actual volitions of the will, as between a man's viewing a desirable thing with his eye, and reaching after it with his hand. Scarb's Sermons.

Volition is the actual exercise of the power the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it; or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, by directing any particular action, or its forbearance. Locke.

VOLITIVE. adj. Having the power to will.
 They not only perfect the intellectual faculty, but the volitive; making the man not only more knowing, but more wise and better. Hale.

VOLLEY. n. f. [volée, French.]

1. A flight of shot.

From the wood a volley of shot flew two of his company. Raleigh's Apology.

More on his guns relies than on his sword,
From whence a fatal volley we receive'd. Waller.

2. A burst; an emission of many at once.
 A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off. Shakespeare.

Diffident sense with modest caution speaks;
It still looks home, and short excursions makes;
But rattling nonsense in full volleys breaks. Pope.

To VOLLEY. v. n. To throw out.
 The holding every man shall beat as loud
As his strong sides can volley. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

VOLLED. adj. [from volley.] Disploded; discharged with a volley.
 I stood
Thy forecast, when in battle to thy aid
The blasting volley d' thunder made all speed. Mist.

The Gallick navy, impotent to bear
His volley d' thunder, ton, diserver'd, found. Philips.

VOLT. n. f. [volte, Fr.] Volt signifies a round or a circular tread; a gate of two treads made by a horse going sideways round a center; so that these two treads make parallel tracks, the one which is made by the fore feet larger, and the other by the hinder feet smaller; the shoulders bearing outwards, and the croupe approaching towards the centre.
Farrier's Dictionary.

VOLUBILITY. n. f. [volubilité, Fr. volubilitas, from volubilis, Latin.]

1. The act or power of rolling.

Volubility, or aptness to roll, is the property of a bowl, and is derived from its roundness. Warin's Log.
 Then celestial spheres should forget their wondrous motions, and by irregular volubility turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hoggar.

2. Activity of tongue; fluency of speech.

Say she be mute, and will not speak a word,
Then I'll command her volubility. Shakespeare.
 He expressed himself with great volubility of words, natural and proper. Clarendon.

He had all the French assurance, cunning, and volubility of tongue. Addison.

She ran over the catalogue of diversions with such a volubility of tongue, as drew a gentle reprimand from her father. Female Quixote.

Mutability; liahleness to revolution.
 Be that a vision this moment, may be a story the next; and this volubility of human affairs, is the judgment of providence, in the punishment of oppression. L'Estrange.

VOLUBLE. adj. [volubilis, Latin.]

1. Formed so as to roll easily; formed so as to be easily put in motion.

Neither the weight of the matter of which a cylinder is made, nor its round voluble form, which, meeting with a precipice, do necessarily continue the motion of it, are any more imputable to that dead, choiceless creature in its first motion. Hume.

The adventitious corpuscles may produce stability in the matter they pervade, by expelling thence those voluble particles, which, whilst they continued, did by their shape unfit for cohesion, or by their motion, oppose coalition. Boyle.

2. Rolling; having quick motion.

This is voluble earth,
By shorter flight to th' east, had left him there. Milton.

Then voluble and bold; now hid, now seen,
Among thick-woven arborets. Milt. Parad. Lost.

3. Nimble; active. Applied to the tongue.

A friend promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices, which render it so wonderfully voluble and suppliant. Addison.

These, with a voluble and suppliant tongue, become mere echoes. Watson on the Blind.

4. Fluent of words. It is applied to the speech, or the speaker.

Cassio, a knave very voluble; no further conscientious, than in putting on the mere form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his looks affection. Shakespeare.

If voluble and sharp discourse be marr'd, Unkindness blunts it more than marble hard. Shakespeare.

VOLUME. n. f. [volumen, Latin.]

1. Something rolled, or convolved.

2. As much as seems convolved at once as a fold of a serpent, a wave of water.

Three score and ten I can remember well;
Within the volume of which time I've seen Hours dreadful, and things strange. Shak. Macb.

Unoppos'd they either lose their force,
Or wind in volumes to their former course. Dry.

Behind the gen'ral mends his weary pace,
And silently to his revenge he sails:
So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,
And long behind his wounded volume trails. Dry.

Thamers fruitful tides
Slow through the vale in silver volumes play. Po.

By the insinuations of these crystals, the volumen of air are driven out of the watery particles, a many of them uniting, form larger volumes, which thereby have a greater force to expand themselves. Cbe.

3. [volume, Fr.] A book; so called, because books were anciently rolled up a staff.

Quyon all this while his book did read,
Ne yet has ended; for it was a great
And ample volume, that doth far exceed My leisure, so long leaves here to repeat. Spem.

Calmly, I do beseech you—
—Aye, as an hostler, thus for the poorest piece
Will bear the knave by th' volume. Shakespeare.

The most sagacious man is not able to find any blot or error in this great volume of the world. Boyle.

I shall not now enlarge on the wrong judgment wherby men mislead themselves. This will make a volume. Le.

If one short volume could comprise
All that was witty, learn'd, and wise,
How would it be esteem'd and read? Le.

VOLU MINOUS. adj. [from voluminosus.]

1. Consisting of many complications.

The serpent roll'd volu minous and vast. Le.

Consisting of many volumes, or books.

If thou'lt write aught of fate, by what the stars
Voluminous, or single characters

In their conjunction met, give me to spell. Alph.

There is pleasure in doing something new, tho' never to little, without pattering the world with voluminous transcriptions. Grant's Bill of Mortal.

The most severe reader makes allowances for many rests and nodding-places in a voluminous writer. Spectator.

4. Copious; diffusive.

He did not bear contradiction without much passion, and was too voluminous in discourse. Clar.

VOLUMINOUSLY. adv. [from voluminous.]

In many volumes or books.

The controversies are hotly managed by the divided schools; and voluminously every where handled.
Graville.

VOLUNTARILY. adv. [volontaire, Fr.]

from voluntary.] Spontaneously; of one's own accord; without compulsion.

With them is no likelihood that ever voluntarily
 they will seek instruction at our hands, it remaineth that, unless we will suffer them to perish, salvation itself must seek them. Hooker.

To be agents voluntarily in our own delinquency, is against God and nature. Hooker.

Self-preservation will oblige a man voluntarily, and by choice, to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater. South.

VOLUNTARY. adj. [volontaire, Fr.]

voluntarius, Latin.]

1. Acting without compulsion; acting by choice.

God did not work as a necessary, but a voluntary agent; intending before-hand, and deceiving with himself, that which did outwardly proceed from him. Hooker.

The lottery of my destiny
 Bars me the right of voluntary chusing. Shaksp.

2. Willing; acting with willingness.

Then virtue was no more; her guard away,
 She fell to lust a voluntary prey. Pope's Odyssey.

3. Done by design; purposed.

If a man be lopping a tree, and his ax-head fall from the helve, out of his hand, and kills another passing by, here is indeed manslaughter, but no voluntary murder. Perkins.

4. Done without compulsion.

Voluntary forbearance denotes the forbearance of an action, consequent to an order of the mind.

The old duke is banished; the new duke, and three or four loving lords, have put themselves into voluntary exile with him. Shaksp. As you like it.

They must have recourse to abstinence, which is but voluntary fasting; and to exercise, which is but voluntary labour. Seed's Sermons.

5. Acting of its own accord; spontaneous.

The publick prayers of the people of God, in churches thoroughly settled, did never use to be vo- luntary dictates, proceeding from any man's extem-poral wit. Hooker.

Thoughts which voluntary move Harmonious numbers. Milton.

VOLUNTARY, n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A volunteer; one who engages in any affair of his own accord.

All the unsettled volunteers of the land;
 Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries. Shaksp.

Ajax was here the voluntary, and you are under an imprec. Shaksp.

The bordering wars were made altogether by voluntaries, upon their own head. Daniel's Ireland.

Aids came in partly upon misfires, and partly voluntaries from all parts. Bacon.

2. A piece of musick played at will, with- out any settled rule.

Playing winds like organs play'd,
voluntaries made

The waken'd earth in organs play'd,
 To be her morning sacrifice. Cleveland.

By a voluntary before the first lesson, we are prepared for admission of those divine truths, which we are shortly to receive. Spectator.

VOLUNTEER. n. s. [volontaire, Fr.]

A soldier who enters into the service of his own accord.

Congress, and the author of the Relapse, being the principals in the dispute, I satisfy them; as for the volunteers, they will find themselves affected with the misfortune of their friends. Collier.

All Asia now was by the ears;
 And gods beat up for volunteers. Prior.

To Greece and Troy.

To VOLUNTEER. v. n.

To go for a sol-diet. A cant word.

Leave off these wages, for in conscience speaking,

The city needs not your new tricks for breaking;
 And if you gallants lose, to all appearing,
 You'll want an equipage for volunteering. Dryden.

VOLUPTUARY. n. s. [voluptuarius, Fr.]

voluptuarius, Latin.] A man given up to pleasure and luxury.

Does not the voluptuary understand, in all the liberties of a loose and a lewd conversation, that he runs the risk of body and soul? L'Estrange.

The parable was intended against the voluptuaries; men who lived like heathens, dissolutely, without regarding any of the restraints of religion. Atterb.

VOLUPTUOUS. adj. [voluptuosus, Lat.]

voluptuosus, Fr.] Given to excess of pleasure; luxurious.

He them deceives; deceiv'd in his deceit;
 Made drunk with drugs of dear voluptuous receipt. Spenser.

If a new sect have not two properties, it will not spread. The one is, the supplanting, or the opposing licence to authority established; the other is, the giving licence to pleasures, and a voluptuous life. Bac.

Thou wilt bring me soon
 To that new world of light and bliss, among
 The gods, who live at ease, where I shall reign
 At thy right hand voluptuous, without end. Mith.

Then swol'n with pride, into the snare I fell
 Of fair fallacious looks; venereal trains, Soften'd with voluptuous life. Mith.

Speculative atheism subsists only in our speculation; whereas really human nature cannot be guilty of the crime. Indeed a few sensual and voluptuous persons may for a season eclipse this native light of the soul, but can never wholly smother and extinguish it. Bentley's Sermons.

VOLUPTUOUSLY. adv. [from voluptuous.]

Luxuriously; with indulgence of excessive pleasure.

Had I a dozen sons, I had rather eleven died nobly for their country, than one voluptuously furnish out of action. Shaksp.

This cannot be done, if my will be so worldly or voluptuously disposed, as never to suffer me to think of them; but perpetually to carry away and apply
 my mind to other things. South.

VOLUPTUOUSNESS. n. s. [from voluptuous.]

Luxurioussness; addictedness to excess of pleasure.

There's no bottom
 In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
 Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
 The cistern of my lust. Shaksp.

If he fill'd his vacancy with his voluptuousness,
 Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
 Call on him for't. Shaksp.

Here, where still evening is, not noon nor night;
 Where no voluptuousness, yet all delight. Dryden.

These sons of Epicurus, for voluptuousness and irreligion, must pass for the only wits of the age. South.

You may be free, unless Your other lord forbids, voluptuousness. Dryden.

VOLUTATION. n. s. [volutatio, Latin.]

Wallowing; rolling.

VoLUTE. n. s. [volute, Fr.]

A member of a column.

That part of the capitals of the Ionic, Corinthian, and Composite orders, which is supposed to represent the bark of trees twisted and turned into spiral lines, or, according to others, the headdresses of virgins in their long hair. According to Vitruvius, those that appear above the stems in the Corinthian order, are sixteen in every capital, four in the Ionic, and eight in the Composite.

These *volute*s are more especially remarkable in the Ionic capital, representing a pillow or cushion laid between the abacus and echinus; whence that ancient architect calls the volute pulvinus. Harris.

It is said there is an Ionic pillar in the Santa Maria Transverra, where the marks of the compass are still to be seen on the volute; and that Palladio learnt from thence the working of that difficult problem. Addison.

VO'NICA. n. s. [Latin.]

An encysted
 tumour in the lungs.

If the ulcer is not broke, it is commonly called a vonica, attended with the same symptoms as an empyema; because the vonica communicating with the vessels of the lungs, must necessarily void some of the putrid matter, and taint the blood. Arbuthnot on Diet.

VO'MICK NUT. n. s.

Vomick nut is the nucleus of a fruit of an East-Indian tree, the wood of which is the lignum co-lubrinum, or snakewood of the shops. It is flat, compressed, and round, of the breadth of a shilling, and about the thickness of a crown-piece. It is certain poison to quadrupeds and birds; and taken internally, in small doses, it disturbs the whole human frame, and brings on convulsions.

To VO'MIT. v. n. [vomo, Latin.]

To
 cast up the contents of the stomach.

The dog, when he is sick at the stomach, knows his cure, falls to his grass, vomits, and is well. More.

To VO'MIT. v. a. [vomir, Fr.]

1. To throw up from the stomach: often with up or out.

As though some world unknown,
 By pamp'rd nature's store too prodigally fed,
 And surfeiting therewith, her surcrease vomited. Drayton.

The fish vomited out Jonah upon the dry land.

Vomiting is of use, when the foulness of the stomach requires it. Wifeman's Surgery.

Weak stomachs vomit up the wine that they drink in too great quantities, in the form of vinegar. Arbuthnot.

2. To throw up with violence from any hollow.

VO'MIT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The matter thrown up from the stomach.

He shall cast up the wealth by him deriv'd,
 Like vomit from his yawning entrails pour'd. Sandys.

2. An emetick medicine; a medicine that causes vomits.

This vomit may be repeated often, if it be found successful. Blackmore.

Whether a vomit may be safely given, must be judged by the circumstances: if there be any symptoms of an inflammation on the stomach, a vomit is extremely dangerous. Arbuthnot.

VOMITION. n. s. [from vomir, Lat.]

The
 act or power of vomiting.

How many have saved their lives, by spewing up their debauch! Whereas, if the stomach had wanted the faculty of vomition, they had inevitably died. Greg's Cosmology.

VO'MITIVE. adj. [vomitif, Fr.]

Eme-
 tick; causing vomits.

From this viruluous quality, mercurius dulcis, and vitriol vomitive, occasion black ejections. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VO'MITORY.

VOMITORY. adj. [vomitare, Fr. vomit, rius, Latin.] Procuring vomits; emetic.

Since regulus of Ribium, or glass of antimony, will communicate to water or wine a purging or vomitory operation, yet the body itself, after iterated infusions, abates not virtue or weight.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Some have vomited up such bodies as these, namely, thick, short, meat pins, which, by straining, they vomit up again, or by taking vomitories privately.

Harey on Consumptions.

VORACIOUS. adj. [vorare, Fr. vorax, Lat.]

1. Greedy to eat; ravenous; edacious.

So voracious is this humor grown, that it draws in every thing to feed it. Gower on the Tongue.

2. Rapacious; greedy.

VORACIOUSLY. adv. [from voracious.] Greedily; ravenously.

VORACIOUSNESS. n. f. [voracitas, Fr. voracité, Lat.]

VORACITY. n. f. [voracitas, Lat. from voracius.] Greediness; ravine; ravenousness.

He is as well contented with this, as those that with the rarities of the earth pamper their voracity.

Sundys.

Creatures by their voracity pernicious, have commonly fewer young. Deham's Physio-Theo.

VORTEX. n. f. In the plural vortices. [Latin.] Any thing whirled round.

If many contiguous vortices of molten pitch were each of them as large as those which some suppose to revolve about the sun and fixed stars, yet these, and all their parts, would by their tensity and stiffness communicate their motion to one another.

Newton's Opticks.

Nothing else could impel it, unless the ethereal matter be supposed to be carried about the sun, like a vortex, or whirlpool, as a vehicle to convey it and the rest of the planets.

Bentley's Sermons.

The gathering number, as it moves along, involves a vast involuntary throng; Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less, Roll in her vortex, and her power confess.

Pope.

VORTICAL. adj. [from vortex.] Having a whirling motion.

If three equal round vessels be filled, the one with cold water, the other with oil, the third with molten pitch, and the liquors be stirred about alike, to give them a vortical motion; the pitch, by its tensity, will lose its motion quickly; the oil, being less tenuous, will keep it longer; and the water, being still less tenuous, will keep it longest, but yet will lose it in a short time.

Newton's Opticks.

It is not a magnetical power, nor the effect of a vortical motion; those common attempts towards the explication of gravity.

Bentley's Sermons.

VOTARIST. n. f. [devotus, Latin.] One devoted to any person or thing; one given up by a vow to any service or worship; votary.

I with a more strict restraint Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of St. Clare.

Shakespeare.

Earth, yield me roots! What is here? Gold! yellow, glittering, precious gold! No, gods, I am no idle votarist. The grey-hooded nun, Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed, Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phoebus' wain.

Milton.

VOTARY. n. f. One devoted, as by a vow, to any particular service, worship, study, or state of life.

Wherefore waste I time to counsel thee? Thou art a votary to fond desire. Thou, faint god of sleep! forget that I Was ever known to be thy votary. No more my pillow shall thine altar be,

Nor will I offer any more to thee Myself a melting sacrifice.

Shakespeare.

'Twas the coldness of the votary, and not the prayer, that was in fault, whenever fervor was deficient at the publick office of the church. By these means, men worship the idols have been set up in their minds; and stamping the characters of Avidity upon absurdities and errors, become zealous votaries to bulls and monkeys. The enemy of our happiness has his servants and votaries among those who are called by the name of the son of God.

Rogers's Sermons.

How can heav'nly wisdom prove An instrument to earthly love? Know'st thou not yet, that men commence Thy votaries for want of sense?

Swift.

VOTARY. adj. Consequent to a vow.

Superstition is now so well advanced, that men of the first blood are as firm as butchers by occupation; and votary resolution is made equippent to custom, even in matter of blood.

Bacon.

VOTARESS. n. f. [female of votary.] A woman devoted to any worship or state.

The imperial votress passed on In maiden meditation, fancy free. His mother was a votress of my order; And, in the spiced Indian air by night, Full often hath gossip'd by my side.

Shakespeare.

Shakespeare.

No votary this votress needs, Her very syllables are beads. Thy votress from my tender years I am; And love, like sheel, the woods and sylvan game.

Cleaveland.

Dryden.

What force have pious vows? the queen of love His sister lends, her votress from above. In maiden meditation, fancy free. His mother was a votress of my order; And, in the spiced Indian air by night, Full often hath gossip'd by my side.

Pope.

VOTE. n. f. [votum, Lat.] Suffrage; voice given and numbered.

He that joins instruction with delight, Profit with pleasure, carries all the votes.

Rafcom.

How many have no other ground for their tenets, than the supposed honesty of learning of those of the same profession! as if truth were to be established by the vote of the multitude.

Locke.

The final determination arises from the majority of opinions or votes in the assembly, because they ought to be swayed by the superior weight of reason.

Wallis.

TO VOTE. v. a.

1. To chuse by suffrage; to determine by suffrage.

You are not only in the eye and ear of your master, but you are also a favourite, the favourite of the time, and so are in his bosom also; the world hath also voted you, and doth so esteem of you.

Bacon.

2. To give by vote.

The parliament voted them one hundred thousand pounds, by way of recompense for their sufferings.

Swift.

VOTER. n. f. [from vota.] One who has the right of giving his voice or suffrage.

Electors growing chargeable, the voters, that is, the bulk of the common people, have been universally seduced into bribery, perjury, drunkenness, malice, and slander.

Swift.

He hates an action base; Can sometimes drop a voter's claim, And give up party to his fame.

Swift.

VOTIVE. adj. [votivus, Latin.] Given by vow.

Such in his temple you may find, On votive tablets to the life pository. Venus! take my votive glass; Since I am not what I was, What from this day I shall be, Venus! let me never see.

Brior.

TO VOUCH. v. a. [vouchen, Norman Fr.]

1. To call to witness; to object.

The sun and day are witnesses for me; Let him who fights unseen relate his own, And vouch the silent stars and stolid moon.

Dryden.

TO VOUCH. v. a. [vouchen, Norman Fr.] To affirm; to warrant; to testify; to maintain by repeated affirmations.

You do not give the cover; the feast is told That is not often vouch'd, while 'tis making. 'Tis given with welcome. The consistency of the discourse, and the pertinency of it to the design he is upon, vouches its own truth of our great apostle.

Locke.

They made him ashamed to touch the truth of the relation, and afterwards to repeat it.

Atterb.

TO VOUCH. v. n. To bear witness; to appear as a witness; to give testimony.

He declares he will not believe her, until the elector of Hanover shall vouch for the truth of what she hath so solemnly affirmed.

Swift.

VOUCH. n. f. [from the verb.] Warrant; attestation.

What praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed? one that, in the authority of her memory, did justly put on the crown of very modesty itself?

Shakespeare's Othello.

VOUCHER. n. f. [from vouch.]

1. One who gives witness to any thing. All the great wits of that age stand up together as vouchers for one another's reputations.

Spenser.

I have added nothing to the malice or absurdity of them; which it behoves me to declare, since the vouchers themselves will be so soon lost.

Pope.

2. Testimony.

Better to starve,

Than leave the him which first we do deserve: Why in this wolfish gown should I stand here, To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear Their needful voucher? The stamp is a mark, and a public voucher, that a piece of such denomination is of such a weight, and of such a fineness, i. e. has so much silver in it.

Locke.

TO VOUCHSAFE. v. a. [vouch and safe.]

1. To permit any thing to be done without danger.

2. To condescend to grant.

He grew content to mark their speeches, then marvel at such wit in shepherd, after to like their company, and lastly to vouchsafe conference.

Shakespeare's As You Like It.

Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two? Two thousand, fair woman, and I'll vouchsafe thee hearing.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

But if the sense of touch seem such delight Beyond all other, think the same vouchsafe To cattle and each beast.

Milton.

It is not said by the apostle, that God vouchsafeth to the heathens the means of salvation; and yet I will not affirm that God will save none of those, to whom the sound of the gospel never reached.

South's Sermons.

TO VOUCHSAFE. v. n. To design; to condescend; to yield.

Do I not see Zelmane, who does not think a thought which is not first weighed by wisdom and virtue? doth not she vouchsafe to love me with like ardour?

Shakespeare's As You Like It.

Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman, Of these supposed crimes to give me leave By circumstance but to acquit myself.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

Vouchsafe, illustrious Ormond, to behold What power the charms of beauty had of old.

Dryden.

VOUCHSAFEMENT. n. f. [from vouchsafe.] Grant; condescension.

The infinite superiority of God's nature, places a vast disparity betwixt his greatest communicated vouchsafement, and his boundless, and therefore to his creatures incommunicable, perfection.

Boyle.

VOW. n. f. [vow, French; votum, Lat.]

1. Any promise made to a divine power; an act of devotion, by which some part of life, or some part of possessions, is consecrated to a particular purpose.

The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows;
They are polluted offerings. Shakespeare
Where honour or where conscience does not bind,
No other law shall buckle me,
Slave to myself I will not be,
Nor shall my future actions be confin'd
By my own present mind.

Who by resolves or vows engag'd does stand
For days that yet belong to fate,
Does, like an unthrifty, mortgage his estate
Before it comes into his hand.
The bondman of the cloister so
All that he does receive does always owe;
And till, as time comes in, it goes away,
Not to enjoy, but debts to pay.
Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Which his hour's work, as well as hours, does tell;
Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell.

If you take that vow and that wish to be all one, you are mistaken; a wish is a far lower degree than a vow. Hammond
She vows for his return with vain devotion pays. Dryden

2. A solemn promise, commonly used for a promise of love or matrimony.

By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever woman spoke. Shakespeare
Those who wear the woodbine on their brow,
Were knights of love, who never broke their vow;
Firm to their plighted faith. Dryden

To Vow. v. a. [vower, Fr. vover, Latin.]

1. To consecrate by a solemn dedication; to give to a divine power.

David often vow'd unto God the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving in the congregation. Hook
Vow and pay unto the Lord. Psalms lxxvi

When we have not only vow'd, but delivered them over into the possession of Almighty God, for the maintenance of his public worship, and the ministers thereof, they are not now arbitrable;
nor to be revoked. Spelman

Whoever sees these irreligious men,
With burden of a sickness, weak and faint,
But hears them talking of religion then,
And seeing of their soul to every saint. Davies
This plant Latine, when his town he wall'd,
Then found, and from the tree Laurentum call'd;
And last, in honour of his new abode,
He vow'd the laurel to the laurel's god. Dryden

2. To devote: a ceremonial phrase.

To Master Harvey, upon some special consideration, I have vow'd this my labour. Spenser

To Vow. v. n. To make vows or solemn promises.

Doft see how unregarded now
That piece of beauty passes?
There was a time, when I did vow
To that alone; but mark the fate of faces. Suckling

VOV'ED. part. pass. [from the verb.] Consecrated by solemn declaration.

VOV'EL. n. f. [voyelle, Fr. vocalis, Lat.] A letter which can be uttered by itself.

I distinguish letters into vowels and consonants, yet not wholly upon their reason, that a vowel may be sounded alone, a consonant not without a vowel, which will not be found all true; for many of the consonants may be sounded alone, and some joined together without a vowel, as bl, ft; and as we pronounce the latter syllable of people, rifle. Holder Virgil makes the two vowels meet without an elision. Brown

VOWS' FLOW. n. f. [vow and follow.] One bound by the same vow.

Who are the votaries
That are vow-fallows with this virtuous king? Shakespeare

VOYAGE. n. f. [voyage, French.]

1. A travel by sea.

Guyon found that his voyage make,
With his ship, that him guided still. Spenser

Our ships went landry voyages, as well to the pillars of Hercules, as to other parts in the Atlantick and Mediterranean seas. Pope

This great man acted like an able pilot in a long voyage; contented to sit in the cabin when the winds were alloyed, but ready to assume the helm when the storm arose. Prior

2. Course; attempt; undertaking. A low phrase.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife,
I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakespeare

If you make your voyage upon her, and prevail,
I am no further your enemy. Shakespeare Cymbeline

3. The practice of travelling.

All nations have interknowledge of one another, by voyage into foreign parts, or strangers that come to them. Bacon

To VOYAGE. v. n. [voyager, Fr. from the noun.] To travel by sea.

For, voyaging to learn the direful art,
To taint with deadly drugs the herbed dart;
Thus refus'd I impart the baneful trust. Pope Ody

To VOYAGE. v. a. To travel; to pass over.

I with pain
Voyag'd th' unequal vast, unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton's Paradise Lost

VOYAGER. n. f. [voyageur, French; from voyage.] One who travels by sea.

Disdain not in thy constant travelling
To do as other voyagers, and make Some turns into less creeks, and wisely take Fresh water at the Heliconian spring. Domin

How comfortable this is, voyagers can best tell. Cheyne

Deny your vessels, ye deny in vain;
A private voyager I pass the main. Pope's Odyssey

Ur. adv. [ap, Saxon; op, Dutch and Danish.]

1. Aloft; on high; not down.

From those two brethren, admire the wonderful changes of worldly things; now up, now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play. Knolton

Thither his course he bends; but up or down,
By center, or eccentric, hard to tell;
Or longitude. Milton

2. Out of bed; in the state of being risen from rest.

Helen was not up, was she? Shakespeare
His chamber being commonly filled with suitors, when he was up, he gave his legs, arms, and breast to his servants to dress him, his eyes to his jettors, and ears to petticoats. Waller

3. In the state of being risen from a seat.

Upon his first rising, a general whisper ran among the country people, that Sir Roger was up. Addison

4. From a state of decumbiture or concealment.

Up with my tent; hear will I lie to-night;
But where to-morrow!—well, all's one for that. Shakespeare

5. In a state of being built.

Up with my tent; hear will I lie to-night;
But where to-morrow!—well, all's one for that. Shakespeare

6. Above the horizon.

As soon as the sun is up, let upon the city.
Now morn with rosy light had break'd the sky,
Up rose the sun, and up rose Emily;
Address'd her early steps to Cynthia's fans. Dryden

7. To a state of proficiency.

Till we have wrought ourselves up into this degree of christian indifference, we are in bondage. Auricular

8. In a state of exaltation.

Those that were up themselves kept others low;
Those that were low themselves held others hand.
Ne suffer'd them to rise, or greater grow. Spenser
Henry the Fifth is crown'd; up, vanity!
Down, royal state! all you sage counsellors, hence! Shakespeare

9. In a state of climbing.

Stride the famous flow
Up to the city which heard, up they drew
By dates and breaks. Chapman

10. In a state of insurrection.

The gentle archbishop of York is up
With well-appointed powers. Shakespeare Henry IV

Rebels there are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword. Shakespeare
Thou hast br'd me; my top's up in arms,
And men's each part about me. Dryden

11. In a state of being increased, or raised.

Grief and passion are like floods raised in little brooks by a sudden rain; they are quickly up, and if the concernment be poured unexpectedly in upon us, it overflows us. Dryden

12. From a remoter place, coming to any person or place.

As a boar was whetting his teeth, up comes a fox to him. L'Estrange

13. Into order: as, he drew up his regiment.

I am ready to die from my youth up. Plautus lxxviii

14. From younger to elder years.

I am ready to die from my youth up. Plautus lxxviii

15. Up and down. Dispersedly; here and there.

Abundance of them are seen scattered up and down like so many little islands when the tide is low. Addison

16. Up and down. Backward and forward.

Our desire is, in this present controversy, not to be carried up and down with the waves of uncertain arguments, but rather positively to lead on the minds of the simpler sort by plain and easy degrees, till the very nature of the thing itself do make manifest what is truth. Hooker

The skipping king he rambled up and down,
With shallow jesters. Shakespeare

Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wads a falling blow, now strikes again;
Then nimble hits a thrust, then lends a wound;
Now back he gives, then rushes on again. Daniel

Thou and death
Shall dwell at ease, and up and down unseen
Wing steadily the human air. Milton

Of his windy sea of land, the head
Waltz'd up and down about, beat on his prey. Mil
What a miserable life dost thou lead, says a dog to a lion, to run starving up and down thus in woods. L'Estrange

She moves! life wanders up and down
Through all her face, and lights up every charm. Addison

17. Up to. To an equal height with.

Tantalus was punished with the rage of an eternal thirst, and set up to the chin in water, that fled from his lips whenever he attempted to drink it. Addison

18. Up to. Adequately to.

The wisest men in all ages have lived up to the religion of their country, when they saw nothing in it opposite to morality. Addison
They are determined to live up to the holy rule by which they have obliged themselves to walk. Afterbury

We must not only mortify all these passions that solicit us, but we must learn to do well, and act up to the positive precepts of our duty. Ben. Jern

19. Up with. A phrase that signifies the act of raising any thing to give a blow.

She, quick and proud, and who did Pae despise,
Up with her fist, and beat him on the face;
Another time, quoth she, became more wise:
Thus Pae did kiss her hand with little grace. Sides

20. It is added to verbs implying some accumulation, or increase.

If we count up these prodigious swarms, that settled in every part of the Campagna of old Rome, they would amount to more than can be found in any six parts of Europe of the same extent. Addison on Italy

Up. Interject.*1. A word exhorting to rise from bed.

Up, up! cries gluttony, the break of day;
Go drive the deer, and drag the fenny grey. Pope.

2. A word of exhortation, exciting or rousing to action.

Up then, Melpomene, the mournful muse of nine;
Such cause of mourning never hadst before.

Up, grisly ghosts; and up, my fearful flock;
Matter of mirth now shalt thou have no more.

But up, and enter now into full bliss. Spenser.

Up, up, for honour's sake; twelve legions wait
you. Milton.

And long to call you chief. Dryden.

Up. prep. From a lower to a higher part; not down.

In going up a hill, the knees will be most weary;
In going down, the thighs: for that in lifting the feet,
When a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body beareth most upon the knees, and in going down, upon the thighs. Bacon.

To UPBEAR. v. a. preter. upbore; part. pass. upborn. [up and bear.]*1. To sustain aloft; to support in elevation.

Upborn with indefatigable wings. Milton.

Rang'd in a line the ready racers stand,
Start from the goal, and vanish o'er the strand;
Swift as on wings of wind upborn they fly,
And drifts of rising dust involve the sky. Pope.

2. To raise aloft.

This with pray'r,
Or one short sigh of human breath, upborn
Ev'n to the seat of God. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A monstrous wave upbore
The chief, and dash'd him on the craggy shore. Pope.

3. To support from falling.

Vital pow'rs 'gan wax both weak and wan,
For want of food and sleep; which two upbear,
Like weighty pillars, this frail life of man. Spenser.

To UPBRAID. v. a. [upgebrædan, up-gebrædan, Saxon.]*1. To charge contemptuously with any thing disgraceful. It has commonly with, sometimes of, before the thing imputed; sometimes it has only an accusative of the thing, as in Milton; and sometimes the person without the thing, or the thing without the person.

The fathers, when they were upbraided with that defect, comforted themselves with the meditation of God's most gracious nature, who did not therefore the less accept of their hearty affection. Hooker.

But as an honour snatch'd with bold rosin hand,
And I had many living to upbraid
My gain of it by their assistances,
Which daily grew to quarrel. Shakespeare, Henry IV.

If you refuse your aid, yet do not

Upbraid us with our distress. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

Vain man! how long wilt thou thy God upbraid?

And, like the roaring of a furious wind,

Thou vent the vile distemper of thy mind? Sandys.

How cunningly the largest displays

Her own transgressions, to upbraid me mine. Milton.

'Tis a general complaint against you, and I must upbraid you with it, that because you need not write, you will not. Dryden.

Yourselves the world of more defects upbraid,

That other works by nature are unmade;

That she did never at her own expense

A palace rear. Blackmore.

2. To object as matter of reproach; with to before the person.

Those that have been bred together, are more apt to envy their equals when raised; for it doth upbraid them their own fortunes, and points at them. Harvel.

Any of these, without regarding the pains of character, grudge to upbraid to some table shall remain of ancient piety, which the rapacity of four ages has scarce left. Swains.

May they not justly to our climate upbraid shortness of night, and paucity of shade? Prim.

3. To urge with reproach.

I have too long born

Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffs. Shak.

He that knowingly commits an ill, has the upbraidings of his own conscience. Devo. of Piety.

4. To reproach on account of a benefit received from the reproacher.

Ev'ry hour

He flatters into one gross crime or other;

His knights grow riotous, and he himself upbraids us.

On ev'ry trifle. Shakespeare's King Lear.

If any lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth liberally, and upbraids not. James, i. 5.

Be ashamed of upbraiding speeches before friends:

and after thou hast given, upbraid not. Exodus, xlii. 22.

5. To bring reproach upon; to show faults by being in a state of comparison.

Ah, my son, how evil sits it me to have such a son!

and how much doth thy kindness upbraid my wickedness! Sidney.

The counsel which I cannot take,

Instead of healing, but upbraids my weakness. Add.

6. To treat with contempt. Not in use.

There also was that mighty monarch laid,

Low under all, yet above all in pride;

That name of native fire did foul upbraid,

And would, as Ammon's son, be magnify'd Spenser.

UPBRAIDER. n. s. [from upbraid.] One that reproaches.

UPBRAIDINGLY. adv. By way of reproach.

The time was when men would learn and study good things, not envy those that had them. Then men were had in price for learning; now letters only make men vile. He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nickname. Ben Jonson.

To UPBraid. v. a. [A word formed from upbraid by Spenser, for the sake of a rhyming termination.] To shame.

Vile knight,

That knights and knighthood dost with shame upbraid.

And shew'st th' example of thy childish might,

With silly, weak, old women thus to fight. Spenser.

UPBROUGHT. part. pass. of upbringing. Educated; nurtured.

Divinely wrought,

And of the brood of angels, heav'nly born,

And with the crew of blessed saints upbrought,

Each of which did her with her gifts adorn. Spenser.

UPCAST. [Participle from To cast up.] Thrown upwards.

Beasts with upcast eyes forsake their shade,

And gaze, as if I were to be obey'd. Dryden.

Old Saturn here, with upcast eyes,

Beheld his abdicated skies. Addison.

UPCAST. n. s. A term of bowling; a throw, or a cast.

Was there ever man had such luck? when I knelt the jack, upon an upcast to be hit away!

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

To UPGATHER. v. n. [up and gather.]

To contrail.

Himself he close upgather'd more and more

Into his den, that his doubtful train,

By his there being might not be betray'd,

Ne any noise, ne any question made. Spenser.

UPHOLD. v. a. [up and hold.] Lusted by the hand.

The uphold hedge is used by underworkmen,

when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to holden. They use it with both their hands, and holden lift their hammer higher than their head. Mason's Mechanical Knowledge.

UPHOLD. part. pass. of uphold. Maintained; sustained.

He who signs

Monarchy in heaven, all these, as one secure,

Sat on his throne, uphold by old repute. Milton.

UPHOLD. adj. [up and hold.] Difficult; like the labour of climbing an hill.

What an uphold labour must it be to a learner, who has those first rudiments to master at twenty years of age, which others are taught at ten. Clarke.

Yet, as immortal, in our uphold chase

We press coy fortune with unback'd pack. Tennyson.

To UPHOARD. v. a. [up and board.] To treasure; to store; to accumulate in private places.

Heaps of huge words upboarded hideously

With horrid sound, though having little sense.

They think to be chief praise of poetry;

And thereby wanting due intelligence,

Have marr'd the face of goodly poesy,

And made a monster of their fantasia. Spenser.

If thou hast upboarded in thy life

Extorted treasure in the womb of earth,

Speak of it. Shakespeare.

To UPHOLD. v. a. preter. upheld; part. pass. upheld, and upholden. [up and hold.]*1. To lift on high.

The mournful train with groans, and hands uphold.

Refract his pity. Dryden.

2. To support; to sustain; to keep from falling.

While life upholds this arm,

This arm upholds the house of Lancaster. Shakespeare.

This great man found no means to continue and uphold his ill-purchased greatness, but by overjecting the English law, and assuming, in lieu thereof, of the barbarous customs of the Irish. Dow, Irish.

Poetry and painting were uphold by the strength of imagination. Dryden's Description.

3. To keep from declension.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation, where causes are first pleaded;

for that upholds in the client the reputation of his counsel, and beats down in him the conceit of his cause. Bacon.

Never was a time, when the interposition of the magistrate was more necessary, to secure the honour of religion, and uphold the authority of those great principles by which his own authority is best up- held. Addison.

4. To support in any state of life.

Many younger brothers have neither lands nor means to uphold themselves. Raleigh.

5. To continue; to keep from defeat.

Divers, although peradventure not willing to be yoked with elderships, yet were contented to uphold opposition against bishops, not without greater hurt to the courts of their whole proceedings. Hooker.

6. To keep from being lost.

Faulconbridge,

In spite of spite, alone upholds the day. Shakespeare.

7. To continue without failing.

A deaf person, by observing the motions of another man's mouth, knows what he says, and upholds

a current communication of discourse with him. Milton.

8. To continue in being.

As Nebuchodonosor lived, who hath fastidiously for the upholding of every living thing. Isaiah, xl. 7.

A due proportion is held betwixt the parts, as well in the natural body of man, as the body politick of the state, for the upholding of the whole. Harvel.

UPHOLD. n. s. [from uphold.]

1. A supporter.

Supports then Adam, ne'er to wile;

Yet when the weight of kingdoms lies

Too long upon his single shoulders,
Sink down—he must, or find upholders. Swift.

2. A sustainer in being.

The knowledge thereof is so many manufactions to the knowledge and admiration of the infinite wisdom of the creator and upholder of them. Hale.

3. An undertaker; one who provides for funerals.

The company of upholders have a right upon the bodies of the subjects. Arbutnot.

Where the brass knocker wrapt in flannel band,
Forbid the thunder of the footman's hand;
Th' upholder, rustic harbinger of death,
Waits with impatience for the dying breath. Gay.

UPHOLSTERER. n. s. [a corruption of upholder.] One who furnishes houses; one who fits up apartments with beds and furniture.

If a corner of the hanging wants a single nail,
Send for the upholsterer. Swift.

Mere wax as yet, you fashion him with ease,
Your barber, cook, upholsterer. Pope.

UPLAND. n. s. [up and land.] Higher ground.

Men at first, after the flood, lived in the uplands and sides of the mountains, and by degrees sunk into the plains. Burnet.

UPLAND. adj.

1. Higher in situation.

Those in Cornwall do no more by nature than others elsewhere by choice, conceive themselves an exalted locality from the upland dwellers, and carry an estimation against them. Cassell's Survey of Cornw.

Sometimes with figure delight
The upland hamlets will invite. Milton.

2. Rude; savage. This is the meaning in Chapman; probably because the uplanders, having less commerce, were less civilized.

And long'd to see this heap of fortitude,
That to illiterate wage, and upland rude,
That laws divine nor humane he had learn'd. Chapman.

UPLANDISH. adj. [from upland.] Mountainous; inhabiting mountains.

Lion-like, uplandish, and more wild,
Slave to his pride; and all his nerves being naturally compul'd

Of eminent strength; stalks out and preys upon a shy sheep. Chapman's Iliads.

UPPLA'Y. v. a. [up and lay.] To hoard; to lay up.

We are but farmers of ourselves; yet may,
If we can stock ourselves and thrive, uplay
Much, much good treasure for the great run-day. Donne.

TO UPLIFT. v. a. [up and lift.] To raise aloft.

Mechanick slaves,
With greasy aprons, rules and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view. Shak. Antony and Cleopatra.

The banish'd Bolingbroke repeats himself,
And, with uplifted arms, in safe arriv'd
At Ravenspurg. Shakespeare's Richard II.

Together both, with next t' almighty arm
Uplifted imminent, one stroke they aim'd. Addison.

Satan talking to his nearest mate,
With head uplift above the wave, and eyes
That twinkling shad'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

When by just vengeance guilty mortals perish,
The gods behold their punishment with pleasure,
And say th' uplifted thunder-bolt aches. Add. Cato.

Songs, sonnets, epigrams, the winds uplift,
And whiff them back to Elysium, Young, and Swift. Pope.

UPPER. adj. [an irregular superlative formed from up.] Highest; topmost.

That's the upper end when the nation begins
To be just enough of sense to know
The reason when rated to depart. Dryden.

UPON. prep. [up and on.]

1. Not under; nothing being on the top.

As I did stand my watch upon the hill,
I look'd toward Birnam; and soon methought
The wood began to move. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Not within; being on the outside.

Blood that is upon the altar. Bible.

3. Thrown over the body; as clothes.

I have seen her rise from her bed, throw her night-gown upon her. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. By way of imprecation or infliction.

Hard-hearted Clifford! take me from the world;
My soul to bear'n, my blood upon your heads. Shak.
No man, who had a mind to do wrong, would be awed from doing it by a law that is always to be a sword in a scabbard, and must never be pleaded against him, or executed upon him. Kentworth.

5. It expresses obstetation, or protestation.

How? that I should murder her?
Upon the love, and truth, and vows, which I Have made to thy command!—I, her!—her blood!
Shakespeare.

6. It is used to express any hardship or mis- chief.

If we would neither impose upon ourselves, nor others, we must lay aside that fallacious method of confering by the lump. Burnet.

That is not a fault inseparable from suits, but is the sin of the managers: it lies not naturally upon the thing, but only upon the contingent circumstances and manner of doing. Kentworth.

7. In consequence of. Now little in use.

Let me, but find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
Then the princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension of the ambitious designs of that nation. Bacon.

I wish it may not be concluded, lest, upon second cogitations, there should be cause to alter. Bacon.

These forces took hold of divers; in some upon discontent, in some upon ambition, in some upon levity and desire of change, and in some few upon conscience and belief; but in most upon simplicity; and in divers out of dependance upon some of the better sort, who did in secret favour these brains. Bacon.

He made a great difference between people that did rebel upon wantonness, and them that did rebel upon want. Bacon.

Upon pity they were taken away, upon ignorance
they are again demanded. Hayward.

Promises can be of no force, unless they be believed to be conditional; and unless that duty proposed to be enforced by them, be acknowledged to be part of that condition, upon performance of which those promises do, and upon the neglect of which those promises shall not, belong to any. Hammond.

The king had no kindness for him upon an old account, as remembering the part he had acted against the earl of Stafford. Clarendon.

Though he offers itself in never to pleading and alluring a devil at first, yet the remote and inward regrets of the soul, upon the commission of it, infinitely overbalance those faint and transient grati-fications. Saunders's Sermons.

The common corruption of human nature, upon the bare stock of its original depravation, does not usually proceed so fast. Swift's Sermons.

When we make judgments upon general presumptions, they are made rather from the temper of our own spirit, than from reason. Burnet.

'Tis not the thing that is done, but the intention in doing it, that makes good or evil. There is a great difference betwixt what we do upon force, and what upon inclination. L'Estrange.

The determination of the will upon enquiry, following the direction of that guide. Locke.

There broke out an irreparable quarrel between their parents; the one valuing himself too much upon his birth, and the other upon his possessions. Spenser.

The design was discovered by a person, as much noted for his skill in gaming, as in politics, upon the base, unbecoming end of getting money by wagers. Swift.

8. In immediate consequence of.

Waller should not make advantage upon that enterprise, to find the way open to him to march into the west. Clarendon.

A louder kind of sound was produced by the impetuous eruptions of the halituous flames of the fast-petre, upon casting a live coal thereon. Boyle.

So far from taking little advantages against us for every failing, that he is willing to pardon our most wilful miscarriages, upon our repentance and amendment. Tillotson.

Upon lessening interest to four per cent. you fall the price of your native commodities, or lessen your trade. Locke.

The mind, upon the suggestion of any new notion, runs immediately after similes to make it the clearer. Locke.

If upon the perusal of such writings, he does not find himself delighted; or if, upon reading the admired passages in such authors, he finds a coldness and indifference in his thoughts, he ought to conclude, that he wants the faculty of discovering them. Spenser.

This advantage we lost upon the invention of firearms. Addison.

9. In a state of view.

It is upon record, or else reported Successively, from age to age. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

The next heroes we meet with upon record were Romulus and Numa. Temple.

The atheists taken notice of among the antients are left branded upon the records of history. Locke.

10. Supposing a thing granted.

If you say necessity is the mother of arts and inventions, and there was no necessity before, and therefore these things were slowly invented, this is a good answer upon our supposition. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

11. Relating to a subject.

Ambitious Constance would not cease,
Till she had kindled France, and all the world,
Upon the right and party of her son. Shak. K. John.

Yet when we can intreat an hour to serve,
Would spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Upon this, I remember a strain of refined civility, that when any woman went to see another of equal birth, she worked at her own work in the other's house. Temple.

12. With respect to.

The king's servants, who were sent for, were examined upon all questions proposed to them. Dryden.

13. In consideration of.

Upon the whole matter, and humanly speaking,
I doubt there was a fault somewhere. Dryden.

Upon the whole, it will be necessary to avoid that perpetual repetition of the same epithets which we find in Homer. Pope.

14. In noting a particular day.

Constantia he looked upon as given away to his rival, upon the day on which their marriage was to be solemnised. Addison.

15. Noting reliance or trust.

We now may boldly spend upon the hope
Of what is to come in. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

God commands us, by our dependance upon his truth and his holy word, to believe a fact that we do not understand; and this is no more than what we do every day in the works of nature, upon the credit of men of learning. Swift.

16. Near to; noting situation.

The enemy lodged themselves at Aldermaston, and those from Newbury and Reading, in two other villages upon the river Kennet, over which they were to pass. Clarendon.

The monarchs plead prescription for hunting in one of the Duke's forests, that lies upon their frontiers. Addison.

17. In the state of.

They were entertained with the greatest magnificence that could be, upon no greater warning. Bacon.

18. On occasion of.

The earl of Cleveland, a man of signal courage, and an excellent officer upon any bold enterprise, advanced. Clarendon.

19. Noting assumption: as, he takes state upon him; he took an office upon him.

Since he acts as his servant, he takes his judicial determination upon himself, as if it were his own. Ketticworth.

20. Noting the time when an event came to pass. It is seldom applied to any denomination of time longer than a day.

In the twelfth month, on the thirtieth day. Escher.

21. Noting security.

We have borrowed money for the king's tribute, and that upon our lands and upon our vineyards. Nebemiah.

22. Noting attack.

The Philistines be upon thee, Sampson. Judges.

23. On pain of.

To such a ridiculous degree of trusting her she had brought him, that she caused him lend us word, that upon our lives we should do whatsoever she commanded us. Sidney.

24. At the time of; on occasion of.

Impartially examine the merits and conduct of the presbyterians upon these two great events, and the pretensions to favour which they challenge upon them. Swift.

25. By inference from.

Without it, all discourses of government and obedience, upon his principles, would be to no purpose. Locke.

26. Noting attention.

He presently lost the sight of what he was upon, his mind was filled with disorder and confusion. Locke.

27. Noting particular pace.

Provide ourselves of the virtuoso's saddle, which will be sure to amble, when the world is upon the hardest trot. Dryden.

28. Exactly; according to.

In goodly form comes on the enemy; And by the ground they hide, I judge the number Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand. Shakespeare.

29. By; noting the means of support.

Upon a closer inspection of these bodies, the shells are affixed to the surfaces of them in such a manner, as bodies lying on the sea-shore upon which they live. Woodward.

30. Upon is, in many of its significations, now contracted into on, especially in poetry. See ON. The meaning of this particle is very multifarious; for it is applied both to place, which seems its original signification; to time, which seems its secondary meaning; and to intellectual or corporeal operations. It always retains an intimation, more or less obscure, of some substratum, something precedent, or some subject. It is not easy to reduce it to any general idea.

UPPER. adj. [a comparative from up.]

1. Superiour in place; higher.

Give the forehead a majestic grace, the mouth smiling; which you shall do by making a thin upper lip, and shadowing the mouth line a little at the corners. Pennam.

Our knight did bear no less a pack Of his own buttocks on his back; Which now had almost got the upper Hand of his head for want of crupper. Hudib.

The understanding was then clear, and the soul's upper region lofty and serene, free from the vapours of the inferior affections. South's Sermons.

With speed to-night repair; For not the gods nor angry Jove will bear Thy lawless wand'ring walks in upper air. Dryden.

Deep as the dark infernal waters lie From the bright regions of the cheerful sky, So far the proud ascending rocks invade Heaven's upper realms, and cast a dreadful shade. Addison.

2. Higher in power or dignity.

The like corrupt and unreasonable custom prevailed far, and got the upper hand of right reason with the greatest part. Houder.

UPPERMOST. adj. [superlative from upper.]

1. Highest in place.

The waters, called the waters above the heavens, are but the clouds, and waters engendered in the uppermost air. Ralegh.

In all things follow nature, not painting cloud in the bottom of your piece, and waters in the uppermost parts. Dryden.

2. Highest in power or authority.

The lower powers are gotten uppermost, and we see, like men on our heads, as Plato observed of old, that on the right hand, which is indeed on our left. Glennville.

'Tis all one to the common people who's uppermost. L'Estrange.

This species of discretion will carry a man safe through all parties, so far, that whatever faction happens to be uppermost, his claim is allowed for a share. Swift.

3. Predominant; most powerful.

As in perfumes compos'd with art and cost, 'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost; Nor this part musk or civet can we call, Or amber, but a rich tincture of all; So she was all a sweet. Dryden.

UPPISH. adj. [from up.] Proud; arrogant. A low word.To UPRAISE. v. a. [up and raise.] To raise up; to exalt.

This would interrupt his joy In our confusion, and our joy upraise In his disturbance. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To UPREAR. v. a. [up and rear.] To rear on high.

Heaven-born charity! thy blessings shed; Bid meagre want uprear her sickly head. Gay.

UPRIGHT. adj. [up and right. This word, with its derivatives, is in prose accented on the first syllable; but in poetry seems to be accented indifferently on the first or second.]

1. Straight up; perpendicularly erect.

Comb down his hair; look! look! it stands upright. Shakespeare.

They are upright as the palm-tree. Jeremiah, x. In the morning, taking of somewhat of easy digestion, as milk, furthers nourishment: but this should be done sitting upright, that the milk may pass more speedily to the stomach. Bac. Nat. Hist.

A tree, at first setting, should not be shaken; and therefore put two little forks about the bottom of your trees, to keep them upright. Bacon's Natural History.

Circes, the daughter of the sun; whose charms Whoever tasted, lost his upright shape, And downward fell into a grovelling swine. Milton.

Forthwith upright he rears from off the pool His mighty stature. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Erected; pricked up.

The most spirit of mortal men was in The most sincere and holy women too. Dryden.

UPRIGHT. n. f. Elevation; orthography.

You have the orthography, or upright, of this ground-plan, and the explanation thereof, with a scale of feet and inches. Mason's Miscell. Exerc.

UPRIGHTLY. adv. [from upright.]

1. Perpendicularly to the horizon.

2. Honestly; without deviation from the right.

Men by nature apter to rage than dectie; not greatly ambitious, more than to be well and uprightly dealt with. Sidney.

Princes in judgment, and their delegate judges, must judge the causes of all persons uprightly and impartially, without any personal consideration. Taylor.

To live uprightly then is sure the best; To save ourselves, and not to damn the rest. Dryden.

UPRIGHTNESS. n. f. [from upright.]

1. Perpendicular erection. This was anciently accented on the second.

So the fair tree, which still preserves Her fruit and state while no wind blows, In storms from that uprightness swerves, And the glad earth about her brows With treasure from her yielding boughs. Waller.

2. Honesty; integrity.

The hypocrite bends his principles and practice to the fashion of a corrupt world; but the truly upright man is inflexible in his uprightness, and unalterable in his purpose. Atterbury.

To UPRISE. v. n. [up and rise.]

1. To rise from decumbiture.

Early, before the morn with crimson ray The windows of bright heaven opened had, Through which into the world the dawning day Might look, that maketh every creature glad, Uprose Sir Chayon. Spenser.

Thou knowest my down-sitting, and midst up-rising. Psalms cxxxix.

UPRISE. n. f. Appearance above the horizon.

Did ever raven sing so like a lark, That gives sweet tidings of the sun's uprise? Shak.

UPROAR. n. f. [uproar, Dutch. This word likewise is accented on the first syllable in prose; in verse, indifferently on either.] Tumult; bustle; disturbance; confusion.

The Jews, which believed not, set all the city on an uproar. Acts, xvii. 5.

It were well if his holiness had not set the world in an uproar, by nourishing of war. Ralegh.

He levied forces in a disordered uproar, albeit the treason rested in him and some other his complices. Hayward.

The uproar was so loud, that the accusation itself could not be heard. Holliday.

Others, with vast Typhrean rage more fell, Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the air In whirlwind: hell scarce holds the wild uproar. Milton.

Horror thus prevail'd; And wild uproar! ah, who at length will end This long pernicious fray? Shak.

The impiety of this sentiment set the audience in an uproar, and made Socrates, though an intimate friend of the poet, go out of the theatre with indignation. Adelphi.

To UPROAR. v. a. [from the above.] To throw into confusion. Not in use.

Had I power, I should Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell. Uman.

For the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
UPROOF. v. a. [up and roof.] To bear up by the root.

Orpheus could lead the savage race,
And trees uprooted left their place;
Serious of the lyres.
But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher;
When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n,
An angel swam,
And straight appear'd,
Mistaking earth for heav'n. Dryden.

UPROUSE. v. a. [up and rouse.] To waken from sleep; to excite to action.
Thou art uprous'd by some discomposure. Shakespeare.

UPSHOT. n. s. [up and shot.] Conclusion;
end; last amount; final event.

With this he kindled his ambrosious spirit
To like desire and praise of noble fame.
The only upshot whereto he doth aim. Hubb. Tale.
I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot. Shakespeare.

In this upshot, purposes full took Fell on the inventor's head. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Every leading demonstration to the main upshot of all, which in the proportion betwixt the sphere and cylinder, is a pledge of the wit and reason of that mathematician. Merr.

Upon the upshot, afflictions are but the methods of a merciful providence, to force us upon the only means of letting matters right. L'Estrange.
Here is an end of the matter, says the prophet;
here is the upshot and result of all; here terminate both the prophecies of Daniel and St. John.

Burns's Theory of the Earth.
Let's now make an end of matters peaceably, as we shall quickly come to the upshot of our affair.

At the upshot, after a life of perpetual application, to reflect that you have been doing nothing for yourself, and that the same or less industry might have gained you a friendship that can never expire or end; a glory, which, though not to be had till after death, yet shall be felt and enjoyed to eternity. Pope.

UPSIDE DOWN. [an adverbial form of speech.]

1. With the lower part above the higher.
In the day-time they fish in their boats, which they draw unto the land at night; and, turning them upside down, sleep under them. Heylin.

2. In confusion; in complete disorder.
In his lap a mass of coin he told,
And turned upside down, to feed his eye
And covetous desire with his huge treasure. Spenser.

The flood did not so turn upside down the face of the earth, as thereby it was made past knowledge, after the waters were decreased. Raleigh's History of the World.

The severe notions of Christianity turned all this upside down, filling all with surprise and amazement. They came upon the world like light darting full upon the face of a man asleep, who had a mind not to be disturbed. South.

UPSPRING. n. s. [up and spring.] This word seems to signify upstart; a man suddenly exalted. Not used.

The king doth wake to-night, and takes his route;
Keeps watch, and the swag'ring upspring reels. Shakespeare.

UPSTAND. v. n. [up and stand.] To be erected.

Sea-calves unwonted to fresh given fly;
The water snakes with scales upstanding lie. May.

UPSTART. v. n. [up and start.] To spring up suddenly.

He upstart brave
Of the well, wherein he drenched lay,
Fresh out of the ocean wave. Spenser.

Thus having taken the air, that shiver'd then,
Upstart from his couch, the king of men,
His break with fury broke. Dryden.

UPSTART. v. n. [up and start.] One suddenly raised to wealth, power, or honour; what suddenly rises and appears.

Two hundred in a place will be enough for the safeguard of this country, and keeping under all sudden upstarts, that shall seek to trouble the peace thereof. Spenser's Ireland.

My rights and royalties
Pluckt from my arms perform, and given away
To upstart unthrifs. Shakespeare.

Mushrooms have two strange properties; the one, that they yield to delicious a meat; the other, that they come up so hastily, even in a night, and yet they are unknown; and therefore such as are upstarts in state, they call in reproach mushrooms. Bacon's Natural History.

The king did not neglect Ireland, the soil where these mushrooms and upstart weeds, that spring up in a night, did chiefly prosper. Bacon.

A place of bliss
In the purloins of heav'n, and therein plac'd
A race of upstart creatures, to supply
Perhaps our vacant rooms. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Inordinate desires,
And upstart passions, catch the government
From reason. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Mean upstarts, when they come once to be preferred, forget their fathers. L'Estrange.

Trade, he said, carried from us the commodities of our country, and made a parcel of upstarts, as rich as men of the most ancient families. Addison's Frivolous.

UPSTART. v. a. [up and stay.] To sustain; to support.

Gently with myrtle bead I ministr'd the while Herself, though seized with unpolled flow'rs. Mil.

From the extreme upward of thy head
To the delicate and just below thy foot,
A most toad-spotted train. Shakespeare, King Lear.

UPWARD. adv. [up and perhaps.]

1. Towards a higher place; opposed to downward.

I thought
To smooth your passage, and to soften death;
For I would have you, when you upward move,
Speak kindly of me to our friends above. Dryden.

In stream of rain the sky descends,
And down well'd with waters upwards tends. Quincy.

Overlaid, filling once the hearth and bed
Meet at their common, in the mid-way. Dryden.

A man can, if he is an athlete, leap twenty yards downwards into the sea, not because he has power to do the contrary action, which is to leap twenty yards upward; for that he cannot do; but he is therefore free, because he has a power to leap, or not to leap. Locke.

TOWARDS HEAVEN AND GOD.
Looking upward, we are tricked dumb; looking upward, we speak and prevail. Shakespeare.

WITH RESPECT TO THE HIGHER PARTS.
Dagobert, sea-monster! upward man,
And downward fish. Milton's Paradise Lost.

MORE THAN; WITH TENDENCY TO A HIGHER OR GREATER NUMBER.
Their counsel must seem very unreasonable, who advise men now to suspect that, wherewith the world hath trad, by their own account, twelve hundred years acquaintance and upwards; enough to take away suspicion. Hobbes.

I have been your wife in this obedience
Upward of twenty years; and have been blest
With many children by your grace. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

TOWARDS THE SOURCE.
Be Homer's works your study;
Thence form your judgment, thence your notions
bring.

And trace the muses upward to their spring. Pope.

UPWARD. v. a. pret. and part. pass.
upward. [up and wind.] To convolve.

As the lay upon the dirty ground,
Her huge long tail her den all eyes spread,
Yet was in knot and many boughs upward. Spenser.

URBANITY. n. s. [urbanité, Fr. urban-itas, Lat.] Civility; elegance; politeness; merriment; facetiousness.

A rustic severity banishes all urbanity, whose harmless condition is consistent with religion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Reillery is the source of civil entertainment; and without some such tincture of artifice, good humour falters. L'Estrange.

Moral doctrine, and urbanity, or well-managed wit, constitute the Roman satire. Dryden.

URCHIN. n. s. [urchin, Armorick;
erinaceus; Lat.]

1. A hedge-hog.
Urchins shall, for that vast of night that they may work.

All exercise on thee. Shakespeare's Tempest.

A thousand fiends, a thousand lasting snakes,
Ten thousand swelling toads, as many urchins,
Would make such fearful and confused cries,
As any mortal body, hearing it,
Would straight fall mad. Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

That nature designs the preservation of the more Miserable creatures by the defensive, nature is hath given them, is demonstrable in the common hedgehog, or urchin. Roy.

2. A name of slight anger to a child.

Pleas'd a Cupid's head, and check'd his mother's side.

And who's blind now, mamma? the urchin cried.
The Child's eye, and check, and sin, and breast;
Friend Howard's genius fancied all the rest. Pope.

UR. n. s. [ur, uric, uric, uric.] Obsolete.

Is the warrant sufficient for any man's conscience to build such proceedings upon, as are and have been put in use for the establishment of that cause? Hobbes.

He would keep his habit in use with somewhat of greater value, till he was brought to justice. L'Estrange.

UPPER. n. s. [upper; arcture, Fr.]

ful* things already performed. Swift.

Next to reading, meditation, and prayer, there is nothing that so secures our hearts from foolish passions, nothing that pre-uses to holy and with a frame of mind, as some useful, humble employment of ourselves. Law.

USEFULLY. adv. [from useful.] In such a manner as to help forward some end.

In this account they must constitute two at least, male and female, in every species; which chance could not have made so very nearly alike without copying, nor so usefully differing without contrivance. Bentley's Sermons.

USEFULNESS. n. f. Conduciveness or helpfulness to some end.

The grandeur of the commonwealth shews itself chiefly in works that are necessary or convenient.
On the contrary, the magnificence of Rome, under the emperors, was rather for ostentation than any real usefulness. Addison.

USELESS. adj. [from use.] Answering no purpose; having no end.

So have I seen the lost clouds pour
Into the sea an useless shower;
And the vex'd sail as curst the rain
For which poor shepherds pray'd in vain. Waller.
The hurtful teeth of vipers are useless to us, and yet are parts of their bodies. Boyle.
His friends, on whose assistance he most relied, either prove false and forsake him, or look on with an useless pity, and cannot help him. Rogers's Sermons.

progenie. Chapman.

My lord received from the countess of Warwick, a lady powerful in the court, and indeed a virtuous user of her power, the best advice that was ever given. Watson.

USHER. n. f. [huissier, Fr.]

1. One whose business is to introduce strangers.

gers, or walk before a person of high rank.

The wife of Antony
Should have an army for an usher, and
The neighs of horse to tell her approach, Long ere she did appear. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra You make guards and ushers march before, and then enters your prince. Taylor.

Gay paid his courtship with the crowd,
As far as modest pride allow'd;
Rejects a servile usher's place,
And leaves Sir James's in disgrace. Sw. fr.

2. An under-teacher; one who introduces young scholars to higher learning.

Though grammar's profits less than rhetoric's are,

Yet even in those his usher claims a share. Dryden.
To USHER. v. a. [from the noun.] To introduce as a forerunner or harbinger; to fore-run.

No sun shall ever usher forth my honours,
Or gild again the noble troops that waited Upon my smiles. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

The sun,
Declin'd, was hast'ning now with proud career
To th' ocean isles; and, in th' ascending scale
Of heav'n, the stars, that usher evening, rose. Milton.

As the deluge is represented a disruption of the abyss, in the future combustion of the earth is to be usher'd in, and accompanied, with violent impetuous upon nature, and the chief will be earthquake. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

With songs and dance we celebrate the day,
And with due honours usher in the May. Dryden.
The Examiner was usher'd into the world by a letter, fixing forth the great genius of the author. Addison.

Oh name for ever lost, for ever dear!
Still breath'd in sighs, still usher'd with a terr. P. pr.

USQUEBAGH. n. f. [An Irish and Eric word, which signifies the water of life.] It is a compounded distilled spirit, being drawn on aromatics; and the Irish sort is particularly distinguished for its pleasant and mild flavour. The Highland sort is somewhat hotter; and, by corruption, in Scottish they call it usqueby.

Usurians god of love, twenty to three,
When with my brown my grey hairs equal be. Dome.

To USURP. v. a. [usurper, Fr. usurper, Latin.] To possess by force or intrusion; to seize or possess without right.

So ugly a darkness, as if it would prevent the night's coming, usurped the day's right. Sidney.

Not having the natural superiority of fathers, their power must be usurped, and then unlawful, or, if lawful, then granted or ceded unto by them over whom they exercise the same, or else given them extraordinarily from God. Hosker.

In as much as the due estimation of heavenly truth dependeth wholly upon the known and approved authority of those famous oracles of God, it greatly behoveth the church to have always most special care, lest human inventions usurp the room and title of divine worship. Hosker.

Victorious prince of York!
Before I see thee seated in that throne
Which now the house of Lancaster usurps,
These eyes shall never close. Shaksp. Henry VI.

What art thou, that usurp'st this time of night,
Together with that fair and warlike form? Shak.

Their fox-like thefts are so rank, as a man may find whole pages usurped from one author. Ben Jonson.

So he die,
But soon revives; death over him no power
Shall long usurp; ere the third dawning light
Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise
Out of his grave. Milton's Paradise Lost.

All fountains of the deep Broke up, shall heave the ocean to usurp
Beyond all bounds, till inundation rise Above the highest hill. Milton.

Farewell court,
Where vice not only hath usurp'd the place,
But the reward, and even the name, of virtue. Dromio.

Your care about your banks insure a fear
Of threat'ning floods and inundations near:
If so, a just requize would only be Obscur'd the land usurp'd upon the sea. Dryden.

Who next usurps will a just prince appear,
So mugging your ruin will his reign endure. Dryden.

Struggling in vain, impatient of her load,
And lab'ring underneath the pond'rous god,
The more the strove to shake him from her breast,
With more an far superbur force he press'd,
Command his entrance, and without controul,
Usurps her organs, and inspects her soul. Dryden.

Who's this, that dares usurp
The guards and habit of Numidia's prince? Addison's Cato.

USURPATION. n. f. [usurpation, Fr. usurpation, Fr. usurp.] Forcible, unjust, illegal seizure or possession.

The Peasants,
Finding his usurpation most ungodly,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne. Shak.
Succeeding kings recovery of their right from unjust usurpations, shall never be prejudiced by any act of mine. King Charles.

To raise a tempest on the sea was usurpation on the prerogative of Neptune, who had given him no leave. Dryden.

O business to support a tyrant throne,
And crush your freeborn brethren of the world!
Nay, to become a part of usurpation,
To espouse the tyrant's person and her crimes. Dryden.

Whatever opposition was made to the usurpations of king James, proceeded altogether from the church of England. Swift.

USURPER. n. f. [from usurp.] One who seizes or possesses that to which he has no right. It is generally used of one who excludes the right heir from the throne.

Even thence he hath continued his first usurped power, and now exacteth upon all men what he list: so that now to subdue or expel an usurper, should be no unjust enterprise, but a restitution of ancient right unto the crown. Spenser.

Richard Duke of York
Was rightful heir unto the English crown;
And that your majesty was an usurper. Shaksp.
But this usurper his encroachment proud Stays not on man; to God his tow'ns intends Siege and defiance. Milton.

Few usurpers to the shades descend
By a dry death, or with a quieter end. Dryden.
He gives'd the land he freed should be oppress'd,
And as less for it than usurpers do. Dryden.

USURPINGLY. adv. [from usurp.] Without just claim.

Lay ah! to the sword,
Which sways usurpingly these several titles,
And put the line into your Arthur's hand,
Thy right toy it sovereign. Shaksp. King John.

USURY. n. f. [usur, Fr. usura, Lat.] 1. Money paid for the use of money; interest.

He that high does sit, and all things see
With equal eyes, their merits to restore;
Behold, what ye this day have done for me,
And what I cannot quit, requite with usury. Spenser.

The wished day is come at last,
That shall, for all the pains and sorrows past,
Pay to her usury of long delights. Spenser.

Our angles are like money put to usury; they may thrive, though we sit still and do nothing.

Walton's Angler.

What he borrows from the ancients, he repays with usury of his own; in coin as good, and almost as universally valuable.

Dryden's Ded. to Juvenal.

2. The practice of taking interest. It is commonly used with some reproach.

Usury bringeth the treasure of a realm into few hands: for the usurer being at certainties, and others at uncertainties, at the end most of the money will be in the box.

Bacon.

UTENSIL. n. f. [utensile, Fr. utensile, low Latin.] An instrument for any use, such as the vessels of the kitchen, or tools of a trade.

Burn but his books; he has brave utensils, Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal.

Shakespeare.

Mules after these, camels and dromedaries, And waggons fraught with utensils of war. Milton.
Tithes and tithes given to God are never, and plate, vestments, and other sacred utensils, are seldom consecrated.

South.

The springs of life their former vigour feel; Such zeal he had for that vile utensil Carte's Disp.

UTERINE. adj. [uterin, Fr. uterinus, Lat.] Belonging to the womb.

In hot climates, and where the uterine parts exceed in heat, by the coldness of some simple, they may be reduced unto a conceptive constitution.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The vessels of the interior glandulous substance of the womb, are contorted with turnings and meanders, that they might accommodate themselves without danger of rupture to the necessary extension of the uterine substance.

Ray.

UTERUS. n. f. [Latin.] The womb.

UTILITY. n. f. [utilité, Fr. utilitas, Lat.] Usefulness; profit; convenience; advantageousness: applied to things only: as, this book is of great utility: not, this book was written for the utility of scholars.

Those things which have long gone together, are confederate; whereas new things piece not it well; but though they help by their utility, yet they trouble by their inconformity. Bac. Nat. Hist.

Should we blindly obey the restraints of physicians and astrologers, we should confine the utility of physic unto a very few days. Br. Vulg. Err.

M. Zulchem desired me that I would give a relation of the cure of the gout, that might be made public, as a thing which might prove of common utility to so great numbers as were subject to that mischance.

Temple.

UTIS. n. f. A word which probably is corrupted, at least is not now understood. Utis was the octave of a saint's day, and may perhaps be taken for any festivity.

Then here will be old utis: it will be an excellent stratagem.

Shakespeare's Hen. IV.

UTMOST. adj. [utmoert, Saxon; from utten.]

1. Extreme; placed at the extremity.

Much like a subtle spider, which doth sit In middle of her web, which spreadeth wide; If aught do touch the utmost thread of it, She feels it instantly on every side.

Darwin.

As far remov'd from God, and light of heav'n, As from the center thence to th' utmost pole.

Milton.

I went, by your command, To view the utmost limits of the land.

Dryden.

2. Being in the highest degree.

I'll undertake to bring him, Where he shall answer by a lawful form, In peace, to his utmost peril.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

UTMOST. n. f. The most that can be; the greatest; the highest degree; the utmost.

What miseries, Shall be the general's fault, though he perform To th' utmost of a man. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
I will be free.

Even to the utmost as I please in words. Shakespeare.
Such a confidence, as has employed the utmost of its ability to give itself the best information, and clearest knowledge of its duty, that it can, is a rational ground for a man to build such an hope upon.

South.

Try your fortune. — I have to the utmost. Dost thou think me desperate Without just cause? Dryden's All for Love.

A man, having carefully enquired into all the grounds of probability and unlikeliness, and done his utmost to inform himself in all particulars, may come to acknowledge on which side the probability rests.

Locke.

The enemy thinks of raising therefore thousand men: let us perform our utmost, and we shall overwhelm them with our multitudes.

Addison.

UTTER. adj. [utteren, Saxon.]

1. Situate on the outside, or remote from the center.

In my sight.

Through utter and through inside darkness borne, I sung of chaos and eternal night.

Milton.

2. Placed beyond any compass; out of any place.

Pursue these sons of darkness; drive them out From all heav'n's bounds into the utter deep.

Milton.

3. Extreme; excessive; utmost. This seems to be Milton's meaning here, though the former sense may serve.

Such place eternal justice had prepar'd For those rebellious; here their prison ordain'd In utter darkness; and their portion set As far remov'd from God, and light of heav'n, As from the center thence to th' utmost pole.

Milton.

4. Complete; total.

The parliament thought the utter taking it away necessary for the preservation of the kingdom.

Earth calcined flies off into the air; the ashes of burning mountains, in volcanos, will be carried to great distances.

VULGAR. adj. [vulgaire, Fr. vulgaris, Latin.]

1. Plebeian; suiting to the common people; practised among the common people.

Men who have passed all their time in low and vulgar life, cannot have a suitable idea of the several beauties and blemishes in the actions of great men.

2. Vernacular; national.

It might be more useful to the English reader, who was to be his immediate care, to write in our vulgar language.

3. Mean; low; being of the common rate.

It requiring too great a sagacity for vulgar minds to draw the line between virtue and vice, no wonder if most men attempt not a laborious scrutiny into things themselves, but only take names and words, and so rest in them.

Now wasting years my former strength confound, And added woes have bow'd me to the ground: Yet by the stubble you may guess the grain, And mark the ruins of no vulgar man.

4. Publick; commonly bruited.

Do you hear aught of a battle toward? — Most sure, and vulgar; every one hears that.

VULGAR. n. f. [vulgaire, Fr.] The common people.

I'll about; Drive away the vulgar from the streets.

Those men, and their adherents, were then looked upon by the affrighted vulgar as greater protectors of their laws and liberties than myself.

King Charles.

The most considering and wisest men in all ages and nations, have constantly differed from the vulgar in their thought.

The vulgar imagine the pretender to have been a child imposed upon the nation by the fraudulent zeal of his parents, and their bigoted counsellors.

VULGARISM. n. f. [from vulgar.] Grossness; meanness; vulgarity.

If thou art thus uxoriously inclin'd To bear thy bondage with a willing mind, Prepare thy neck.

UXORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from uxorious.] Connubial dotage; fond submission to a wife.

W.

W

W is a letter of which the form is not to be found in the alphabets of the learned languages; though it is not improbable that by our w is expressed the sound of the Roman v, and the Eolick f. Both the form and sound are excluded from the languages derived from the Latin.

W is sometimes improperly used in diphthongs as a vowel for u; wiew, strow:

the sound of w consonant, if it be a consonant, is uniform.

WABBLE. v. n. [a low barbarous word.] To move from side to side; to change direction.

If in your work you find it wabble; that is, that one side of the flat inclines to the right or left hand, with soft blows of an hammer set it to rights, and then screw it hard up.

WAD. n. f. [peob, hay, Saxon.]

W A D

1. A bundle of straw or other loose matter thrust close together.

2. Wadd, or black lead, is a mineral of great use and value.

WADDING. n. f. [from wad, wad, Islandick.] A kind of soft stuff loosely woven, with which the skirts of coats are stuffed out.

WAGGLE. v. n. [waggbelen, Dutch, to wiggle; + he, c., by a casual corruption, tion, waddle] To shake, in walking, from side to side; to deviate in motion from a right line.

W A D

She could not run and waddled all about.

The waddling petticoat smooths and levels all disfigurements; which I cannot but be troubled to see in many well-shaped, innocent virgins bloated up, and waddling up and down, like big-bellied women.

The farmer's goose,

Grown fat with corn and sitting still,
Can scarce get o'er the barn-door sill,
And hardly waddles forth to cool
Her belly in the neighbouring pool.

Swift.

Dulness, of business the directing soul,
To human heads like huts to the bowl;
Which, as more populous, makes their aim more true,

Oh! rely waddling to the mark in view. Pope.
She draws her words, and waddles in her pace;
Unwast her hands, and much behest her face.

Young.

Returning were as tedious as go o'er.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He staid seven days at the Crassus, until a bridge was made for the transporting of his army, for that the river was not to be waded over.

Kriller's History of the Turks.

Then, since fortune's favours fade,

You that in her arms do sleep,

Learn to swim, and not to wade,

For the hearts of kings are deep, Warton's Poems.

With head, hands, wings, or feet pursue his way,
And swims, or links, or wades, or creeps, or flows.

Milton.

It is hard to wade deep in baths where strings arise.

Brown.

Fowls that frequent waters, and only wade, have as well long legs as long necks; and those that are made for swimming have feet like oars.

Moor's Devere Dialogue.

2. To pass difficultly and laboriously.

They were not permitted to enter into war, nor conclude any league of peace, nor to wade through any act of moment between them and foreign states, unless the oracle of God, or his prophets, were first consulted with.

Hobbes.

I have waded through the whole cause, searching the truth by the canals of truth.

Hobbes.

Virtue gives herself light, through darkness to wade.

Spenser.

Occasions you have met with to excite your faculties to wade a little farther into the positive part of these doctrines.

Hammend.

I should chide rather with spitting and scorn to be tumbled into the dust in blood, bearing witness to any known truth of our Lord, than by a denial of those truths, through blood and perjury wade to a sceptre, and lordship in a throne.

South.

'Tis not to my purpose to wade into those bottomless controversies, which, like a gulph, have swallowed up to us the line of learned men.

Dray of Poetry.

The dame

Now tried the wade, and wading through the night,
Search'd all the deep recess, and usher'd into light.

Dryden.

Shak.

Thence wafted with a merry gale,

Sara, Leinster, and the golden vale.

Dryden.

Now dares his transport-vessel cross the waves,

With such whose bones are not compos'd in graves;

A hundred years they wander on the shore;

At length, their penance done, are wafted o'er.

Dryden.

Lend to this wretch your hand, and waft him o'er

To the sweet banks of yon forbidden shore.

From hence might first spring that opinion of the vehicles of spirits; the vulgar conceiving that the breath was that wherein the soul was wafted

and carried away.

Roy.

They before wafted over their troops into Sicily

in open vessels.

Abbot on Gains.

In vain you tell your parting lover,

You will not win him; say waft him over:

Alas! what words can happy prove,

That bear no far from what I love?

Prior.

Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,

And waft a sigh from Indus to the pole.

Pope.

2. To buoy; to make float; to hinder from sinking.

Whether cripples, who have lost their thighs, will not sink but float; their lungs being able to waft up their bodies, which are in other overpowered by the hinder legs, we have not made experiment.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. To beckon; to inform by a sign of any thing moving.

To WAFT. v. n. To float.

lifts two legs of a side, one after the other, beginning with the hind leg first;

as suppose that he leads with the legs on his right side, then he lifts his far hind foot first; and in the time that he is setting it down, which in a step is always short of the tread e his fore foot upon the same side, he lifts his far fore foot, and sets it down before his near foot, and just as he lifts up his near hind foot, and sets it down again just short of his near fore foot, and just as he is setting it down, he lifts his near fore foot, and sets it down just before his far forefoot. Farrner's Dict.

and a cat in his tail. Heylyn.

WANTON. adj. [This word is derived by Minsheu from want one, a man or woman that wants a companion. This etymology, however odd, Juvius silently adopts. Skinner, who had more acuteness, cannot forbear to doubt it, but offers nothing better.]

1. Lascivious; libidinous; lecherous; lustful.

Thou art shew'd by nature, enemy to peace,

This makes the waped widow wed again. Shakespeare.

WAPENTAKE. n. f. [from poepun, Sax. and take; wapentakum, wapentagium, low Latin.]

Wapentake is all one with what we call a hundred; as, upon a meeting for that purpose, they touched each other's weapons, in token of their fidelity and allegiance. Cowley.

Hundred signifieth a hundred pledges, which were under the command and assurance of their alderman; which, as I suppose, was also called a wapentake; so named, of touching the weapon or spear of their alderman, and swearing to follow him faithfully, and serve their prince truly. But others think that a wapentake was ten hundreds, or boroughs. Spenser.

WAR. n. f. [uerre, old Dutch; guerre, French.]

1. War may be defined the exercise of violence under sovereign command against withstanders; force, authority, and resistance, being the essential parts thereof. Violence, limited by authority, is sufficiently distinguished from robbery, and the like outrages; yet, consisting in relation towards others, it necessarily requires a supposition of resistance, whereby the force of war becomes different from the violence inflicted upon slaves or yielding malefactors. Raleigh.

On, you noblest English,
Whose blood is fecht from sinners of war proof. Shakespeare.

After a denunciation or indiction of war, the war is no more confined to the place of the quarrel, but left at large. Bacon.

I saw the figure and armour of him that headed the peasants in the war upon Bern, with the several weapons found on his followers. Addison.

The instruments of war, in poetical language.

WAR

High airs attemper'd to the vocal strings;
Whilst warbling to the varied strain advance
Two sprightly youths to form the bounding dance. Pope.

WARBLER. n. f. [from warble.] A singer; a songster.

Hark! on every bough,
In lulling strains, the feather'd warblers woo. Tickell.

WARD. A syllable much used as an affix in composition, as heavenward, with tendency to heaven; hitherward, this way; from pearb, Saxon: it notes tendency to or from.

Before she could come to the harbour, the law walking from her ward a man in shepherdish apparel. Sidney.

TO WARD. v. a. [peapbrian, Sax. waren, Dutch; garder, French.]

1. To guard; to watch.

He marched forth towards the castle wall,
Whose gates he found fast shut; no living wight
To ward the fame, nor answer comers' call. Spenser.

2. To defend; to protect.

Tell him it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers, bid him bury it. Shakespeare.

3. To fence off; to obstruct or turn aside any thing mischievous. It is now used with off, less elegantly.

Not once the baron list his armed hand
To strike the maid, but gazing on her eyes,
Where loudly Cupid seem'd in arms to stand,
No way to ward or shun her blows he tries. Faulstich.
Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again. Daniel.

Their steadfast bonds did mightily maintain. Spenser.

3. Guard made by a weapon in fencing.

Thou know'st my old ward; here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick, Shakespeare's Tempest.

Now by proof it shall appear
Whether thy horns are sharper, or my spear.
At this I throw; for want of other ward,
He lifted up his hand his front to guard. Dryden.

4. Fortrefs; strong hold.

She dwells securely on the excellency of her honour. Now could I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her from the ward of her purity, her reputation, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

5. [warda, law Latin.] District of a town.

Throughout the trembling city plac'd a guard,
Dealing an equal share to every ward. Dryden.

6. Custody; confinement.

That wretched creature, being apprehended in that impiety, was held in ward. Hooker.
Stopt there was his too vehement speech with speed,
And he sent close to ward from where he stood. Daniel.

7. The part of a lock, which, corresponding to the proper key, hinders any other from opening it.

In the key hole turns
Th' intricate wards, and every bolt and bar. Milt.
As there are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in the making and contriving their wards, or guards. Maxon's Mechanical Exercises.

8. One in the hands of a guardian.

The king causeth bring up his wards, but bestoweth no more of their rents upon them than is useful. Drummond.

You know our father's ward,
The fair Momiia: is your heart at peace?
Is it so guarded that you could not love her? Orav.
Thy Violante's heart was ever thine,
Compell'd to wed before she was my ward. Dryd.
When, stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defy'd the ward. Dryd.
Titles of honour, and privileges, the rich and the great can never deserve, unless they employ them for the protection of these, the true wards and children of God. Spurr.

The third had of their wardrobe custody,
In which were not rich tires nor garments gay,
The plumes of pride, and wings of vanity,
But cloaths meet to keep keen cold away. Spenser.

I will kill all his coats,
I'll murder all his wardrobe piece by piece,
Until I meet the king. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Behold,
What from his wardrobe her belov'd allows,
To deck the wedding-day of his unspotted spouse. Dryden.

It would not be an impertinent design to make a kind of an old Roman wardrobe, where you should see togas and tunics, the clamys and trabes, and all the different vests and ornaments so often mentioned in the Greek and Roman authors. Addison.

WARDSHIP. n. f. [from ward.]

1. Guardianship.
By reason of the tenures in chief revived, the sums for respect of homage be encased, and the profits of wardships cannot but be much advanced. Bacon.

a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot. Bacon's Natural History.

His vital virtues infused, and vital warmth, Throughout the fluid mass. Milton.

Here kindly warmth their mounting juice fetters. Milton.

To nobler tastes, and more exalted terms. Addison.

2. Zeal; passion; fervour of mind.

What warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are a'round you? Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Our duties towards God and man we should perform with that unfeigned integrity which belongs to christian piety; with that temper and sobriety which becomes christian prudence and charity; with that warmth and affection which agrees with christian zeal. Spratt's Sermons.

Your opinion, that it is entirely to be neglected, would have been my own, had it been my own case; but I felt more warmth here than I did when first I saw his book against myself. Pope.

The best patriots, by seeing with what warmth and zeal the smallest corruptions are defended, have been warned into silence. Davenant.

3. Fancifulness; enthusiasm.

The same warmth of head disposes men to both. Temple.

TO WARN. v. a. [peapman, Saxon; warnen, Dutch; varna, Swedish; varna, Islandick.]

1. To caution against any fault or danger; to give previous notice of ill.

What dost thou warn me for my gentle countenance? And sooth the devil that I warn thee from? Shakespeare.

The hand can hardly lift up itself high enough to strike, but it must be seen, so that it warns while it threatens; but a false insidious tongue may whisper a lie so close and low, that though you have ears to hear, yet you shall not hear. South.

Juturna warns the Daunian chief

Of Luulus' danger, urging swift relief. Dryden.

He had chidden the rebellious winds for obeying the command of their usurping master; he had warned them from the seas; he had beaten down the billows. Dryden.

If we consider the mistakes in men's disputes and notions, how great a part is owing to words, and their uncertain or mistaken significations, this we are the more carefully to be warned of, because the art of improving it have been made the business of men's study. Locke.

The father, whilst he warn'd his erring son,

The sad examples which he ought to shun

Describ'd. Prior.

When first young Marq sung of kings and wars,

Ere warning Phœbus could his trembling ears,

Perhaps he seem'd above the critics law,

And but from nature's fountains seem'd to draw. Pope.

2. To admonish of any duty to be performed, or practice or place to be avoided or forsaken.

Cornelius was warned from God, by an holy angel, to send for thee. Acts, x. 22.

3. To inform previously of good or bad.

He wonders to what end you have assembled

Such troops of citizens to come to him,

His grace not being warn'd thereof before. Shakespeare.

He charged the soldiers, with preventing care,

Their flags to follow, and their arms prepare,

Warn'd of the ensuing fight, and bade 'em hope the war. Dryden's Æneid.

Many who know not hearts, should make examples,

Which like a warning-piece must be shot off,

To fright the rest from crimes. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

4. Milton puts no preposition before the thing.

Our first parents had been warn'd

The coming of their secret foe, and 'scap'd

His mortal snare. Milton's Paradise Lost.

WARNING. n. f. [from warn.]

1. Caution against faults or dangers; previous notice of ill.

I will thank the Lord for giving me warning in the night.
He, groaning from the bottom of his breast,
This warning in these mournful words expresseth.

Dryden.
Here wretched Phlegias warns the world with cries,
Could warning make the world more just or wise.

Dryden.
You have fairer warning than others who are unexpectedly cut off, and so have a better opportunity, as well as greater engagements, to provide for your latter end.

Wicks.
A true and plain relation of my misfortunes may be of use and warning to credulous maids, never to put too much trust in deceitful men.

Swift's Story of the Injured Lady.
2. Previous notice: in a sense indifferently.

Suppose he have a more leisurely death, that some disease give him warning of its approach, yet perhaps he will not understand that warning, but will still flatter himself, as very often sick people do, with hopes of life to the last.

Duty of Man.
Death called up an old man, and bade him come; the man excused himself, that it was a great journey to take upon so short a warning.

L'Estrange.
I saw, with some disdain, more nonsense than either I, or as bad a poet, could have crammed into it at a month's warning, in which time it was wholly written.

Dryden.
WARP. n. f. [pearp, Saxon; werp, Dutch.]
That order of thread in a thing woven that crosses the woof.

The placing of the tangle-parts in length or transverse, as it is in the woof and the woof of texture, more inward or more outward.

Doan's Natural History.
To WARP. v. n. [pearp, Saxon; werpen, Dutch, to throw; whence we sometimes say, the work casts.]

1. To change from the true situation by intestine motion; to change the position of one part to another.

This fellow will but join you together as they join waifcoat, then one of you will prove a shank panel, and, like green timber, warp.

Dryden.
This we should do as directly as may be, with as little warping and declension towards the creature as is possible.

Norris.
3. To turn. I know not well the meaning here.

The potent rod
Of Amrah's son, in Egypt's evil day
Wav'd round the coast, up call'd a pithy cloud
Of locusts, warping on the eastern wind,
That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung Like night.

Milton's Paradise Lost.
To WARP. v. a.

1. To contract; to shrivel.

2. To turn aside from the true direction.
This first avow'd, nor folly warp'd my mind;
Nor the frail texture of the female kind Betray'd my virtue.

Dryden.
Not foreign or domestic treachery
Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree.

Dryd.
A great argument of the goodness of his cause, which required in its defender zeal, to a degree of warmth able to warp the sacred rule of the word of God.

Locke.
I have no private considerations to warp me in this controversy, since my first entering upon it.

Addison.

Not warp'd by passion, aw'd by rumour,
Nor grave through pride, or gay through folly;
An equal mixture of good-humour,
And sensible soft melancholy.

Swift.
A constant watchfulness against all those prejudices that might warp the judgment aside from truth.

Watts.
Aristotle's moral, rhetorical, and political writings, in which his excellent judgment is very little warp'd by logical subtleties, are far the most useful part of his philosophy.

Beattie.
3. It is us'd by Shakespeare to express the effect of frost.

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky!
Thou dost not bite so high
As hermits forget:
Though thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp
As friends remember'd not.

Shakespeare's As you like it.
To WA'RRANT. v. n. [garantir, Fr.]

1. Vigilance; heed; suspicious attention; cautious regard; diligent observation.
The experience of our own frailties, and the consideration of the watchfulness of the tempter, discourage us. Hammond.
Love, fantastick power! that is afraid
To stir abroad till watchfulness be laid,
Undaunted then o'er cliffs and valleys strays,
And leads his vot'ries safe through pathless ways. Prior.
Husbands are counsel'd not to trust too much

- to their wives owing the doctrine of unlimited conjugal fidelity, and so to neglect a due watchfulness over their manners. Arbutnot.
Prejudices are cured by a constant jealousy and watchfulness over our passions, that they may never interpose when we are called to pass a judgment. Watts.
By a solicitous watchfulness about one's behaviour, instead of being mended, it will be constrained. Locke.
2. Inability to sleep.
Watchfulness, sometimes called a coma vigil, often precedes too great sleepiness. Arbutnot on Diet.
- WATCHHOUSE. n. s. [watch and house.] Place where the watch is set.
Where statues breath'd, the works of Phidias' hands,
A wooden pump or lonely watchhouse stands. Cay.
- WATCHING. n. s. [from watch.] Inability to sleep.
A bullet, not having been extracted, occasioned great pain and watchings. Wise's Surgery.
- WATCHMAKER. n. s. [watch and maker.] One whose trade is to make watches, or pocket clocks.
Smithing comprehends all trades which use forge or file, from the anchorsmith to the watch-maker; they all using the same tools, though of several sizes. Mason.
- WATCHMAN. n. s. [watch and man.] Guard; sentinel; one set to keep ward.
On the top of all I do espy
The watchman waiting, tydings glad to hear. Fairy Queen.
Turn him into London streets, that the watchmen might carry him before a justice. Bacon.
Drunkness calls off the watchmen from their towers; and then all evils that proceed from a loose heart, an untied tongue, and a dissolute spirit, we put upon its account. Taylor.
Our watchmen from the tow'rs, with longing eyes, Expect his swift arrival. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
The melancholy tone of a watchman at midnight. Swift.
- WATCHTOWER. n. s. [watch and tower.] Tower on which a sentinel was placed for the sake of prospect.
In the day-time the sitteth in a watchtower, and sleeth most by night. Bacon.
Up unto the watchtower get,
And see all things despoil'd of fallacies. Donne.
To hear the lark begin his flight,
And singing startle the dull night
From his watchtower in the skies, Till the dappled dawn doth rise. Milton.
The senses in the head, as sentinels in a watchtower, convey to the soul the impressions of external objects. Ray.
- WATCHWORD. n. s. [watch and word.] The word given to the sentinels to know their friends.
All have their ears upright, waiting when the watchword shall come, that they should all arise into rebellion. Spenser.
We have heard the chimes at midnight, Master Shallow.—
That we have, sir John: our watchword, hem! boys. Shaksp.
A watchword every minute of the night goeth about the walls, to testify their vigilancy. Gandy.
- WATER. n. s. [waster, Dutch; potter, Saxon.]
1. Sir Isaac Newton defines water, when pure, to be a very fluid salt, volatile, and void of all flavour or taste; and it seems to consist of small, smooth, hard, porous, spherical particles, of equal diameters, and of equal specific gravities, as Dr. Cheyne observes; and also that there are between them spaces so large, and ranged in such a manner, as to be pervious pervious on all sides. Their impothness accounts for their sliding easily over one another's surfaces; their phorcity keeps them also from touching one another in more points than one; and by both these their friction in sliding over one another is rendered the least possible. Their hardness accounts for the incompressibility of water, when it is free from the intermixture of air. The porosity of water is so very great, that there is at least forty times as much space as matter in it; for water is nineteen times specifically lighter than gold, and consequently rarer in the same proportion.

Quinty.

My mildness hath allay'd their swelling galls,
My mercy dry'd their water-flowing tears.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Your water is a safe decayer of your whorl dead body.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

The sweet manner of it forc'd
Those waters from me, which I would have stopp'd,
But I had not so much of man in me;

But all my mother came into mine eyes,
And gave me up to tears.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

Men's evil manners live in brass, their virtues
We write in water.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Those healths will make thee and thy suite look ill, Timon: here's that which is too weak to be a sinner, honest water, which ne'er left man i' ch' mire.

Water is the chief ingredient in all the animal fluids and solids; for a dry bone, distilled, affords a great quantity of insipid water; therefore water seems to be proper drink for every animal.

Arbutnot in Aliments.

2. The sea.

Travel by land or by water. Common Prayer.
By water they found the sea, westward from Peru, always very calm.

Abbot's Description of the World.

3. Urine.

If thou couldst, doctor, cast
The water of my land, find her disease,
And purge it to a sound and pristine health,
I would applaud thee.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Go to bed, after you have made water. Swift.

4. To hold WATER. To be sound; to be tight. From a vessel that will not leak.

A good Christian and an honest man must be all of a piece, and inequalities of proceeding will never hold water.

L'Estrange.

5. It is used for the lustre of a diamond.

'Tis a good form,
And rich: here is a water, look ye!

Shakespeare's Timon.

6. WATER is much used in composition for things made with water, being in water, or growing in water.

She might see the same water-spaniel, which before had hunted, come and fetch away one of Philoclea's gloves, whose fine proportion shewed well what a dainty guest was wont there to be lodged.

Sidney.

Oh that I were a mockery king of snow,
Standing before the sun of Bullingbrooke,
And melt myself away in water-drops.

Shakespeare's Poor Tom eats the wall-nut, and the water-nut.

Touch me with nothing
O let not women's weapons, water-drops,
Stain my man's cheeks.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Let not the water-flood overflow me.

Psalm lxxx. 15.

They shall spring up as among the grass, as willows
by the water-courses.

Isaiah, xlv. 4.

As the hawk paneth after the water-brook, to panteth my soul after thee, O God.

Psalm.

Deep calleth unto deep, at the noise of thy waterspouts.

Psalm xlii. 7.

He turneth rivers into a wilderness, and the water-springs into dry ground.

Psalm cxxx.

There were set six water-pots.

John vi. 6.

Hercules's page, Hyllas, went with a water-pot to fill it at a pleasant fountain that was near.

Bacon's Natural History.

As the carp is accounted the water-fox for his cunning, so the roach is accounted the water-sheep.

Walton's Angler.

Sea-calves unwonted to fresh rivers fly;
The water-shakes with scales upstanding die.

May's Virgil.

By making the water-wheels larger, the motion will be so slow, that the screw will not be able to supply the outward stream.

Wilkins's Dredging.

Rain carried away apples, together with a dung-hill that lay in the water-courts.

L'Estrange.

Oh help, in this extremest need,
If water-gods are deities indeed.

Dryden.

Because the outermost coat of the eye might be pricked, and this humor let out, therefore nature hath made provision to repair it by the help of certain water-pipes, or lymphic ducts, inserted into the bulb of the eye, proceeding from glandules that separate this water from the blood.

Ray.

The lacerta aquatica, or water-newt, when young, hath four neat ramified fins, two on one side, growing out a little above its forelegs, to poise and keep its body upright, which fall off when the legs are grown.

Darb. Physico-Theology.

Other mortar, used in making water-couries, cisterns, and fountains, is very hard and durable.

Monsieur.

The most brittle water-carriage was used among the Egyptians, who, as Strabo saith, would fall sometimes in boats made of earthen ware.

Arbut.

A gentleman watered faintfol in dry weather at new fowing, and, when it came up, with a water-cart, carrying his water in a cask, to which there was a tap at the end, which lets the water run into a long trough full of small holes.

Mortimer.

In Hampshire they sell water-trefoil as dear as hops.

Mortimer.

To WATER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To irrigate; to supply with moisture.
A river went out of Eden to water the garden.

Gen. ii. 10.

A man's nature runs to herbs or weeds; therefore let him seasonably water the one, and destroy the other.

Bacon.

Chaste moral writing we may learn from hence,
Neglect of which no wit can recompense;
The fountain which from Helicon proceeds,
That sacred stream, should never water weeds.

Wallen.

Could tears water the lovely plant, so as to make it grow again after once 'tis cut down, your friends would be so far from accusing your passion, that they would encourage it, and spare it.

Temple.

You may water the lower land when you will.

Mortimer.

2. To supply with water for drink.

Now can the golden Phobus for to keep His fiery face in billows of the west,
And his faint steeds water'd in ocean deep,
Whilst from their journal labours they did rest.

Spenser.

Dads not each on the sabbath loose his ox from the stall, and lead him away to watering.

Lucret. xii. 15.

His horsemen kept them in so strict, that no man could, without great danger, go to water his horse.

Khalles.

Water him and, drinking what he can,
Encourag'd him to thirst again with bran.

Dryden.

3. To furnish or accommodate with streams.

Monsieur de Montaigne, in his description of Italy to the Pope, saith, that in an incredible variety of rivers, the water is so sweet.

Addison as Italy.

4. To diversify as with waves.

The different ranging the superficial parts of velvet and scarlet silk, does the like.

Locke.

To WATER. v. n.

1. To shed moisture.

I stain'd this napkin with the blood
That valiant Clifford with his rapier's point
Made issue from the bosom of the boy;
And if thine eyes can water for his death,
I give thee this to dry thy cheeks withal.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Mine eyes,
Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine,
Began to water.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

The tickling of the nostrils within, doth draw the moisture to the nostrils, and to the eyes by consent; for they also will water.

Bacon's Natural History.

How troublesome is the least mote, or dust, falling into the eye! and how quickly does it weep and water upon the least grievance!

Saur's Sense.

2. To get or take in water; to be used in supplying water.

He set the dogs he had piled before the stocks in the gutters in the watering troughs.

Gen. xxii. 13.

Mahomet sent many small boats, manned with harquebusiers and small pinnaces, into the lake near unto the camp, to keep the Christians from watering there.

Kant.

3. The mouth WATERS. The man longs;
there is a vehement desire. From dogs who drop their flaver when they see meat which they cannot get.

Cardinal Wolsey's teeth watering at the bishop-rick of Winchester, sent one unto bishop Fox, who had advanced him, for to move him to resign the bishoprick, because extreme age had made him blind; which Fox did take in so ill part, that he willed the messenger to tell the cardinal, that, although I am blind, I have espied his malicious unthankfulness.

Canden.

These reasons made his mouth to water
With amorous longings to be at her.

Hudibras.

Those who contend for a per cent. have set men's mouths watering for money at that rate.

Locke.

WATERCOLOURS. n. s. [water and colour.]

Painters make colours into a soft consistence with water or oil; those they call watercolours, and these they term oilcolours.

Boyle on Colours.

Left should I dawb it o'er with transitory pride,
And watercolours of these days;

These days! where e'en th' extravagance of poetry
Is at a loss for figures to express
Men's folly, whimsies, and inconstancy.

Swift.

The nymphs of floods are made very beautiful upon their heads are garlands of water-lilies.

Peacham on Drawing.

WATERER. n. s. [from water.] One who waters.

The ill-weed, rather cut off by the ground than plucked up by the root, twice or thrice grew forth again; but yet, mauge the warmers and waterers, hath been ever parched up.

Curry.

WATERFALL. n. s. [water and fall.] Cataract; cascade.

I have seen in the Indies far greater waterfalls than those of Nikus.

Raleigh.

Not Lacedaemon charms me more Than high Albana's airy walls,
Resounding with her water-fall.

Addison.

WATERFLAG. n. s. [from water and flag; iris aquaticus, Latin.] Water flower-de-luce.

WATERFOWL. n. s. Fowl that live or get their food in water.

It is most joy most in that air which is likest water.

Bacon.

Waterfowl supply the weariness of a long flight by taking water, and numbers of them are found in islands, and in the main ocean.

Hall's Origin of Animals.

Fish and waterfowl, who feed of mud and muddy stony water, are accounted the cause of plagues.

Flyer.

WATERGRUEL. n. f. [water and gruel.]
Food made with oatmeal boiled in water.
For breakfast milk, milk-pottage, watergruel, and dummary, are very fit to make for children.

Locke.
The aliment ought to be slender, as watergruel acidulated.

WATERHEN. n. f. [from water and hen;
fulica, Latin.] A coot; a waterfowl.

WATERINESS. n. f. [from watery.] Humidity; moisture.

The forerunners of an apoplexy are dulness, night-mares, weakness, wateriness, and turgidity of the eyes.

WATERISH. adj. [from water.]

1. Resembling water.

Where the principles are only phlegm, what can be expected from the waterish matter, but an insipid manhood, and a stupid old infancy? Dryd.

Moist; boggy.

Some parts of the earth grow moorish or wa-terish, others dry.

WATERISHNESS. n. f. [from waterish.]
Thinness; resemblance of water.

A pendulous limbliness answers a pituitous state, or an acerbity, which resembles the tartar of our humours; or waterishness, which is like the ferocity of our blood.

WATERLEAF. n. f. A plant.

WATERLILLY. n. f. [sympnea, Latin.]
A plant.

Let them lie dry twelve months to kill the water-weeds, as waterlilies and bull-rushes.

WATERMAN. n. f. [water and man.] A ferryman; a boatman.

Having blocked up the passages to Greenwich, they ordered the watermen to let fall their oars more gently.

Bubbles of air working upward from the very bottom of the lake, the watermen told us that they are observed always to rise in the same places.

The waterman forlorn, along the shore,
Pensive reclines upon his useless oar.

WATERMARK. n. f. [water and mark.]
The utmost limit of the rise of the flood.

Men and beasts
Were borne above the tops of trees that grow
On th' utmost margin of the watermark.

WATERMELON. n. f. A plant. It hath trailing branches, as the cucumber or melon, and is distinguished from other cucurbitaceous plants, by its leaf deeply cut and jagged, and by its producing uneatable fruit.

WATERMILL. n. f. Mill turned by water.
Forth flowed fresh

A gushing river of black gory blood,
That drowned all the land whereon he stood:
The stream thereof would drive a watermill.
Corn ground by windmills, erected on hills, or in the plains where the watermills flood.

WATERMINT. n. f. [mentha aquatica.]
A plant.

WATERPISM. n. f. A species of watercresses, which see.

WATERRAT. n. f. [mus aquaticus.] A rat that makes holes in banks.

There be land-rats and water-rats.
The pike is bold, and lies near the top of the water, watching the motion of any frog, or water-rat, or mouse.

WATERPOCKET. n. f. [crucis aquaticae.]
A species of watercresses.

WATERVIOLET. n. f. [hastaria, Latin.]
A plant.

WATERWINDMILL. n. f. A sort of stone.
It is the occidental sapphirine, and is neither as blue, nor so hard, as the oriental.

WATERWILLOW. n. f. [from water and willow; lysimachia, Latin.] A plant.

WATERWITH. n. f. [water and with.]
A plant.

The waterwith of Jamaica, growing on dry hills in the woods, where no water is to be met with, its trunk, if cut into pieces two or three yards long, and held by either end to the mouth, affords so plentifully a limpid, innocent, and refreshing water, or sap, as gives new life to the drowsy traveller or hunter.

WATERWORK. n. f. [water and work.] Play of fountains; artificial spouts of water; any hydraulick performance.

Engines invented for mines and waterworks
often fail in the performance.

The French took from the Italians the first plans of their gardens, as well as waterworks.

WATERY. adj. [from water.]

1. Thin; liquid; like water.

Quicksilver, which is a most crude and watery body, heated, and pent in, with the like force with gunpowder.

The bile, by its saponaceous quality, mixeth
the oily and watery parts of the aliment together.

2. Tasteless; insipid; vapid; spiritless.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross, watery pumption.

No heterogeneous mixture use, as some
With wat'ry turneps have debas'd their wines.

3. Wet; abounding with water.

When the big lip, and wat'ry eye,
Tell me the rising storm is nigh;
'Tis then thou art yon angry main,
Deform'd by winds, and dash'd by rain.

4. Relating to the water.

On the brims her fire, the wat'ry god,
Roll'd from a siver, ora his crystal flood.

5. Consisting of water.

The wat'ry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia.

Those few escap'd
Famine and anguish will at last consume,
Wand'ring that wat'ry desert.

Between us and you wide oceans flow,
And wat'ry deserts.

That the attract'd wat'ry vapours rise
From lakes and seas, and fill the lower skies.

WATTLE. n. f. [from waghelen, to shake, German. Skinner.]

1. The barbs, or loose red flesh, that hangs below the cock's bill.

The loach is of the shape of an eel, and has a beard of wattles like a barbel.

The barbel is so called, by reason of his barb, or wattle, at his mouth, which is under his nose or chops.

The cock's comb and wattles are an ornament becoming his martial spirit.

2. A hurdle.

To WATTLE. v. a. [from wattle, Saxons,
wagis.] To bind with wattle, to form by plaiting twigs one within another.

The folded flock's penn'd in their watted cotes,
Or found of pastoral reed with oaten flags.

A plough was found in a very deep bog, and a hedge watted standing.

WAVE. n. f. [page, Saxons; wagab, Dut.
wague, French.]

1. Water raised above the level of the surface; billow; water driven into inequalities.

The shore, that o'er his wave-worn basis bow'd.
The waves that rise would drown the highest hill;
But at thy check they flee, and when they hear Thy thundering voice, they posit to do thy will.

Amongst these coils succeeds the balmy night;
Now hissing waters the quench'd guns reflare;
And wat'ry waves withdrawing from the sight,
Are lul'd, and pant upon the silent shore.

The wave behind impels the wave before.
Luxuriant on the wave-worn bank he lay Stretch'd forth, and panting in the sunny ray.

2. Unevenness; inequality.

Thus it happens, if the glass of the pisons be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plane and well polished, without those numberless waves, or curls, which usually arise from sand-holes a little smoothen'd in polishing with pumice.

To WAVE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To play loosely; to float.

Your warlike ensigns waving in the wind.
He laces on, and wears the waving crest.

2. To be moved as a signal.

A bloody arm it is, that holds a pine Lighted above the capitol, and now
It waves unto us.

3. To be in an unsettled state; to fluctuate; to waver.

They wave in and out, no way sufficiently grounded, no way resolved, what to think, speak, or write, more than only that, because they have taken it upon them, they must be opposite.

If he did not care whether he had their love or no, he waved indifferently betwixt doing them neither good nor harm.

To WAVE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To raise into inequalities of surface.

He had a thousand noses,
Horns well'd and wav'd like the enridged sea.

2. To move loosely.

They wav'd their fiery swords, and in the air
Made horrid circles.

High o'er his head,
He beckoned to me, and, by the waving of his hand, directed me to approach the place where he sat.

3. To waft; to remove any thing floating.

Some men never conceive how the motion of the earth below should wave one from a knook perpendicularly directed from a body in the air above.

4. To beckon; to direct by a waft or motion of any thing.

Look with what courteous action
It waves you to a more removed ground.

5. [gufer, Fr. Skinner.] To put off;
to quit; to depart from.

He resolved not to wave his way upon this reason, that if he should but once, by such a diversion, make his enemy believe he were afraid of danger, he should never live without.

6. To put aside for the present.

I have waved the subject of your greatness, to reign myself to the contemplation of what is more peculiarly yours.

Since she has interest for the nation's wav'd,
Then I, who say'd the king, the action say'd.

7. To put aside for the present.

Thy wav'd plot, found out a better way;
Some god defended, and prefer'd the play.

8. To put aside for the present.

I have waved the subject of your greatness, to reign myself to the contemplation of what is more peculiarly yours.

Since she has interest for the nation's wav'd,
Then I, who say'd the king, the action say'd.

9. To put aside for the present.

If any had a better sight, they were content to own it, and recognise the sight of the other.

WAVER. v. n. [patian. Saxon.]
To play to and fro; so move loosely.

I took two triangular glasses, and one of them being kept fixt in the same posture, that the iris projected on the floor might not waver, I cast on the same floor another iris, with another prism, moving it to and fro.

The whitening shower descends,
At first thin wavering.

To be unsettled; to be uncertain or inconstant; to fluctuate; not to be determined.

In which amazement when the miscreant
Perceived him to waver, weak and frail,
Whilst trembling horror did his conscience daunt,
And hellish anguish did his soul assail.

Remember where we are;
In France, among a fickle, wavering nation.

Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunks of men.

Hold fast the faith without wavering.
The wavering faith of people vain and light.

Faith as absolutely determines our minds, and as perfectly, excludes all wavering, as our knowledge itself; and we may as well doubt of our own being, as we can whether any revelation from God be true.

What if Hospinian should have said, that Luther wavered in the point of the sacrament? does it follow that he really did so?

They, who at this distance from the first rise of the gospel, after weighing the several evidences of it, waver in their faith, would have wavered though they had seen the first promulgers work wonders.

3. To totter; to be in danger of falling.

Has any disloyalty dared to feign that religion wavers? They foully mistake; as commonly they do, that are more cunning in other men's lives than in their own: 'tis not religion wavers, but their loyalty.

WAVY. n. s. [from waver.] One unsettled and irresolute.

Come, young waverer, come, and go with me;
In one respect I'll thy assistant be.

WAVY. adj. [from waver.]

Rising in waves.

In safe conduct of these Did thirtie hollow-bottom'd barks divide the waves sea.

For thee the ocean smiles, and smooths her wavy break;

And heav'n itself with more serene and purer light is blest.

2. Playing to and fro, as in undulations.

Where full-ear'd sheaves of rye Grow wavy on the tilth, that soil select For apples.

Let her glad vallies smile with wavy corn;
Let fleecy flocks her rising hills adorn.

WAVES, or WAES. n. s. A word used by Spenser, according to the Saxon pronunciation.

3. For waves.

Another did the dying brands repair
With iron tongs, and sprinkled oft the same
With liquid waves.

2. In the following passage it seems to be for waves. [pa. Saxon.]

Whilst they fly that gulf's devouring jaws,
They on this rock are rent, and sunk in waves.

We wawl and cry.

Shakespeare's King Lear

WAX. n. s. [pure, Saxon; wax, Danish;
wacker, Dutch.]

1. The thick tenacious matter gathered by the bee, and formed into cells for the reception of the honey.

Wax consists of an acid spirit of a nauseous taste, and an oil, or butter, which is emollient, laxative, and anodyne.

They gave us food which may with nectar vie;
And wax, that does the absent sun supply.

All the magistrates, every new or full moon, give honour to Confucius with bowings, wax candles, and incense.

While wax shall be paid on solemn days,
When numerous wax lights in bright order blaze;
So long my honour, name, and praise shall live.

2. Any tenacious mass, such as is used to fasten letters.

We soften the wax before we set on the seal.

3. A kind of concretion in the flesh.

A fontanel in her neck was much inflamed, and many wax kernels about it.

To WAX. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear; to join with wax.

He form'd the reeds, proportion'd as they are,
Unequal in their length, and wax'd with care;
They still retain the name of his ungrateful fair.

To WAX. v. n. pret. wax, waxed; part.
pass. waxed, waxen; [peaxan, Saxon;
wachsen, German.]

1. To grow; to increase; to become bigger, or more. Used of the moon, in opposition to wane, and figuratively of things which grow by turns bigger and less.

The husbandman in sowing and setting, upon good reason, observes the waxing and waning of the moon.

They wax and wane
'Twixt thrift and penury.

2. To pass into any state; to become; to grow. It is in either sense now almost disused.

Where things have been instituted, which, being convenient and good at the first, do afterward in process of time wax otherwise, we make no doubt but they may be altered, yes, though councils or customs general have received them.

Careless the man soon wax, and his wit weak
Was overcome of things that did him please.

Art thou like the adder waxen deaf? Shakspeare
We will destroy this place; because the cry of them is waxen great before the Lord. Gen. xix. 13.

Flowers removed wax greater, because the nourishment is more easily come by in the loose earth.

This answer given, Argantes wild drew near,
Trembling for ice, and waxing pale for rage;
Nor could he hold.

If I wax but cold in my desire,
Think heav'n hath motion lost, and the world fire.

Their manners wax more and more corrupt,
in proportion as their blessings abound.

WAXCHANDLER. n. s. [from wax and chandler.] A maker of wax candles.

WAXEN. adj. [from wax.] Made of wax.

Swarming next appear'd
The female bee, that feeds her husband drone Deliciously, and builds her waxen cells,
With honey store'd.

I can yet shoot beams, who's heart can melt
The waxen wings of this ambitious boy.

So waxy bees in little cells typ'd;
But if night robbers lift the veil, but d'nt hire.

An humming through their waxen city grows,
And out upon each other wings they drive.

WAY. n. s. [pat; Saxon; weg, Dutch.]

1. The road in which one travels. This word is applied in many relations which seem unlike one another, but have all the original of road or travel, noting either progression, or the mode of progression, local or intellectual.

I am amaz'd, and lose my way
Among the thorns and dangers of this world.

You cannot see your way.—
—I have no way, and therefore want no eyes;
I stumbled when I saw.

To God's eternal house, direct the way,
A broad and ample road.

Flatt'ring the god and weeping maid,
Pity poor Cupid, generous maid!
Who happen'd, being blind, to stray,
And on thy bosom lost his way,

2. Road made for passengers.

Know'st thou the way to Dover?—
—Both stile and gate, horse-way, and foot-path.

Attending long in vain, I took the way
Which through a path but scarcely printed lay.

3. A length of space.

Birnbaumer forest extends a great way, wherein are many deer, wild boars, foxes, wolf, and bears.

An old man, that had travelled a great way under a huge burden, found himself so weary, that he called upon death to deliver him.

4. Course; direction of motion; local tendency.

I now go toward him, therefore follow me.
And mark what way I make.

Come a little nearer this way, I war ant thee no body hears.

He stood in the gate, and ask'd of every one
Which way she took, and whither she was gone.

With downward force he took his way,
And roll'd his yellow billows to the sea.

My seven brave brothers, in one fatal day,
To death's dark mansion took the mournful way.

To observe every the least difference that is in things, keeps the understanding steady and right in its way to knowledge.

The boy was to know his father's circumstances, and that he was to make his way by his own industry.

6. Passage; power of progression made or given.

Back do I lost these treasons to thy head;
This sword of mine shall give them instant way,
Where they shall rest for ever.

Th' angelick choirs,
On each hand parting, to his speed gave way,
I through all th' empirical road, Milton's Par. Lost.
Youth and vain confidence thy life betray;
Through armies this has made Melancthus way.

The reason may be, that men seldom care into those posts till after forty; about which time the natural heat beginning to decay, makes way for those distempers.

The air could not readily get out of those po-sons, but by degrees, as the earth and water above would give way.

As a soldier, foremost in the fight,
Makes way for others.

Some make themselves way, and are suggested to the mind by all the ways of sensation and reflection.

7. Vacancy made by timorous or respectful recession.

There would be left no difference between truth and falsehood, if what we certainly know gave to what we may possibly be mistaken.

Nor was he satisfied, unless he made the pure protestation of the gospel give way to superstition and idolatry, wherever he had power to expel the one, and establish the other. Atinbury.

The senate, forced to yield to the tribunes of the people, thought it their wisest course to give way also to the time. Swift.

I would give way to others, who might argue very well upon the same subject. Swift.

8. Course; regular progression.

But give me leave to see my Jestin'd prey,
And let eternal justice take the way. Dryden.

9. Course or progress considered as obstructed or hindered.

The imagination being naturally tumultuous, interposeth itself without asking leave, casting thoughts in our way, and forcing the understanding to reflect upon them. Duffa.

The general officers and the publick militia that fell in my way, were generally subject to gout. Temple.

13. Means; mediate instrument; intermediate step.

By noble ways we conquest will prepare;
First offer peace, and that refus'd, make war. Dryden.

What conceivable ways are there, whereby we should come to be assured that there is such a being as God? Tillotson.

A child his mother so well instructed this way in geography, that he knew the limits of the four parts of the world. Locke.

It is not impossible to God to make a creature with more ways to convey into the understanding the notice of corporeal things, than those five he has given to man. Locke.

14. Method; scheme of management.

He durst not take open way against them, and as hard it was to take a secret, they being so continually followed by the best, and every way ablest, of that region. Sidney.

A physician, unacquainted with your body, may put you in a way for a present cure, but overthrow your health in some other kind. Bacon.
Will not my yielded crown redeem my breath?
Still am I fear'd? Is there no way but death? Daniel.

As by calling evil good, a man is misrepresented to himself in the way of flattery, so by calling good evil, he is misrepresented to others in the way of slander. South's Sermons.

Now what impious ways my wishes took!
How they the monarch and the man forsook! Prior.

15. Private determination; particular will or humour.

He was of an high mind, and loved his own will and his way, as one that revered himself, and would reign indeed. Bacon.

If I had my way,
He had mew'd in flames at home, not in the senate;
I had sing'd his furs by this time. Ben Jonson's Caroline.

16. Manner; mode.

She with a calm carelessness let every thing slide, as we do by their speeches, who neither in matter nor person do any way belong unto us. Sidney.

God hath so many times and ways spoken to men. Hocher.

His way of expressing and applying them, not his invention of them, is what we admire. Addis.

17. Method; manner of practice.

Having lost the way of nobleness, he strove to climb to the height of terribleness. Sidney.

Matter of mirth
She could devise, and thousand ways invent
To feed her foolish humour and vain jolliment. Spenser.

Taught
To live the easiest way, not with perplexing thoughts. Milton.

18. Method or plan of life, conduct, or action.

To attain
The height and depth of thy eternal ways,
All human thought comes short. Milton.

When a man sees the prodigious expence our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles they would have left us, had they only been instructed in the right way. Addison on Italy.

19. Process of things good or ill.

The affair here began to settle in a prosperous way. Hyllis.

20. Right method to act or know.

We are quite out of the way, when we think that things contain within themselves the qualities that appear to us in them. Locke.

They are more in danger to go out of the way, who are marching under the conduct of a guide that will mislead them, than he that has not yet taken a step, and is likelier to enquire after the right way. Locke.

By me they offer all that you can ask,
And point an easy way to happiness. Rowe.

21. General scheme of acting.

Men who go out of the way to hint free things, must be guilty of absurdity, or rudeness. Clarissa.

22. By the way. Without any necessary connection with the main design; en passant.

Note, by the way, that unity of continuance is easier to procure, than unity of species. Bacon's Natural History.

Will. Honeycomb, now on the verge of threescore, asked me, in his most serious look, whether I would advise him to marry lady Betty Single, who, by the way, is one of the greatest fortunes about town. Spectator.

23. To go, or come one's way, or ways; to come along, or depart. A familiar phrase.

When I saw a goodly Babylonish garment, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight, then I covetted them. Job. vii.

3. Any thing in the form of a wedge.

In warlike musters they appear,
In rhombs, and wedges, and half-moons, and wings.

Milton.

To WEDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cleave with a wedge.

My heart,
As wedged with a sigh, would live in twain,
Left Hector, or my father, should perceive me.

Shakespeare.

2. To drive as a wedge is driven.

Where have you been broiling?—
—Among the crowd in 'th' abbey, where a finger
Could not be walg'd in more. Shak. Henry VIII.

3. To force as a wedge forces.

Part
In common rang'd in figure wedge their way, Intelligent of seasons. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. To fasten by wedges.

Wedge on the kindest scythles,
And give us steeds that snort against the foe.

A. Phillips.

5. To fix as a wedge.

Your wit will not so soon out as another man's will; it is strongly wedged up in a blockhead.

Shakespeare.

Sergeantus in the centaur soon he pass'd,
Wedge'd in the rock, shoals and sticking fast. Dryd.
What impulse can be propagated from one particle entombed and wedged in the very center of the earth, to another in the center of Saturn?

Bentley's Sermons.

WEDLOCK. n. f. [wed and lac, Saxon, marriage and gift.] Marriage; matrimony.

She doth stray about
By holy crosses, where the kneels and prays
For happy wedlock hours. Shakespeare.
Sirrah, your brother is legitimate;
Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him,
And if he did play false the fault was hers. Shak.
Can wedlock know so great a curse?
As putting husbands out to nurse? Cleaveland.
He his happiest choice too late Shall meet already link'd, and wedlock-bound To a fell adversary. Milton's Paradise Lost.

May not a prison or a grave,
Like wedlock, honour's title have? Dantam.
One thought the sex's prime felicity
Was from the bonds of wedlock to be free,
And uncontroll'd to give account to none. Dryd.
A man determined, about the fiftieth year of his age, to enter upon wedlock. Addison.

WEDNESDAY. n. f. [pobensdag, Sax. oden's day, Swedish; woensday, Dutch; wensday, Islandick.] The fourth day of the week, so named by the Gothick nations from Woden or Odin.

Where is the honour of him that died on Wednesday? Shakespeare.

The offices of prayer he had in his church, not only upon the Sundays, and festivals, and their eves, as also Wednesdays and Fridays. Fell.

WEE. adj. [a Saxon word of the same

Little; small: whence the word weenst or weest is used for little; as, a weest face. In Scotland it denotes small or little; as, a wee anc, a little one, or child;
a wee bit, a little bit.

Does he not wear a great round beard, like a glover's plying knife?—No, forsooth; he hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

WEICHELN. n. f. [This is often writ- ten witch elm.] A species of elm.

A cion of a weicheelm grafted upon an ordinary elm, will put forth leaves as broad as the brim of a hat. Bacon

WEED. n. f. [peob, Saxon, tares.]

1. An herb noxious or useless.

If he had an immoderate ambition, which is a weed, if it be a weed, apt to grow in the best soils, it doth not appear that it was in his nature.

Clarendon.

He wand'ring feeds
On slowly growing herbs and ranker weeds. Sandys.
Too much manuring fill'd that field with weeds,
While locusts, like locusts, did destroy the feeds.

Denham.

Stinking weeds and poisonous plants have their use. Mere.

When they are cut, let them lie, if weedy, to kill the weeds. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Their virtue, like their Tyber's flood Rolling, its course design'd the country's good;
But on the torrent's too impetuous speed
From the low earth tore some polluting weed;
And with the blood of Jove there always ran
Some viler part, some uncture of the man. Prior.

If they are often seen to lose that little religion they were taught in their youth, 'tis no more to be wondered at, than to see a little flower choked and killed amongst rank weeds. Low.

2. [peoba, Saxon; waed, Dutch.] A garment; clothes; habit; dress. Now scarce in use, except in widow's weeds, the mourning drels of a widow.

My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears.

Shelley.

Neither is it any man's business to cloath all his servants with one weed, nor theirs to cloath themselves so, if left to their own judgments.

Hooker.

They meet upon the way
An aged sire, in long black weeds yclad;
His feet all bare, his beard all hoary gray,
And by his belt his back he hanging had. Spenser.
Livery is also called the upper weed, which a serving man wears, to called as it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure. Spenser.

The snake throws her erasell'd skin,
Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in.
Throughs of knights, and barons' bold,
In weeds of peace, high triumphs hold,
With store of ladies. Milton.
Lately your fan hard in woman's weed
Wrapp'd my glad head. Waller.

3. It is used by Chapman for the upper garment.

The morning, in her throne of gold,
Surraid the vast world, by whose orient light
The nymph adorn'd me with attires as bright;
Her own hands putting on both shirt and weeds.

Chapman.

To WEED. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rid of noxious plants.

When you sow the berries of bays, weed not the borders for the first half year; for the weed give'n them shade. Bacon.

Your seedlings having stood till June, bestow a weeding or a slight hoeing upon them. Mortimer.

2. To take away as noxious plants.

On Marcius
Each word thou'lt spoke hath weeded from my heart

A root of ancient envy. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Sarcasms, contumelies, and invectives, fill so many pages of our controversial writings, that, were those weeded out, in my volumes would be reduced to a more moderate bulk and temper.

Decay of Piety.

3. To free from any thing hurtful or offensive.

He weeded the kingdom of such as were devoted to Eliana, and manumized it from that most dangerous confederacy. Howell's Vocal Forest.

4. To root out vice.

Wise fathers be not as well aware in weeding from their children ill things, as they were before in grafting in them learning. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
One by one, as they appeared, they might all be weeded out, without any sign that ever they had been there. Locke.

WEEDER. n. f. [from weed.] One that takes away any thing noxious.

A weeder out of his proud adversaries,
A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shak. Richard III.

WEEDHOOK. n. f. [weed and hook.] A hook by which weeds are cut away or extirpated.

In May get a weedhook, a crotch, and a glove,
And weed out such weeds as the corn doth not love. Tusser.

WEEDLESS. adj. [from weed.] Free from weeds; free from any thing use- less or noxious.

So many weedless paradises be,
Which of themselves produce no venomous sin.

Donne.

A crystal brook,
When troubled most it does the bottom show;
'Tis weedless all above, and ruckles all below.

Dryden.

WEEDY. adj. [from weed.]

1. Consisting of weeds.

There on the pendant boughs her coronet weed
Clam'ring to hang, an envious silver broke,
When down her weedy trophies and herself
Fell in the weeping brook. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. Abounding with weeds.

Did in a weedy lake all night I lay, Secure of safety. Dryden's Æneid.
If it is weedy, let it lie upon the ground. Mort.

WEEK. n. f. [peoc, Saxon; weke, Dut. wecka, Swedish.] The space of seven days.

Fulfil her week, and we will give thee this also.

Genesis, xlii.

The division of time by weeks hath been universally observed in the world, not only amongst the civilized, but likewise among the most barbarous nations. Wilkins.

WEEKDAY. n. f. [week and day.] Any day not Sunday.

One solid dish his weekday meal affords,
An added pudding solemniz'd the Lord's. Pope.

WEEKLY. adj. [from week.] Happen- ing, produced, or done once a week; hebdomadary.

The Jews had always their weekly readings of the law of Moses. Hooker.
So liv'd our fires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with heirs their weekly bill. Dryd.
Nothing more frequent in their weekly papers, than affecting to confound the terms of clergy and high-church, and then loading the latter with calumny. Scout.

WEEKLY. adv. [from week.] Once a week; by hebdomadal periods.

'These are obliged to perform divine worship in their turns weekly, and are sometimes called hebdomadal canons. Ayliffe.

WEEK. n. f. [peoc, Saxon.]

1. A whirlpool.
2. [perhaps from willow.] A twiggen snare or trap for fish.

To

My soul is quite weigh'd down with care, and asks
The soft refreshment of a moment's sleep.

Addison's Cato.

Excellent persons, weighed down by this habitual sorrow of heart, rather deserve our compassion than reproach.

Addison.

TO WEIGH. v. n.

1. To have weight.

Exactly weighing, and strangling a chicken in the scales, upon an immediate ponderation, we could discover no difference in weight; but suffering it to lie eight or ten hours, until it grew perfectly cold, it weighed most sensibly lighter.

Brown.

2. To be considered as important; to have weight in the intellectual balance.

This objection ought to weigh with those, whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge.

Locke.

A wife man is then best satisfied, when he finds that the same argument which weighs with him has weighed with thousands before him, and is such as hath born down all opposition.

Addison.

3. To raise the anchor.

When gath'ring clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys, he cries.

Dryden.

4. To bear heavily; to press hard.

Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart? Shaksp. Macbeth.

5. To sink by its own weight.

The Indian fig boweth so low, as it taketh root again; the plenty of the sap, and the softness of the stalk, making the bough, being overloaded, weigh down.

Bacon.

WEIGHED. adj. [from weigh.] Experienced.

In an embassy of weight, choice was made of some sad person of known experience, and not of a young man, not weighed in state matters.

WEIGHED. n. s. [from weigh.] He who weighs.

WEIGHT. n. s. [piht, Saxon.]

1. Quantity measured by the balance.

Tobacco cut and weighed, and then dried by the fire, loseth weight: and, after being laid in the open air, recovereth weight again.

Bacon's Natural History.

Fain would I chuse a middle courte to steer;
Nature's too kind, and justice too severe:
Speak for us both, and to the balance bring,
On either side, the father and the king!
Heav'n knows my heart is bent to favour thee;
Make it but scanty weight, and leave the rest to me.

Dryden.

So was every thing of the temple, even so the weight of a flesh hook, given to David, as you may see.

Lesley.

Buerhave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight; and yet there was no acid found in its body.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. A mass by which, as the standard, other bodies are examined.

Just balances, just weights, shall ye have.

Levi. xix. 36.

Undoubtedly there were such weights which the physicians used, who though they might reckon according to the weight of the money, they did not weigh their drugs with pieces of money.

Arbutnot on Coins.

When the balance is entirely broke, by mighty weights fallen into either scale, the power will never continue long in equal division, but run entirely into one.

3. Ponderous mass.

A man leapeth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if proportionable, strengtheneth the sinews by contracting them: otherwise, where no contraction is needful, weight hindereth; as we see, in horse-races, men are curious to foresee that there be not the least weight upon the one horse more than upon the other. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards, and then forwards, with so much the greater force.

Bacon's Natural History.

Wolsey, who from his own great store might have
A palace or a college for his grave,
Lies here interr'd:

Nothing but earth to clog his pond'rous weight
Upon him, but a pebble of equit:

It thus thou liest neglected, what must we Hope after death, who are but shreds of thee?

Bishop Corbet.

All their confidence

Under the weight of mountains buried deep. Milton.
Pride, like a gulf, swallows us up; our very virtues, when so leavened, becoming weights and plumets to sink us to the deeper ruin.

Government of the Tongue.

Then shun the ill; and know, my dear, Kindness and constancy will prove

The only pillars fit to bear

So vast a weight as that of love.

Prior.

4. Gravity; heaviness; tendency to the center.

Heaviness or weight is not here considered as being such a natural quality, whereby condensed bodies do of themselves tend downwards; but rather as being an affection, whereby they may be measured.

Wilkins.

The shaft, that slightly was impress'd,
Now from his heavy fall with weight increas'd
Drove through his neck.

Dryden.

What natural agent impel them so strongly with a transverse side blow against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are falling?

Bentley.

5. Pressure; burthen; overwhelming power.

Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight. Shak.
As some of the angels did scarce sooner receive than break the law of obedience; so some men, by an unhappy imitation of such angels, are more ready to slander the weight of their yoke than to bear it.

Holyday.

So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign,
Under her own weight groaning.

Milton.

We must thole, who groan beneath the weight
Of age, disease, or want, commiserate. Denham.
The prince may carry the plough, but the weight lies upon the people.

L'Estrange.

Possession's load was grown so great,
He sunk beneath the cumb'rous weight. Swift.
They are like so many weights upon our minds, that make us less able and less inclined to raise up our thoughts and affections to the things that are above.

Law.

6. Importance; power; influence; efficacy.

How to make ye suddenly an answer,
In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,
In truth I know not. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
If this right of heir carry any weight with it, if it be the ordinance of God, must not all be subject to it?

Locke.

To make the sense of esteem or disgrace sink the deeper, and be of the more weight, other agreeable or disagreeable things should constantly accompany these different states.

Locke.

An author's arguments lose their weight, when we are persuaded that he only writes for argument's sake.

Addison.

See, Lord, the sorrows of my heart,
Ere yet it be too late;

And hear my Saviour's dying groans,
To give those sorrows weight. Addis. Spelt.

The solemnities that encompass the magistrate add dignity to all his actions, and weight to all his words.

Atterbury.

WEIGHTILY. adv. [from weighty.]

1. Heavily; ponderously.

2. Solidly; importantly.

In his poetry the world, because he makes his agents speak weightily and sententiously?

Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

WEIGHTINESS. n. s. [from weighty.]

1. Ponderosity; gravity; heaviness.

2. Solidity; force.

I fear I have dwelt longer on this passage than the weightiness of any argument in it requires.

Locke.

3. Importance.

The apparent defect of her judgment, joined to the weightiness of the adventure, caused many to marvel.

Hayward.

WEIGHTLESS. adj. [from weight.] Light; having no gravity.

How by him balanc'd in the weightless air?

Canst thou the wisdom of his work declare?

Sundys.

It must both weightless and immortal prove,
Because the centre of it is above.

Dryden.

WIGHTY. adj. [from weight.]

1. Heavy; ponderous.

You have already weary'd fortune so,
She cannot farther be your friend or foe,
But sits all breathless, and admires to feel
A fate so wighty that it stops her wheel.

Dryden.

2. Important; momentous; efficacious.

I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye
For sundry wighty reasons. Shaksp. Macbeth.

It only forbids suits in tighter losses and indignities, such as our Lord there mentions, and making the law the instrument of revenge in wightier matters.

Kesteven.

No soul Pythagoras was thought:
Whilst he his wighty doctrines taught,
He made his list'ning scholars stand,
Their mouth still cover'd with their hand;
Else, may be, some odd thinking youth,
Lest friend to doctrine than to truth,
Might have refus'd to let his ears
Attend the musick of the spheres.

Prior.

Thus spoke to my lady the knight full of care,
Let me have your advice in a wighty affair.

Swift.

3. Rigorous; severe. Not in use.

If, after two days shine, Athens contains thee, Attend our wightier judgment. Shaksp. Timon.
WE'LAWAY. *interj. [This I once believed a corruption of wel away, that is, happiness is gone; so Junius explained it: but the Saxon exclamation is palapa, woe on woe. From welaway is formed by corruption weladay.] Alas.

Harrow now out, and welaway, he cried,
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light? Spens.
Ah, welaway, most noble lords, how can
Your cruel eyes endure so piteous light? Spenser.

Welaway, the while I was so fond,
To leave the good that I had in hand.

Spenser.

WELCOME. adj. [bien venu, French; pilcume, Saxon; welkom, Dutch.]

1. Received with gladness; admitted willingly to any place or enjoyment; grateful; pleasing.

I serve you, madam:
Your graces are right welcome. Shaksp. K. Lear.

He, though not of the plot, will like it,
And wish it should proceed; for, unto men
Press'd with their wants, all change is ever welcome.

Ben Jonson.

Here let me earn my bread,
Till oft invoked death
Hasten the welcome end of all my pains.

Milton.

He that knows how to make those he converses with easy, has found the true art of living, and being welcome and valued every where.

Locke.

2. To bid WELCOME. To receive with professions of kindness.

Some stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us; and divers put their arms a little abroad, which is their gesture when they bid welcome.

Brown.

WELCOME.

WEL'COME, interj. A form of salutation used to a new comer, elliptically used for you are welcome.

Welcome, he said,
O long-expected, to my dear embrace! Dryden
Welcome, great monarch, to your own. Dryden.

WEL'COME, n. f.

1. Salutation of a new comer.

Welcome ever smile, and farewell goes out sighing. Shakespeare.

Leontes opening his free arms, and weeping
His welcome forth. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

2. Kind reception of a new comer.

I should be free from injuries, and abound as much in the true causes of welcomes, as I should find want of the effects thereof. Sidney.

I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Madam, new years may well expect to find
Welcome from you, to whom they are so kind:
Still as they pass they court and smile on you,
And make your beauty, as themselves, seem new. Waller.

Where diligence opens the door of the understanding, and impartiality keeps it, truth finds an entrance and a welcome too. South's Sermons.

TO WELCOME, v. a. To salute a new comer with kindness.

I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard. Shakespeare's Richard II.

They stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us. Bacon.

Thus we salute thee with our early song,
And welcome thee, and with thee long. Milton.

To welcome home
His waitlike brother, is Pirithous come. Dryden.

The lark and linnets strain their warbling throats,
To welcome in the spring. Dryden.

WELCOME to our house. n. f. lactuca maritima, Latin.] An herb. Ainsworth.

WEL'COMFNESS, n. f. [from welcome.] Gratefulness.

Our joys, after some centuries of years, may seem to have grown older, by having been enjoyed to many ages; yet will they really still continue new, not only upon the shores of their welcomeness, but by their perpetually equal, because infinite, distance from a period. Boyle.

WEL'COMER, n. f. [from welcome.] The saluter or receiver of a new comer.

Farewell, thou woeful welcomer of glory! Shakespeare.

WELD, or WOULD, n. f. [luteola, Latin.] Yellow weed, or dyers weed.

TO WELD, for TO WIELD. Spenser.

TO WELD, v. a. To beat one mals into another, so as to incorporate them.

Sparkling or welding heat is used when you double up your iron to make it thick enough, and so weld or work in the doublings into one another. Mason's Mechanical Exercises.

WEL'DER, n. f. [a term perhaps merely Irish; though it may be derived from To wield, to turn or manage: whence wielder, welder.] Manager; actual occupier.

Such immediate tenants have others under them, and so a third and fourth in subordination, till it comes to the welder, as they call him, who sits at a rack-rent, and lives miserably. Swift.

WEL'FARE, n. f. [well and fare.] Happiness; success; prosperity.

If friends to a government forbear their assistance, they put it in the power of a few desperate men to ruin the wellfare of those who are superior to them in strength and interest. Addison.

Discretion is the perfection of reason; cunning is a kind of instinct that only looks out after our private interest and welfare. Addison's Spectator.

TO WELK, v. a. [Of this word in Spenser I know not well the meaning: pealcen, in Saxon, is to roll; welken, in German, and pelcen, in Saxon, are clouds; whence I suppose welk, or welk, is an undulation or corrugation, or corrugated or convolved body. Welk is used for a small shell-fish.] To cloud; to obscure. It seems in Spenser both active and neuter.

Now sad winter welketh hath the day,
And Phæbus, weary of his yearly task,
Establish'd hath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes haik. Spenser.

As gentle shepherd in sweet evening,
When ruddy Phæbus 'gins to welk in west,
Marks which do bite their hasty supper best. Spenser.

The welketh Phæbus 'gan avale
His weary wain. Spenser.

WEL'KED, adj. Set with protuberances. Properly, I believe, welketh, from welk.

Methought his eyes
Were two full moons; he had a thousand noses, Horns, welk'd and war'd like the enridged sea. Shakespeare.

WEL'KIN, n. f. [from pealcen, to roll, or pelcen, clouds, Saxon.]

1. The visible regions of the air. Out of use, except in poetry.

Ne in all the welkin was no cloud. Chaucer.
He leaves the welkin way most beaten plain,
And rapt with whirling wheels inflames the skyen
With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shine. Spenser.

The swallow peeps out of her nest,
And cloudy welkin cleareth. Spenser's Pastorals.

Spur your proud hortes hard, and ride in blood:
Amaze the welkin with your broken slaves. Shakespeare's Richard III.

With feats of arms
From either end of heav'n the welkin burns. Milton.

Now my talk is smoothly done,
I can fly or I can run
Quickly to the green earth's end,
Where the bow'd welkin slow doth bend. Milton.

Their hideous yells Rend the dark welkin. Philips.

2. WELKIN EYE, I suppose, blue eye; skycoloured eye.

Yet were it true
To say this boy were like me! Come, sir page,
Look on me with your welkin eye, sweet villain. Shakespeare.

WELL, n. f. [pelle, poell, Saxon.]

1. A spring; a fountain; a source.

Begin then, fountains of the sacred well,
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring. Milton.

As the root and branch are but one tree,
And well and stream do but one river make;
So if the root and well corrupted be,
The stream and branch the same corruption take. Davies.

2. A deep narrow pit of water.

Now up, now down, like buckets in a well. Dryden.

The muscles are so many well-buckets: when one of them acts and draws, 'tis necessary that the other must obey. Dryden.

3. The cavity in which stairs are placed.

Hollow newell'd stairs are made about a square hollow newel; suppose the well-hole to be eleven foot long, and six foot wide, and we would bring up a pair of stairs from the first floor eleven foot high, it being intended a sky-light shall fall through the hollow newel. Mason's Mechanical Exercises.

TO WELL, v. n. [peallan, Sax.] To spring; to issue as from a spring.

Thereby a crystal stream did gently play,
Which from a sacred fountain well'd forth alway. Spenser.

A dreary corse,
All wallow'd in his own yet lukewarm blood,
That from his wound yet well'd fresh alas! Spenser.
Himself affixes to lift him from the ground,
With clotd locks, and blood that well'd from out the wound. Dryden's Æneid.

From his two springs
Pure welling out, he through the lucid lake
Of fair Dambas rolls his infant stream. Thomson's Summer.

TO WELL, v. a. To pour any thing forth.

To her people wealth they forth do well,
And health to every foreign nation. Spenser.

WELL, adj. [Well seems to be sometimes an adjective, though it is not always easy to determine its relations.]

1. Not sick; being in health.

Lady, I am not well, else I should answer
From a full flowing stomach. Shakespeare's King Lear.

In poison there is physick; and this news,
That would, had I been well, have made me sick,
Being sick, hath in some measure made me well. Shakespeare.

While thou art well, thou mayest do much good;
but when thou art sick, thou canst not tell what thou shalt be able to do: it is not very much nor very good. Few men mend with sickness, as there are but few who by travel and a wandering life become devout. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

Men under irregular appetites never think themselves well, so long as they fancy they might be better; then from better they must rise to bell. L'Estrange.

'Tis easy for any, when well, to give advice to them that are not. Wake's Preparation for Death.

2. Happy.

Maik, we use
To say the dead are w<sup>ell</sup>. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

Holdings were so plentiful, and holders so scarce, as well was the landlord who could get one to be his tenant. Carroll.

Charity is made the constant companion and perfection of all virtues; and well it is for that virtue where it most enters and longest stays. Spratt's Sermons.

3. Convenient; advantageous.

This exactness is necessary, and it would be well too if it extended itself to common conversation. Locke.

It would have been well for Genoa, if she had followed the example of Venice, in not permitting her nobles to make any purchase of lands in the dominions of a foreign prince. Addison.

4. Being in favour.

He followed the fortunes of that family; and was well with Henry the Fourth. Dryden.

5. Recovered from any sickness or misfortune.

I am sorry
For your displeasure; but all will sure be well. Shakespeare.

Just thoughts and modest expectations are easily satisfied. If we don't over-rate our pretensions, all will be well. Callier.

WELL, adv. [will, Gothick; pell, Saxon; wel, Dutch; wel, Islandick.]

1. Not ill; not unhappily.

Some sense, and more estate, kind heav'n
To this well-lotted peer has given:
What then? he must have rule and sway;
Else all is wrong till he's in play. Prior.

2. Not ill; not wickedly.

My bargains, and well-won thrift, he calls interest. Shakespeare.

Thou one hadst with many deeds well done
Mayst cover. Milton.

3. Skillfully; properly; in a laudable manner.

Beware, and govern well thy appetite. Milton.

Whether the learn'd Minerva be her theme,
Or chaste Diana bathing in the stream;
None can record their heavenly praise so well. Dryden.

What

What poet would not mourn to see
His brother write as well as he? Swift.
4. Not amiss; not unsuccessfully; not erroneously.

Solyman commended them for a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason. Koeller.

The soldier that philosopher well-blam'd,
Who long and loudly in the schools declaim'd
Denham.

'Tis almost impossible to translate verbally and well. Dryden.

5. Not insufficiently; not defectively.

The plain of Jordan was well watered every where. Genesi.

We are well able to overcome it. Numb. xiii. 30.

The merchant adventurers, being a strong company, and well underfitted with rich men, held out bravely. Bacon.

6. To a degree that gives pleasure.

I like well, in some places, fair columns upon frames of carpenters work. Bacon.

7. With praise; favourably.

All the world speaks well of you. Pope.

8. Well is sometimes like the French bien, a term of concession.

The knot might well be cut, but untied it could not be. Sidney.

9. Conveniently; suitably.

Know

In measure what the mind can well contain. Milt.

10. To a sufficient degree: a kind of slight sense.

A private caution I know not well how to fort, unless I should call it political, by no means to build too near a great neighbour. Wotton.

11. It is a word by which something is admitted as the ground for a conclusion.

Well, let's away, and say how much is done.

Shakespeare.

Well, by this author's confession, a number superior are for the succession in the house of Hanover. Swift.

12. As well as. Together with; not less than.

Long and tedious, as well as grievous and uneasy courses of physick, how necessary soever to the cure, much enfeeble the patient, and reduce him to a low and languishing state. Blackmore.

Coptos was the magazine of all the trade from Æthiopia, by the Nile, as well as of those commodities that came from the west by Alexandria.
Arbutnot on Conn.

13. Well is him or me; bene est, he is happy.

Well is him that dwelleth with a wife of understanding, and that hath not slipped with his tongue.
Eccles. xxv. 8.

14. Well nigh. Nearly; almost.

I freed well nigh half th' angelick name. Milton.

15. Well enough. In a moderate degree;
tolerably.

Antiochus understanding him not to be well-affected to his affairs, provided for his own safety.
2 Mac. iv. 21.

There may be safety to the well-affected Persians; but to those who do conspire against us, a memorial of destruction. Ezra. xvi. 23.

Should a whole host at once discharge the bow,
My well-aim'd shaft with death prevents the foe.
Pope.

What well-appointed leader fronts us here?

Shakespeare.

Well-apparell'd April on the heel
Of limping winter treads. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.

The pow'r of wisdom march'd before,
And ere the sacrificing throng he join'd, Admonish'd thus his well-attending mind. Pope.

Such music
Before was never made,
But when of old the sons of morning sung,
Whilst the Creator great
His constellations set,
And the well-balanc'd world on hinges hung. Milton.

Learners must at first be believers, and their master's rules having been once made axioms to them, they mislead those who think it sufficient to excuse them if they go out of their way in a well-beaten track. Locke.

He chose a thousand horse, the flower of all
His warlike troops, to wait the funeral:
To bear him back, and share Evander's grief;
A well-becoming, but a weak relief. Dryden.

Those opposed files,
Which lately met in the intestine shock
And furious close of civil butchery,
Shall now in mutual well-beseeming rank
March all one way. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

O'er the Elean plains thy well-breath'd horse
Impels the flying car, and wins the course. Dryd.

More dismal than the loud displaced roar
Of brazen enginery, that ceaseless storms
The bastion of a well-built city. Philips.

He conducted his course among the same well-chosen friendships and alliances with which he began it. Addison.

My ion corrupts a well-derived nature
With his inducement. Shakespeare.

If good accue, 'tis conferred most commonly on the base and intamous; and only happening sometimes to well-deservers. Dryden.

It grieves me he should desperately adventure
the loss of his well-deserving life. Sidney.

What a pleasure is well-directed study in the search of truth! Locke.

A certain spark of honour, which rose in her well-disposed mind, made her fear to be alone with him, with whom alone she desired to be. Sidney.

The unprepossessed, the well-disposed, who both together make much the major part of the world, are affected with a due fear of these things.

Saur's Sermons.

A clear idea is that, whereof the mind hath such a full and evident perception, as it does receive from an outward object operating duly on a well-disposed organ. Locke.

Amid the main two mighty fleets engage;
Aftum surveys the well-disputed prize. Dryden.

The ways of well-doing are in number even as many as are the kinds of voluntary actions: so that whatsoever we do in this world, and may do it ill, we shew ourselves therein by well-doing, to be wise. Hooker.

The conscience of well-doing may pass for a recompence. L'Estrange.

Beg God's grace, that the day of judgment may not overtake us unawares, but that by a patient well-doing we may wait for glory, honour, and immortality. Nelson.

God will judge every man according to his works; to them, who by patient continuance in well-doing endure through the heat and burden of the day, he will give the reward of their labour.

Rogers's Sermons.

As far the spear I throw,
As flies an arrow from the well-drawn bow. Pope.

Fair nymphs and well-dress'd youths around her shone,
But every eye was fix'd on her alone. Pope.

Such a doctrine in St. James's air Should chance to make the well-dress'd rabble stare. Pope.

The desire of esteem, riches, or power, makes men espouse the well-endowed opinions in fashion.

Locke.

We ought to stand firm in well-established principles, and not be tempted to change for every difficulty. Watts.

Echelus (age, a venerable man)
Whole well-taught mind the present age surpass'd. Pope.

Some reliques of the true antiquity, though dis-guis'd, a well-eyed man may happily discover.

Spenser on Ireland.

How sweet the products of a peaceful reign!
The heaven-taught poet, and enchanting strain,
The well-fill'd palace, the perpetual feast,
A land rejoicing, and a people blest. Pope.
Turkish blond did his young hands imbrue;
From thence returning with deriv'd applause,
Against the Moors his well-fleish'd sword he draws. Dryden.

Fairest piece of well-form'd earth,
Urge not thus your haughty birth. Waller.

A rational soul can be no more discern'd in a well-formed than ill-shaped infant. Locke.

A well-formed proposition is sufficient to communicate the knowledge of a subject. Watts.

Oh! that I'd died before the well-fought well!
Had some distinguish'd day renown'd my fall,
All Greece had paid my solemn funeral. Pope.

Good men have a well-grounded hope in another life; and are as certain of a future recompence, as of the being of God. Atterbury.

Let firm, well-hammer'd soles protect thy feet
Through freezing snows. Guy's Travels.

The camp of the heathen was strong, and well-harnessed, and compass'd round with horsemen. Mit. iv. 7.

Among the Romans, those who saved the life of a citizen, were dress'd in an oaken garland; but among us, this has been a mark of such well-intentioned persons as would betray their country.

Addison.

He, full of fraudulent arts,
This well-invented tale for truth imports. Dryd.

He, by enquiry, got to the well-known house of Kalandar. Sidney.

Soon as thy letters trembling I unfold,
That well-known name awakens all my woe. Pope.

Where proud Athens rears her tow'ry head,
With opening streets and shining structures spread,
She pass, delighted with the well-known seats. Pope.

From a confin'd well-manag'd store
You both employ and feed the poor. Waller.

A noble soul is better pleas'd with a zealous vindicator of liberty, than with a temporizing peer, or well-mannered court slave, and one who is ever decent, because he is naturally so. Waller.

Well means think no harm; but for the rest,
Things sacred they pervert, and silence is the best. Dryden.

By craft they may prevail on the weakness of some well-meaning men to engage in their designs.

Rogers's Sermons.

He examines that well-meant, but unfortunate,
Iye of the conquest of France. Arbutnot.

A crack supposes he has done his part, if he proves a writer to have failed in an expression; and can it be wondered at, if the poets seem resolved not to own themselves in any error? for as long as one side disputes a well-meant endeavour, the other will not be satisfied with a moderate approbation. Pope's Preface to his Works.

Many sober, well-minded men, who were real lovers of the peace of the kingdom, were imposed upon. Clarendon.

Jarring interests of themselves create
The according music of a well-mix'd state. Pope.

When the blast of winter blows,
Into the naked wood he goes;
And seeks the tusk'd boar to rear,
With well-mouth'd hounds and pointed spear. Dryden.

The applause that other people's reason gives to virtuous and well-ordered actions, is the proper guide of children, till they grow able to judge for themselves. Locke.

The fruits of unity, next unto the well-pleasing of God, which is all in all, are towards those that are without this church; the other towards those that are within. Bacon.

The exercise of the offices of charity is always well-pleasing to God, and honourable among men.

Atterbury.

My voice shall sound as you do prompt mine ear
And I will stoop and humble my interests
To your well-practis'd wise directions. Sh. Ham. V.

The well-proportion'd shape, and beauteous face,
 Shall never more be seen by mortal eyes. Dryden.
 'Twas not the hasty product of a day,
 But the well-tim'd fruit of wise delay. Dryden.
 "Picture those that are fresh gathered, straight, Smooth, and well-root'd. Motamer's Husbandry.
 If I should instruct them to make well-running verses, they want genius to give them strength. Dryden.

The eating of a well-seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end. Lucr.

Instead of well for hair, baldness. Isa. iii. 24.
 A sharp-edg'd sword he girt about.
 His well-spic'd shoulders. Chapman.
 Abraham and Sarah were old, and well-stricken in age. Genesis.

Many well-shaped innocent virgins are waddling like big-bedded women. Spenser.
 We never see beautiful and well-tasted fruits from a tree choked with thorns and briars. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The well-tim'd oars
 With founding strokes divide the sparkling waves. Smith.

Wisdom's triumph is well-tim'd retreat,
 As hard a silence to the fair as great. Pope.
 Mean time we thank you for your well-timed labour.

Go to your rest. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 Oh you are well-tuned now; but I'll let down the peg that make this music. Shakespeare's Othello.
 Her well-turn'd neck he view'd,
 And on her shoulders her dishevell'd hair. Dryden.
 A well-weigh'd judicious poem, which at first gains no more upon the world than to be just received, insinuates itself by insensible degrees into the liking of the reader. Dryden.

He rails
 On me, my bargains, and my well won thrift,
 Which he calls interest. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
 Each by turns the other's bound invade,
 As, in some well-wrought picture, light and shade. Pope.

WELLADAY. interject. [This is a corruption of wellaway. See WELAWAY.]
 Alas.

O welladay, mistress Ford, having an honest man to your husband, to give him such cause of suspicion! Shakespeare's Ah, welladay, I'm silent with baneful smart! Gay.

WELLBE'ING. n. f. [well and be.] Happiness; prosperity.

Man is not to depend upon the uncertain dispositions of men for his wellbeing, but only on God and his own spirit. Taylor's Holy Living.

For whose wellbeing
 So amply, and with hands to liberty,
 Thou hast provided all things. Milton's Par. Lost.
 The most sacred ties of duty are founded upon gratitude: such as the duties of a child to his parent, and of a subject to his sovereign. From the former there is required love and honour, in recompence of being; and from the latter obedience and subjection, in recompence of protection and wellbeing. South's Sermons.

All things are fit to the beauty, order,
 and wellbeing of the whole. L'Estrange.

He who does not cooperate with this holy spirit, receives none of those advantages which are the protecting of his nature, and necessary to his wellbeing. Spenser.

WELLBO'RN. adj. Not meanly descended.
 One whose extraction from an ancient line
 Gives hope again that wellborn men may shine. Waller.

Heaven, that wellborn souls inspires,
 Prompts me through lifted swords, and rising fires,
 To be unmounted to defend the walls. Dryden.

WELLBRED. adj. [well and bred.] Elegant of manners; polite.

None have been with admiration read,
 But who, besides their learning, were wellbred. Recommon.

Both the poets were wellbred and well-natured.
Dryden.

Wellbred spaniels civilly delight
 In muzzling of the game they dare not bite. Pope.

WELLDONE. interject. A word of praise.
Welldone, thou good and faithful servant. Matthew, xxv. 21.

WELFARE. n. f. [well and fare.] Happiness; prosperity.

They will ask, what is the final cause of a king? and they will answer, the people's welfare.
 Certainly a true answer; and as certainly an imperfect one. Holyday.

WELFA'VOURED. adj. [well and fa- vour.] Beautiful; pleasing to the eye.
 His wife seems to be wellfavoured. I will use her as the key of the cuckoldly rogue's coffer. Shakespeare.

WELLMET. interject. [well and meet.]
 A term of salutation.

One more to-day wellmet, dissemper'd lords;
 The king by me requests your presence straight. Shakespeare.

WELLNAT'URED. adj. [well and nature.]
 Good-natured; kind.

On their life no grievous burden lies,
 Who are wellnatur'd, temperate, and wife;
 But an inhuman and ill-temper'd mind
 Not any easy part in life can find. Denham.

The manners of the poets were not unlike; both of them were well-bred, wellnatured, amorous, and libertine, at least in their writings; it may be also in their lives. Dryden.

Still with esteem no less convers'd than read;
 With wit wellnatur'd, and with books well-bred. Pope.

WELLNIGH. adv. [well and nigh.] Almost.

The same so fore annoyed has the knight,
 That, wellnigh choaked with the deadly stink,
 His forces tail. Spenser.

My feet were almost gone: my steps had well-
nigh slip. Psalms.

England was wellnigh ruined by the rebellion of the barons, and Ireland utterly neglected. Davies.
 Whoever shall read over St. Paul's enumeration of the duties incumbent upon it, might conclude, that wellnigh the whole of christianity is laid on the shoulders of charity alone. Spencer's Sermons.

Notwithstanding a small diversity of position,
 the whole aggregate of matter, as long as it retained the nature of a chaos, would retain wellnigh an uniform tenacity of texture. Bentley.

WELLSPE'NT. adj. Passed with virtue.

They are to lie down without any thing to support them in their age, but the confidence of a wellspent youth. L'Estrange.

What a refreshment then will it be, to look back upon a wellspent life! Calamy's Sermons.

The constant honour of their wellspent days
 No less deserv'd a just return of praise. Pope.

WELLSPRING. n. f. [well and spring, Sax.]
 Fountain; source.

The fountain and wellspring of impiety, is a resolved purpose of mind to reap in this world what sensual profit or sensual pleasure soever the world yieldeth. Hooker.

Understanding is a wellspring of life. Proverbs, xvi. 22.

WELLWILLER. n. f. [well and willer.]
 One who means kindly.

Disarming all his own country men, that no man might shew himself a wellwiller of mine. Sidney.

There are fit occasions ministered for men to purchase to themselves wellwillers, by the colour under which they oftentimes prosecute quarrels of envy. Hooker.

WELLWISH. n. f. [well and wish.] A wish of happiness.

Let it not enter into the heart of any one, that hath a wellwish for his friends or posterity, to think of a peace with France, till the Spanish monarchy be entirely torn from it. Addison.

WELLWISHER. n. f. [from wellwish.]
 One who wishes the good of another.

The actual traitor is guilty of perjury in the eye of the law; the secret wellwisher of the cause is so before the tribunal of conscience. Addison's Freeholder.

Betray not any of your wellwishers into the like inconveniences. Spectator.

No man is more your sincere wellwisher than myself, or more the sincere wellwisher of your family. Pope.

WELT. n. f. A border; a guard; an edging.

Little low hedges made round like welts, with some pretty pyramids, I like well. Bacon.

Certain scoli, or smatterers, are busy in the skirts and outsidings of learning, and have scarce any thing of solid literature to recommend them.
 They may have some edging or trimming of a scholar, a welt or so, but no more. Ben Jonson.

TO WELT. v. a. [from the noun.] To sew any thing with a border.

TO WELTER. v. n. [pealtan, Saxon;
welteren, Dutch; wolitari, Latin.]

1. To roll in water or mire.

He must not float upon his wat'ry bier
 Unweep'd, nor welter in the drenching winds. Milton.
 The companions of his tall o'erwhelm'd
 He soon discerns, and welt'ring by his side
 The next himself. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The gaping head flies off, a purple flood Flows from the trunk, that welters in the blood. Dryden.

He sung Darius, great and good,
 By too severe a fate,
 Fallen from his high estate,
 And welt'ring in his blood. Dryden's St. Cecilius.

Bellona wades in blood; that mangled body,
 Deform'd with wounds and welt'ring in its gore,
 I know it well! Oh close the dreadful scene!
 Believe me, Phœbus, I have seen too much. Murpho.

2. To roll voluntarily; to wallow.

If a man inglut himself with vanity, or welter
 in slothiness like a swine, all learning, all goodness, is soon forgotten. Alkan.

WEMM. n. f. [pem, Saxon.] A spot; a scar.

Although the wound be healed, yet the wemme or scar still remaineth. Brerewood on Languages.

WEN. n. f. [pen, Saxon.] A fleshy or callous excrescence or protuberance.

Warts are said to be destroyed by the rubbing them with a green elder stick, and then burying the stick to rot in muck. It would be tried with corns and wens, and such other excrescences. Bacon's Natural History.

Mountains seem but so many wens and unnatural protuberances upon the face of the earth. More.

The poet rejects all incidents which are foreign to his poem: they are wens and other excres-cences, which belong not to the body. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

A promontory wen, with grizzly grace,
 Stood high upon the handle of his face. Dryden.

WENCH. n. f. [pencle, Saxon.]

1. A young woman.

What do I, silly wench, know what love hath prepared for me? Sidney.

Now—how dost thou look now? Oh ill-farr'd wench!

Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at compt,
 This look of thine will hurl my soul from heav'n,
 And fends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl,
 Ev'n like thy chastity. Shakespeare's Othello.

Thou wouldst persuade her to a worse offence
Than that whereof thou didst accuse her wench. Donne.

2. A young woman in contempt; a strumpet.

But the rude wench her answer'd nought at all. Spenser.

Do not pray in wench-like words with thine
Which is so ferocious. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Men have these ambitious fancies,
And wanton *wench*es lead romances. Prior.

3. A strumpet.

It is not a digression to talk of bawds in a discourse upon *wench*s. Spektor.

To WENCH. v. n. [from wench.] To frequent loose women.

They asked the knight, whether he was not ashamed to go wenching at his years? Addison.

WENCHER. n. f. [from wench.] A fornicator.

He must be no great eater, drinker, or sleeper,
no gamester, wencher, or fop. Gr. w's Cosmology.

To WEND. v. n. [penban, Saxon.]

1. To go; to pass to or from. This word is now obsolete, but its preterite went is still in use.

Back to Athens shall the lovers wend
With league whole date till death shall never end. Shakespeare.

They went on, and inferred that, if the world were a living creature, it had a soul. Bacon's Natural History.

When Rome shall wend to Benevento,
Great feats shall be achieved. Arbutnot.

2. To turn round. It seems to be an old sea term.

A ship of 600 tons will carry as good ordinance as a ship of 1200 tons; and though the greater have double the number, the lesser will turn her broadside twice, before the greater can wend once. Ratcliff.

WENNEL. n. f. [a corrupted word for wenling.] An animal newly taken from the dam.

Pinch never thy wennel's of water or meat,
It ever ye hope for to have them good near. Tassier.

WENNY. adj. [from wenn.] Having the nature of a wen.

Some persons so deformed with these, have suspected them to be wenny. Wise man's Surgery.

WENT. pt. [See WEND and Go] and a right line to the object, we can hear in the dark, immured, and by curve lines.

Hulder's Elements of Speech.

Whereas at first we have only three of these principles, their number is already swollen to five.
Baier on Learning.

4. But on the contrary.

One imagines that the terrestrial matter, which is showered down with rain, enlarge the bulk of the earth; another fancies that the earth will eu-long all be washed away by rains, and the waters of the ocean turned forth to overwhelm the dry land:
whereas, by this distribution of matter, conuiprovision is every where made for the supply of bodies.
Woodward.

all animals from single pairs, even to make the second of a pair, is to write after a copy. Bentley.

WHETSTONE. n. f. [whet and stone.]
Stone on which any thing is whetted, or rubbed to make it sharp.

The minds of the afflicted do never think they have fully conceived the weight or measure of their own woe: they use their affection as a whetstone
both to wit and memory. Hooker.

What avail'd her resolution chaste,
Whose soberest looks were whetstones to desire?
Fairfax.

These the whetstone sharps to eat,
And cry, millstones are good meat. Ben Jonson.
Diligence is to the understanding as the whet- stone to the razor; but the will is the hand that must apply the one to the other. South.

A whetstone is not an instrument to carve with,
but it sharpens those that do. Shakspeare. Illustrated.

WHETTER. n. f. [from whet.] One that whets or sharpens.

Love and enmity are notable whetters and quickeners of the spirit of life in all animals. More.

WHEY. n. f. [hwæg, Saxon; wey, Dutch.]

1. The thin or serous part of milk, from which the oleose or grumous part is separated.

I'll make you feed on curds and whey. Shakspeare.
Milk is nothing but blood turned white, by being affixed with a greater quantity of serum or whey in the glandules of the breast. Harvey on Consumptions.

2. It is used of any thing white and thin.

Those thin cheeks of thine
Are counsellors to fear. What, soldiers whey face?
Shakspeare.

WHE'Y. adj. [from whey.] Partak-WHE'YISH. ing of whey; resembling whey.

Those meditations, being opening and piercing, fortify the operation of the liver, in sending down the whey part of the blood to the reins.

Bacon's Natural History.

He that quaffs
Such wheyish liquors, oft with cholick pangs He'll roar. Philips.

WHICH. pron. [hwic, Saxon; welc,
Dutch.]

1. The pronoun relative, relating to things.

The apostles term it the pledge of our heavenly inheritance, sometimes the handcl or earnest of that which is to come. Hooker.

In destructions by deluge, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant. Bacon.

To which their want of judging abilities, add also their want of opportunity to apply to such consideration as may let them into the true goodness and evil of things, which are qualities which feldom display themselves to the first view.

South's Sermons.

The queen of furies by their side is set,
And snatches from their mouths th' untasted meat,
Which if they touch, her hissing snakes she rears.

Dryden.

After the several earths, consider the parts of the surface of this globe which are barren, as sand and rocks. Locke.

2. It had formerly sometimes the before it.

Do they not blaspheme that worthy name by the which ye are called? James, ii. 7.

3. It formerly was used for who, and related likewise to persons: as in the first words of the Lord's Prayer.

The Almighty, which giveth wisdom to whomsoever it pleaseth him, do, for the good of his church, slay those eager affections. Hooker.

Do you hear, Sir, of a battle?

—Every one hears that.

Which can distinguish sound. Shakspeare. King Lear.

Had I been there, which am a silly woman,

The soldiers should have cut me on their pikes

Before I would have granted to that act.

Shakspeare's Henry VI.

4. The genitive of which, as well as of who, is whose; but whose, as derived from which, is scarcely used but in poetry.

Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste. Milton.

5. It is sometimes a demonstrative: as, take which you will.

What is the night?

—Almost at odds with morning, which is which.

Shakspeare.

6. It is sometimes an interrogative: as,
which is the man?

Which of you convinceth me of sin? John.

For which of these works do ye stone me? John.

Two fair twins,

The pursued strangers which is which enquire.

Ticket.

WHICHSOEVER. pron. [which and forever.]
Whether one or the other.

Whichsoever of these he takes, and how often soever he doubles it, he finds that he is not one lot nearer the end of such addition than at first setting out. Locke.

WHIFF. n. f. [chwyt, Welsh.] A blast;
a puff of wind.

Pyrrhus at Priam drives, in rage strikes wide;
But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword
Th' unparried father falls. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

If some unwar'ry whiff betray the crime,
Invest a quarrel straight. Dryden.
Three pipes after dinner he constantly smokes,
And feathers his whiffs with impertinent jukes. Prior.

Nick pulled out a boatswain's whistle: upon the first whiff the tradesmen came jumping in. Arch.
TO WHIFFLE. v. n. [from whiff.] To move incessantly, as if driven by a puff of wind.

Nothing is more familiar, than for a whiffing
fop, that has not one grain of the sense of a man of honour, to play the hero. L'Estrange.

Was our reason given to be thus puff'd about,
Like a dry leaf, an idle straw, a feather,
The sport of ev'ry whiffing blast that blows?

Rowe.

A person of a whiffing and unsteady turn of mind cannot keep close to a point of controversy, but wanders from it perpetually. Watson.

WHIFFLER. n. f. [from whiffle.]

1. An ancient officer of state.

The beech

Pales in the flood with men, with wives and boys, Whose shouts and claps outvoice the deep-mouth'd sea.

Which, like a mighty whiffler fore the king,
Seems to prepare his way. Shakspeare's Henry V.

2. One of no consequence; one moved with a whiff or puff.

Our fine young ladies retain in their service a great number of supernumerary and insignificant fellows, which they use like whiffles, and commonly call shoeing-horns. Spektor.

Every whiffler in a laced coat, who frequents
the chocolate-house, shall talk of the constitution.

Swift.

WHIG. n. f. [hwæg, Saxon.]

1. Whey.

2. The name of a faction.

The south-west counties of Scotland have seldom corn enough to serve them round the year; and the northern parts producing more than they need, those in the west come in the summer to buy at Leith the stores that come from the north; and from a word, whiggam, used in driving their horses, all that drove were called the whiggamors, and shorter the whigs. Now in that year, before the news came down of duke Hamilton's defeat, the ministers animated their people to rise and march to Edinburgh; and they came up marching at the head of their parishes with an unheard-of fury, praying and preaching all the way as they came. The marquis of Argyll and his party came and headed them, they being about six thousand.
This was called the whiggamors inroad; and, ever after that, all that opposed the court came in contempt to be called whigs; and from Scotland the word was brought into England, where it is now one of our unhappy terms of division. Burnet.

Whoever has a true value for church and state, should avoid the extremes of whig for the sake of the former, and the extremes of tory on the account of the latter. Swift.

WHIGGISH. adj. [from whig.] Relating to the whigs.

She'll prove herself a tory plain,
From principles the whigs maintain;
And, to defend the whiggish cause,
Her topics from the tories draws. Swift.

WHIGGISM. n. f. [from whig.] The notions of a whig.

I could quote passages from fifty pamphlets, wholly made up of whiggish and atheism. Swift.

WHILE. w. f. [wuil, German; hwile,
Saxon.] Time; space of time.

If my beauty be any thing, then let it obtain this much of you, that you will remain some while in this company, to ease your own travel and our solitude. Sidney.

I have seen her rise from her bed, and again return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep.

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

One

One while we thought him innocent,
And then we accus'd the consul, Ben Jonson's Catalogue.
We saw him feeding come,
And on his necke a burthen lugging home,
Most highly huge, of fere-wood; which the pile
That fed his fire supplide all supper while. Chap.
I hope all ingenuous persons will advertise me fairly, if they think it worth their while, of what they dislike in it. D. ghy.
Pausing a while, thus to herself she mus'd.

How couldst thou look for other, but that God should condemn thee for the doing of those things for which thine own conscience did condemn thee
all the while thou wast doing of them? Tillotson.
That which I have all this while been endeavouring to convince men to, is no other but what God himself doth particularly recommend. Tillotson.
Few, without the hope of another life, would think it worth their while to live above the allu-ments of sense. Astbury.
What fate has dispos'd of the papers, 'tis not worth while to tell. Locke.

WHILE. } adv. [hpile, Saxon. Whiles is WHILES. } now out of use.]
WHILST. }

1. During the time that.

Whiles I was protector, Pity was all the fault that was in me. Shakespeare. Henry VI.
What we have, we prize not to the worth
Whiles we enjoy it; but being lackt and lost,
Why then we rick the value. Shakespeare.
Repeated, while the sedentary earth
Attains her end. Milton.

2. As long as.

Use your memory; you will sensibly experience a gradual improvement, while you take care not to overload it. Watts.

3. At the same time that.

Whiles by the experiment of this mislustration they glorify God, for your professed subjection unto the gospel. 2 Cor. ix.
Can he imagine that God sends forth an irresistible strength against some sins, whilst in others he permits men a power of repelling his grace?
Decay of Piety.

All hearts shall bend, and ev'ry voice
In loud applauding shouts rejoice;
While all his gracious aspect praise,
And crowds grow loyal as they gaze. Addison.
He fits attentive to his own applause;
While wits and templars ev'ry sentence raise,
And wonder with a foolish face of praise. Pope.

To WHILE. v. n. [from the noun.] To loiter.

Men guilty this way never have observed that the whiling time, the gathering together, and waiting a little before dinner, is the most awkwardly passed away of any. Spectator.

WHILERS. adv. [while and ere, or be-fore.] A little while ago; ere while. Not in use.

That cursed wight from whom I fear'd whilers,
A man of hell, that calls himself Despair. Spenser.
Let us be jocund: will you trowl the catch
You taught me but while-ere? Shakespeare.
Those armies, that while-ere Affrighted all the world, by him struck dead with fear. Drayton.
Here lies Hobbinol, our shepherd whilers. Ral.
He who, with all heav'n's heraldry, whilers
Enter'd the world, now bleeds to give us ease. Milton.

WHILOM. adv. [hpiom, Saxon, that is, once on a time.] Formerly; once; of old. Not in use.

Where now the studious lawyers have their bowers,
There whilom wont the Templar knights abide,
Till they decayed through pride. Spenser.
In northern clime a val'rous knight
Did whilom kill his bear in fight,
And wound a fiddler. Hudibras.

Yet art thou not inglorious in thy fate;
For to Apollo, with unweeding hand,
Whilom did lay his dearly loved mate. Milton.

WHIM. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from a thing turning round; nor can I find any etymology more probable.] A freak; an odd fancy; a caprice; an irregular motion of desire.

All the superfluous whims relate,
That fill a female gamester's pate. Swift.
He learnt his whims and high-flown notions too,
Such as fine men adopt, and fine men rue. Harve.

To WHIMPER. v. n. [wimieren, German.] To cry without any loud noise.

The father by his authority should always stop this sort of crying, and silence their whimpering. Locke.

A laughing, toying, wheedling, whimpering the Shall make him amble on a gossip's message. Rowe.
In peals of thunder now the roars, and now
She gently whimpers like a lowing cow. Swift.
WHIMPER. adj. [I suppose from whimper.] This word seems to mean distorted with crying.

This whimpered, whining, purblind, wayward boy,

This signior Junio's giant dwarf, Dan Cupid,
Regent of love-rhymes, lord of folded arms,
Th' anointed sovereign of sighs and groans. Shak.

WHIMSEY. n. f. [only another form of the word whim.] A freak; a caprice; an odd fancy; a whim.

At this rate a pretended freak or whimsy may be palliated. L'Estrange.

All the ridiculous and extravagant shapes that can be imagined, all the fancies and whimsies of poets and painters, and Egyptian idolaters, if so be they are consistent with life and propagation, would be now actually in being, if our atheists notion were true. Ray on the Creation.

So now, as health or temper changes,
In larger compass Alma ranges;
This day below, the next above,
As light or solid whimsies move. Prior.

What I speak, my fair Chloe, and what I write, shows
The difference there is betwixt nature and art;
I court others in verse, but I love thee in prose,
And they have my whimsies, but thou hast my heart. Prior.

Oranges in whimsy-boards went round. King.
He spoke this with such a sedate and undisturbed mind, that I could not impute it to melancholy, or a spleenetic whimsy. Blackmore.

Th' extravagance of poetry
Is at a loss for figures to express
Men's folly, whimsies, and inconstancy. Swift.

WHIMSICAL. adj. [from whimsy.] Freakish; capricious; oddly fanciful.

In another circumstance I am particular, or, as my neighbours call me, whimsical: as my garden invites into it all the birds, I do not suffer any one to destroy their nests. Addison.

WHIN. n. f. [chwyn, Welsh; genista spi- noza, Latin.] Furze; gorse.

With whins or with furzes thy hovel renew. Tull.
Plants that have prickles in their leaf are holly, juniper, whin-bush, and thistle. Bacon.

To WHINE. v. n. [pansan, Saxon; wu- nen, Dutch; cwyno, Welsh.] To lament in low murmurs; to make a plaintive noise; to moan meanly and effemi- nately.

They came to the wood, where the hounds were in couples staying their coming, but with a whining accent craving liberty. Sidney.

At his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory.

That pages b'ush'd at him. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
Twice and once the hedge-pig whin'd. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Whip him,
Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
And whine aloud for mercy. Shakespeare. Antony and Cleopatra.

The common people have a whining tone and accent in their speech, as if they did still suffer some oppression. Darwin.

Then if we whine, look pale,
And tell our tale,
Men are in pain
For us again;
So neither speaking doth become
The lover's state, nor being dumb. Suckling.
He made a viler noise than swine
In windy weather, when they whine. Hudibras.
Some, under sleep's cloathing, had the properties of wolves; that is, they could whine and howl, as well as bite and devour. South's Sermons.
I was not born to bask to flatter crowds,
And move your pity by a whining tale. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

Laughing at their whining may perhaps be the proper method. Locke.

Life was given for noble purposes; and therefore it must not be sacrificed to a quarrel, nor whim'd away in love. Collier.

Upon a general mourning, mercers and woollendrapers would in four-and-twenty hours raise their cloths and silks to above a double price, and, if the mourning continued long, come whining with petitions to the court, that they were ready to starve. Swift.

WHINE. n. f. [from the verb.] Plaintive noise; mean or affected complaint.

The favourable opinion of men comes oftentimes by a few demure looks and affected whines, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces. Scot.

Thy hateful whine of woe
Breaks in upon my sorrows, and distracts
My jarring senses with thy beggar's cry. Rowe's Jane Shore.

To WHINNY. v. n. [hinno, Latin; from the sound.] To make a noise like a horse or colt.

WHINYARD. n. f. [pinnan and ape, to gain honour, Saxon. Skinner. I know not whether this word was ever used seriously, and therefore perhaps it might be denominated in contempt from whin, a tool to cut whins.] A sword; in contempt.

He snatch'd his whinyard up, that fled
When he was falling off his steed. Hudibras.

To WHIP. v. a. [hpeopan, Saxon; wip- pen, Dutch.]

1. To strike with any thing tough and flex- ible.

He took
The harness'd steeds, that still with horror shook,
And plies them with the lash, and whips ent on;
And, as he whips, upbraids 'em with his son. Addison.

2. To sew slightly.

In half whip muslin needles uselest lie. Gay.

3. To drive with lashes.

This unheard sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dvarish war, these pigmy arm,
From out the circle of his territories. Shakespeare. King John.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again:
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars. Shakespeare. Richard III.

Since I pluckt geese, play'd truant, and whipped top, I knew not what it was to be beaten till lately. Shakespeare.

If ordered every day to whip his top so long as to make him weary, he will wish for his back, if you promise it him as a reward of having whipped his top lustily quite out. Locke.

Whip cream; unfortified with wine or fence!
Froth'd by that flattery muse, indifference. Hudibras.

4. To correct with lashes.

I'll leave you to the hearing of the cause,
Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all.
Shakespeare.

Reason is the fellow,
Before you runneth home, where he heard this,
Let you have a chance to whip your information.
Shakespeare.

Firstly we for some raw pin-fetched thing
Attempt to mount, and fight and heroes sing,
When to the quarters was whipt at school
But other day, and speaking grammar-rule.
Dryden.

How did he return this haughty brave,
Who whipt the wind, and made the sea his slave?
Dryden.

This requires more than setting children a task,
Not whipping them, without any more ado, if it
Is not done to our taste.
Locke.

Oh chain me! whip me! let me be the frown
Of fabled riddles and bustling crowds!
Give me but life. Smith's Phædra and Hippolitus.

Heir, to titles and large estates, have a weakness
In their eyes, and are not able to bear the pain and Indignity of whipping.
Swift.

5. To lash with sarcasm.

They would whip me with their fine wits, till
I was as cretched as a blind pear.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

6. To inwrap.

It is thus firmly whipt about with small guts,
That it may the easier move in the edge of the rowler.
Mason's M. B. Exercises.

To WHIP. v. a. To take any thing nimble: always with a particle ascertaining the sense; as, out, on, up, away.
A ludicrous use.

In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
He whips his rapier out, and cries, a rat!
And in this brainish apprehension kills
The unseen good old man. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
She in a hurry whips up her dailing under her arm.
L'Estrange.

Raise yourself upon your hinder legs, and then stretch out your head: I can easily whip up to your horns, and to out of the well. L'Estrange.
Brisk Susan whips her linen from the rope,
Whilst the first drizzling shower is born alope.
Swift.

Thus disposed, it lies ready for you to whip it out in a moment.
Swift.

To WHIP. v. n. To move nimbly. A ludicrous word.

Two friends travelling together, met a bear upon the way: the one whips up a tree, and the other thrusts himself flat up the ground. L'Estrange.
The simple squire made a sudden start to follow, but the justice of the quorum whipped between.
Tatler.

WHIP. n. f. [hpeop, Saxon.] An instrument of correction tough and pliant.

There sat infernal Pain,
And fast beside him sat tumultuous Suffer;
The one in hand an iron whip did strain,
The other brandish'd a bloody knife. Spenser.
Put in every household a whip,
To lash the rascal naked through the world.
Shakespeare's Othello.

Love is merely a madness, and deserves as well a dark-house and a whip as madmen do. Shakespeare.
High on her head she wears two twisted snakes,
Her chain she rattles, and her whip she shakes.
Dryden.

In his right hand he holds the whip, with which he is supposed to drive the horses of the sun. Add.

WHIP and spur. With the utmost haste.

Each saucy polemick Came whip and spur, and dash'd thro' thin and thick.
Dunciad.

WHIPCORD. n. f. [whip and cord.] Cord of which lashes are made.

In Raphael's first works are many small fold-ings, often repeated, which look like so many whipcords. Dryden.

WHIPGRAFTING. n. f. [In gardening.]
A kind of grafting.

WHIPHAND. n. f. [whip and hand.]
Advantage over.

The archangel, when Discord was restive, and would not be drawn from her beloved monastery with fair words, has the whip hand of her, and drags her out with many stripes. Dryden.

WHIPPLASH. n. f. The lash or small end of a whip.

Have whiplash well knotted and cartrope lough.
Tuffin.

WHIPPER. n. f. [from whip.] One who punishes with whipping.

Love is merely a madness, and deserves as well a dark-house and a whip as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished is, that the whippers are in love too. Shakespeare.

WHIPPINGPOST. n. f. [whip and post.]
A pillar to which criminals are bound when they are lashed.

Could not the whippingpost prevail,
With all its rhetoric, nor the jail,
To keep from slaying scourge thy skin,
And ankle free from iron gin?
Hudibras.

WHIPSAW. n. f. [whip and saw.]
The whipsaw is used by joiners to saw such great pieces of stuff that the hand saw will not easily reach through. Mason.

WHIPSTAFF. n. f. [On shipboard.] A piece of wood fastened to the helm, which the steersman holds in his hand to move the helm and turn the ship.

WHIPSTER. n. f. [from whip.] A nimble fellow.

I am not valiant neither;
But ev'ry puny whipster gets my sword.
Shakespeare's Othello.

Give that whipster but his errand,
He takes my lord chief justice' warrant. Prior.

WHIPT, for whipped.
In Bridewell a number be whipt.
Lesse worthe than these to be whipt. Tuffin.

To WHIRL. v. a. [whirlan, Saxon; wirbelen, Dutch.] To turn round rapidly.

My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel:
I know not where I am, nor what I do.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

He whirls his sword around without delay,
And hews through adverse foes an ample way.
Dryden.

With his full force he whirl'd it first around;
But the soft yielding air received the wound.
Dryden.

The Stygian flood,
Falling from on high, with following sound
Whirls the black waves and rattling stones around.
Addison.

With impetuous motion whirl'd apace,
This magick wheel still moves, yet keeps its place.
Graville.

They have even been taught by their senses, that the sun, with all the planets and the fixed stars are whirled round this globe.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

To WHIRL. v. n.

1. To run round rapidly.

He, rapt with whirling wheels, inflames the skyen
With fire not made to burn, but fairly tor to shine.
Spenser.

Five moons were seen to-night,
Four fixed, and the fifth did whirl about
The other four in wondrous motion.
Shakespeare's King John.

As young whippings whirl the top for sport
On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about,
Admir'd with clamours of the beardless rout. Dry.

Wild and distracted with their fears,
They whirling plunge amidst the foundering deeps;
The flood away the struggling squadron sweeps,
And men, and arms, and horses whirling bears.
Smith.

2. To move hastily.

She what he swears regards no more Than the deaf rocks when the loud billows roar;
But whirl'd away to shun his hateful sight,
Hid in the forest. Dryden's Æneid.

WHIRL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Gyration; quick rotation; circular motion; rapid circumvolution.

'Twere well your judgments but in plays did range;
But ev'n your follies and debauches change
With such a whirl, the poets of your age
Are tir'd, and cannot seize them on the stage. Dryden.

Wings raise my feet; I'm pleas'd to mount on high,
Trace all the mazes of the liquid sky;
Their various turnings and their whirls declare,
And live in the vast regions of the air.
Grech's Manilius.

Nor whirl of time, nor flight of years, can wait.
Crab.

I have been watching what thoughts came up in the whirl of fancy, that were worth communicating. Pope.

How the ear rattles, how its kindling wheels
Smoke in the whirl: the chiding sand ascends,
And in the noble dust the chariot's lost. Smith.

2. Any thing moved with rapid rotation.

For though in dreadful whirls we hung
High on the broken wave,
I knew thou wert not flow to heav'n,
Nor impotent to save. Addison's Spectator.

WHIRLBAT. n. f. [whirl and bat.] Any thing moved rapidly round to give a blow. It is frequently used by the poets for the ancient cestus.

At whirlbat he had slain many, and was now himself slun by Pollux. L'Estrange.

The whirlbat's falling blow they nimbly shun,
And win the race ere they begin to run.
Grech's Manilius.

The guardian angels of kingdoms he rejected, as Mars did the whirlbats of Lryx, when they were thrown before him by Entellus. Dryden.

The whirlbat and the rapid race shall be Reserv'd for Cæsar, and ordain'd by me.
Dryden's Virgil.

WHIRLBONE. n. f. The patella; the cap of the knee.

WHIRLIGIG. n. f. [whirl and gig.] A toy which children spin round.

He found that marbles taught him percussion,
And whirligigs the axis in peritrochio.
Abutnot and Pope's Mart. Scutellus.

That since they gave things their beginning,
And let this whirligig a-spinning. Prior.

WHIRLPIRE. } n. f. [whyrp-pole, Saxon.]
WHIRLPOOL. } A place where the water moves circularly, and draws whatever comes within the circle towards its center; a vortex.

Poor Tom! whom the foul fiend hath led through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire. Shakespeare's King Lear.

In the fathomless profound Down sunk they like a falling stone,
By raging whirlpools overthrown. Sandys.

This calm of heaven, this mermaid's melody,
Into an unseen whirlpool draws you fast,
And in a moment sinks you. Dryd. Spem. Fragm.

Send forth, ye wife! send forth your lab'ring thought:
Let it return with empty notions fraught
Of airy columns every moment broke,
Of circling whirlpools, and of spheres of smoke.
Prior.

There might arise some vertiginous motions of whirlpools.

whirlpools in the matter of the chaos, whereby the atoms must be thrust and crowded to the middle of those whirlpools, and there congregate one another into great solid bodies. Bentley.

WHIRLWIND. n. f. [werbelwind, German.] A stormy wind moving circularly.

In the very torrent and whirlwind of your passion, beget a temperance that may give it smoothness. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

With whirlwinds from beneath the totter'd cup,
And bare expos'd the bosom of the deep. Dryden's T. Mac.

WHIRRING. adj. A word formed in imitation of the sound expressed by it.

From th' brake the whirling pleasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant wings. Pope.

WHISK. n. f. [wischen, to wipe, German.]

1. A small belom, or brush.

The white of an egg, though in part transparent, yet being long agitated with a whisk or spon, loses its transparency. B. y.

If you break any china with the top of the whisk on the mantel-piece, gather up the fragments. Swift.

2. A part of a woman's dress.

An easy means to prevent being one farthing the worse for the abatement of interest, is wearing a lawn whisk instead of a point de Venise. Child on Trade.

To WHISK. v. a. [wischen, to wipe, German.]

1. To sweep with a small belom.

2. To move nimbly, as when one sweeps.

Cardan believ'd great states depend Upon the tip of the lion's tail's end;
That, as the whisk'd it towards the sun,
Stow'd mighty empires up and down. Hudib.

WHISKER. n. f. [from whisk.] The hair growing on the cheek unshaven; the mustachio.

A sacrifice to fall of state,
Whose throat of life the fatal fibres
Did twist together with its whiskers. Hudibras.

Behold four kings, in majesty over'd,
With hoary whiskers and a lanky beard. Pope.

A painter added a pair of whiskers to the face. Addison.

To WHISPER. v. n. [wisperen, Dutch.]

To speak with a low voice, so as not to be heard but by the ear close to the speaker; to speak with suspicion or timorous caution.

He sometime with fearful countenance would Desire the king to look to himself; for that all the court and city were full of whisperings, and expectation of some sudden change. Sidney.

All that hate me whisper together against me. Psalms xli. 7.

In speech of man, the whispering or whispering, whether louder or softer, is an interior sound, but the speaking out is an exterior sound; and therefore you can never make a tone, nor sing, in whispering, but in speech you may. Bacon.

The king Aetidis calls;

Then softly whisper'd in her faithful ear,
And bade his daughters at the rites appear. Pope.

It is as offensive to speak wit in a fool's company, as it would be ill manners to whisper in it; he is displeased at both, because he is ignorant of what is said. Pope.

The hollow whispering breeze, the pliant rills
Purle down amid the twisted roots. Thomson.

To WHISPER. v. a.

1. To address in a low voice.

When they talk of him, they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear. Shakespeare's King John.

Give sorrow words; the grief that does not speak
Whispers the o'erfraught heart, and bids it break. Shakespeare.

He first whispers the man in the ear, that such a man should think such a card. Bacon's Natural History.

The steward whispered the young Templar, that's true to my knowledge. Taylor.

2. To utter in a low voice.

You have heard of the news abroad, I mean the whispered ones; for they are yet but ear kissing arguments. Shakespeare.

Sit and eat your bread,
Nor whisper more a word; or get ye gone,
And weep without doors. Clayman.

They might buzz and whisper it one to another, and, tacitly withdrawing from the public, noise it about the city. Bentley.

3. To prompt secretly.

Charles the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
For 'twas indeed his colour, but he came To whisper Wolsey, here makes visitation. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

WHISPER. n. f. [from the verb.] A low soft voice; cautious and timorous speech.

The extension is more in tones than in speech; therefore the inward voice or whisper cannot give a tone. Bacon.

Strictly observe the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in the heart, and this will keep conscience quick and vigilant. South.

Soft whispers through th' assembly went. Dryden.

He uncall'd, his patron to controul,
Divulg'd the secret whispers of his soul. Dryden.

With such like false whispers, in former reigns,
The ears of princes have been poisoned. Leavenant.

WHISPERER. n. f. [from whisper.]

1. One that speaks low.

2. A private talker; a teller of secrets; a conveyer of intelligence.

Kings trust in eunuchs hath rather been as to good spies and good whisperers than good magistrates. Bacon.

WHIST. [This word is called by Skinner, who seldom errs, an interjection commanding silence, and so it is commonly used; but Shakespeare uses it as a verb, and Milton as an adjective or a participle.]

1. Are silent.

Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands,
Curst be when you have, and lift,
The wild waves whist. Shakespeare's Tempest.

2. Still; silent; put to silence.

The winds, with wonder whist,
Smoothly the waters kiss'd,
Whispering new joys to the mild ocean. Milton.

3. Be still.

WHIST. n. f. A game at cards, requiring close attention and silence: vulgarly pronounced whist.

The clergyman used to play at whist and *swob*bers. Swift.

Whisk his grave round, beneath a cloud of smoke
Wreath'd fragrant from the pipe. Thomson.

To WHISTLE. v. n. [hpyrtlan, Saxon; fistulo, Latin.]

1. To form a kind of musical sound by an inarticulate modulation of the breath.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard:
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle. Shakespeare.

Let one whistle at the one end of a trunk, and hold your ear at the other, and the sound shall strike so sharp as you can scarce endure it. Bacon's Natural History.

While the plowman near at hand
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land. Milton.

Should Bertran sound his trumpets,
And Torrismond but whistle through his fingers,
He draws his army off. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

He whistled as he went for want of thought. Dryden.

The ploughman leaves the task of day,
And trudging homeward whistles on the way. Cay.

2. To make a sound with a small wind instrument.

3. To sound shrill.

His big manly voice
Changing again toward childish treble pipes,
He whistles in his sound. Shakespeare.

Soft whistles run along the leafy woods,
And mountains whistle to the murm'ring floods. Dryden.

Rhetus from the hearth a burning brand
Selects, and whirling waves, till from his hand
The fire took flame, then dash'd it from the sight
On whistling temples, near the sight
Then whistling past came on. Dryden.

When winged death in whistling arrows fly,
Wilt thou, though wounded, yet undaunted stay,
Perform thy part, and share the dangerous day? Prior.

The wild winds whistle, and the billows roar,
The splitting east the various tempest tore. Pope.

To WHISTLE. v. a. To call by a whistle.

Let him whistle them backwards and forwards,
till he is weary. South's Sermons.

He chinked to miss his dog: we stood still till he had whistled him up. Addison.

When simple pride for flattery makes demands,
May dunces by dunces be whistled off my hands! Pope.

WHISTLE. n. f. [hpyrtle, Saxon.]

1. Sound made by the modulation of the breath in the mouth.

My fire in caves constrains the winds,
Can with a breath their clamorous rage appease;
They tear his whistle, and forsake the seas. Dryden.

2. A sound made by a small wind instrument.

3. The mouth; the organ of whistling.

Let's drink the other cup to wet our whistles, and bring away all sad thoughts. Walton's Angler.

4. A small wind instrument.

The masters and pilots were so astonished, that they knew not how to direct; and if they knew, they could scarcely, when they directed, hear their own whistles. Sidney.

Behold
Upon the hempen tackle shipboys climbing;
Hear the shrill whistles, which doth order give
To founds and confus'd. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Small whistles, or shepherds' cat's-pipes, give a sound because of their extreme slenderness, whereby the air is more pent than in a wider pipe. Bacon's Natural History.

His infant grandame's whistle next it grew,
The bells the jangled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

5. The noise of winds

6. A call, such as sportsmen use to their dogs.

Madam, here comes my lord.—
—I have been with the whistle. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The knight, pursuing this epistle,
Believ'd he'd brought her to his whistle. Hudib.

WHISTLER. n. f. [from whistle.] One who whistles.

The price was a guinea, to be conferred upon the ablest whistler, who could whistle clearest, and go through his tune without laughing. Addison.

WHIT. n. f. [whit, a thing; aphit, any thing, Saxon.] A point; a jot.

We love, and are no whit regarded. Sidney.

Her sacred book with blood ywir,
That none could read except she did him teach,
She unto him disclosed every whit,
And heavenly documents therewith did preach. Spenser.

The motive cause of doing it is not in ourselves, but carrieth us as if the wind should drive a feather in the air; we no whit furthering that whereby we are driven. Hooker.

Although the lord became the king's tenant, his

his country was no whit reformed thereby, but remained in the former barbarism. Daniel on Jerl.

Nature's full blessings would be well dispens'd
In unsuperfluous, even proportion,
And the no whit encounter'd with her store. Mit.

It does not me a whit a spleat,
That the rich all honours be so. Corvey.
In the arts of ancient times, it ought to satisfy any enquirer, if they can be brought any whit near one another. Tillotson

It is every whit as honourable to assist a good minister, as to oppose a bad one. Addison's True Lover.
WHITE. a. fr. [hyge, Saxon; wit, Dutch.]

1. Having such an appearance as arises from the mixture of all colours; snowy.

When the paper was held nearer to any colour than to the rest, it appeared of that colour to which it approached in itself, but when it was equally, or almost equally, distant from all the colours, so that it might be equally illuminated by them all, it appeared white. Newton's Opticks.

Why round our coaches crowd the white gley beaus? Pope.

2. Having the colour of fear; pale

My hands are of your colour, but I blame
To wear a heart to white. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. Having the colour appropriated to happiness and innocence.

Welcome, pure eye'd youth, a kist-head'd hope,
Thou hovering angel part with gentle wing;
And thou wisdom sh'd form of chastity. Milton.

Wait thou that sweet smiling youth?
Or that crown'd matron sage, white-robed Truth?
Milton.

Let this suspicious morning be expit
With a white stone distinguish'd from the rest,
White is thy fun, and as thy honour clear;
And let new joys attend on thy new-added year.
Dryden

To fruitful mirth be this white hour assign'd,
And sweet discourse, the banquet of the mind.
Pope.

Peace o'er the world her olive wand extend,
And white-robd innocence from heav'n descend.
Pope.

4. Grey with age.

I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughter join'd
Your high-engender'd battles 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shakespeare's King Lear.

So minutes, hours, and days, weeks, months,
and years,
Past over, to the end they were created,
Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave. Shak.

5. Pure; unblemished.

Unhappy Dryden! in all Charles's days,
Recomm in only boasts unspotted lays;
And in our own, excuse some courtly stains,
No whiter page than Addison's remains. Pope.

WHITE. n. f.

1. Whiteness; any thing white; white colour.

My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies,
Finely attird in a robe of white. Shakespeare.

A friend coming to visit me, I stopped him at the door, and before I told him what the colours were, or what I was doing, I asked him which of the two whites were the best, and wherein they differed? and after he had at that distance viewed them well, he answered, that they were both good whites, and that I could not say which was best, nor wherein their colours differed. Newton's Opticks.

2. The mark at which an arrow is shot, which used to be painted white.

If a mark be set up for an archer at a great distance, let him aim as exactly as he can, the least wind shall take his arrow, and divert it from the white. Dryden.

Remove him, then, and all your plots fly swift,
Point blank, and level to the very white
Of your designs. Southern.

3. The albugineous part of eggs.

I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs
To apply to a bleeding face. Shakespeare.

The strongest repellents are the whites of new-laid eggs beaten to a froth with alum.

Wifeman's Surgery.

When fares among the stars do grow,
Thou into the close nests of time dost peep;
And there, with piercing eye,
Through the firm shell and the thick white dost spy

Years to come a-forming lie,
Close in their sacred fondness asleep. Corvey.

What principle manages the white and yolk of an egg into such a variety of textures, as is requisite to fashion a chick? B. ylc.

The two internal regions represent the yolk and the membran that lies next above it; so the exterior region of the earth is as the shell of the egg, and the abyss under it as the white that lies under the shell. Burnet.

4. The white part of the eye.

Our general himself
Touches himself with his hand,
And turns up the white of his eye to his discourse.
Shakespeare.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but rises up, as a hillock, above its convexity.
Ray.

TO WHITE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

To make white, to dealbare, to whitewash.

His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow, so as no furbur on earth could be them.
Mark, ix. 3.

Like unto whitened sepulchre, which appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones. Matth. xxiii.

WHITELEAD. n. f.

White-lead is made by taking sheet-lead, and having cut it into long and narrow slips, they make it up into rolls, but so that a small distance may remain between every spiral revolution. These rolls are put into earthen pots, so ordered that the lead may not sink down above hand way, or some small matter more, in them: these pots have each of them very sharp vinegar in the bottom, so full as almost to touch the lead. When the vinegar and lead have both been put into the pot, it is covered up close, and so left for a certain time;
in which space the corrosive fumes of the vinegar will reduce the surface of the lead into a mere white calc, which they separate by knocking it with a hammer. There are two sorts of this sold at the colour shops, the one called ceruse, which is the most pure part, and the other is called white lead. Quincy.

WHITELIVRED. adj. [from white and liver.] Envious; malicious; cowardly.

WHITELY. adj. [from white.] Coming near to white.

A whitely wanton, with a velvet brow,
With two pitch balls stuck in her face for eyes.
Shakespeare.

Now, governor, I see that I must blush
Quite through this veil of night a whitely shame,
To think I could design to make those free
Who were by nature slaves. Southern's Oronoko.

WHITEMEAT. n. f. [white and meat.]
Food made of milk.

Much saltiness in whitemeat is ill for the stone.
Tusser.

The Irish banished into the mountains, lived only upon whitemeats. Spenser.

TO WHITEN. v. a. [from white.] To make white.

The smoke of sulphur will not black a paper, and is commonly used by women to whiten tiffanies. Brown.

Flax the soil and climate are proper for whitening, by the frequency of brooks, and also of winds.
Temple.

Women of my complexion ought to be more modest, especially since our faces debar us from all artificial whitenings. Guardian.

Striking her cliff, the storm confirms her pow'r;
The waves but whiten her triumphant shore. Prior.

Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skwer to write;
In durance, exile, Bedlam, or the mint,
Like Lee or Budgell, I will rhyme and print. Pope.

TO WHITEN. v. n. To grow white.

The bark expects its freight;
The loosen'd canvas trembles with the wind,
And the sea whitens with auspicious gales. Smith.

WHITENER. n. f. [from whiten.] One who makes any thing white.

WHITENESS. n. f. [from white.]

1. The state of being white; freedom from colour.

This doth lead me to her hand,
Of my first love the fatal band,
Where whiteness doth for ever sit;
Nature herself enamell'd it. Sidney.

Whiteness is a mean between all colours, having disposed itself indifferently to them all, so as with equal facility to be tinged with any of them.
Newton's Opticks.

2. Paleness.

Thou tremblest, and the whiteness of thy cheek
Is sorer than thy tongue to tell thy errand. Shak.

3. Purity; cleanness.

The least spot is visible on ermine - but to preserve the whiteness in its original purity, you have, like that sunbe, forsaken the common track of business, which is not always clean. Dryden.

WHITEPOT. n. f. A kind of food.

Cornwall squab-pye, and Devon whitpot blings.
King.

WHITES. n. f. [fluor albus.] It arises from a laxness of the glands of the uterus, and a cold pituitous blood. Quincy.

WHITETHORN. n. f. [Spina alba, Latin.]
A species of thorn.

As little as a whitethorn and a peat-tree form of kin, a cion of the latter will sometimes prosper well, being grafted upon a stock of the former.
Boyle.

WHITEWASH. n. f. [white and wash.]

1. A wash to make the skin seem fair.

The clergy, during Cromwell's usurpation, were very much taken up in reforming the female world;
I have heard a whole sermon against a whitewash.
Addison.

2. A kind of liquid plaster with which walls are whitened.

Four rooms above, below, this mansion grac'd,
With white-wash deckt, and river-sand o'er-cast.
Harte.

WHITEWINE. n. f. [white and wine.]
A species of wine produced from the white grapes.

The seeds and roots are to be cut, beaten, and infused in whitewine. Wifeman's Surgery.

WHITHER. adv. [hyðen, Saxon.]

1. To what place? interrogatively.

Sister, well met; whither away so fast?
—No farther than the Tower. Shak. Richard III.

The common people swarm like summer flies;
And whither fly the gnats but to the sun? Shak.

Ah! whither am I hurried? ah! forgive,
Ye shades, and let your sister's issue live. Dryden.

2. To what place: absolutely.

I fray'd I knew not whither. Milton.

3. To which place: relatively.

Whither when as they came, they fell at words,
Whether of them should be the lord of lords.
Spenser.

At Canterbury, whither some voice was run on before, the mayor seized on them, as they were taking flesh horses. Watton.

That lord advanced to Winchester, whither Sir John Berkley brought him two regiments more of foot. Garnden.

4. To what degree? Obsolete: perhaps never in use.

Whither at length wilt thou abuse our patience?
Still shall thy fury mock us? Ben Jonson.

WHITHERSOEVER. adv. [whither and soever.] To whatsoever place.

For whatever end faith is designed, and whither- soever the nature and intention of the place does drive us, thither we must go, and to that end we must direct all our actions. Taylor.

WHITING. n. f. [whittingh, Dutch; al- burnus, Latin.]

1. A small sea-fish.

Some fish are gutted, split, and kept in pickle,
as whiting and mackerel.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

The muscular fibres of fishes are more tender than those of terrestrial animals, and their whole substance more watery. Some fishes, as whitings, can be almost entirely dissolved into water.

Abraham on Aliments.

2. [from white.] A soft chalk.

That this impregnated liquor may be improved, they put it upon whiting, which is a white chalk or clay, finely powdered, cleaned, and made up into balls. Foyl.

When you clean your plate, leave the whiting plainly to be seen in all the joints. Dr. J.

WHITISH. adj. [from white.] Somewhat white.

The large aqua-fortis, that will quickly change the reddest of red lead into a darker colour, will, being put upon crude lead, produce a whitish substance, as with copper it did a bluish. Boyle.

WHITISHNESS. n. f. [from whitish.]

A little wide

There was a holy chapel edified, Wherein the hermit wont to say

His holy things each morn and even tide. Spenser.

The Chinese, a people whole way of thinking seems to lie as wide of ours in Europe as their country does. Temple.

2. With great extent.

Of all these bounds enrich'd

With plentiful rivers, and wide skirted meads,

We make thee lady. Shakespeare's King Lear.

On the east side of the garden place

Cherubic watch, and of a sword the flame

Wide-waving; all approach far off to fright. Milton.

She open'd, but to shut

Excell'd her power; the gate wide open stood. Milton.

With huge two-handed sway

Brandish'd aloft, the horrid edge came down,

Wide waiving. Milton.

The south wind rose, and with black wings

Wide hovering, all the clouds together drove

From under heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Stretch'd at ease the panting lady lies,

To shun the fervour of meridian skies;

While sweating slaves catch every breeze of air,

And with wide-spreading fans refresh the fair. Gay.

Yet wide was spread their fame in ages past,

And poets once had promis'd they should last. Pope.

WIDELY. adv. [from wide.]

1. With great extent each way.

Any that considers how immense the intervals of the chaos are, in proportion to the bulk of the atoms, will hardly induce himself to believe, that particles so widely diffused could ever throng one another to a compact texture. Bentley.

2. Remotely; far.

Let him exercise the freedom of his reason, and his mind will be strengthened; and the light which the remote parts of truth will give to one another will so assist his judgment, that he will seldom be widely out. Locke.

W I D

To WIDEN. v. a. [from wide.] To make wide; to extend.

So now the gates are open; now prove good fellows.

'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the widens. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

These accidents, when they first happen, seem but small and contemptible; but by degrees they branch out and widens themselves into a numerous train of mischievous consequences. South.

He was accustomed to sleep with a peaceable nose, following in his slumbers the wrinkles of it, and the anger which commonly mounted to that part, but now his nostrils were widened to the full degree of fury. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To WIDEN. v. n. To grow wide; to extend itself.

It is in this that the species of brutes are discriminated from men, and that proper difference wherein they are wholly separated, and which at last widens to so vast a distance. Locke.

With her temple every moment grew,
Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,
And arches widen, and long aisles extend. Pope.

WIDENESS. n. f. [from wide.]

1. Breadth; large extent each way.

The rugged hair began to fall away;
The sweetness of her eyes did only stay;
Though not so large, her crooked brows decreed it;
The wideness of her jaws and nostrils ceased. Dryden.

2. Comparative breadth.

Within the same annual time, the center of the earth is carried above fifty times as far round the orbis magnus, whose wideness we now assume to be twenty thousand terrestrial diameters. Bentley's Sermons.

WIDGEON. n. f. A water-fowl not unlike a wild duck, but not so large.

Among the first sort we reckon cleylers, curlews, and widgeon. Carew.

WIDOW. n. f. [pihpa, Saxon; weduwe, Dutch; weddu, Welsh; vidua, Latin.] A woman whose husband is dead.

To take the widow,
Exasperates, makes mad her filia. Genril. Shak.

Catharine no more
Shall be call'd queen; but princely dowager,
And widow to prince Arthur. Shak. Henry VIII.

Our fatherless district was left unmoan'd,
Your widow-dolors likewise be unwept.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

And will she yet debate her eyes on me,
That crop the golden prime of this sweet prince,
And made her widow to a woful bed? Shaksp.

And you, fair widow, who lay here alive,
Since he so much rejoices, cease to grieve;
Your joys and pain, were wont the same to be,
Be not now, blest pair! to disagree. Corway.

The barren they more miserable make,
And from the widow all her comfort take. Sandys.

He warns the widow, and her household gods,
To seek a refuge in remote abodes. Dryden.

Who has the paternal power whilst the widow queen is with child? Locke.

To WIDOW. v. a. [from widow.]

1. To deprive of a husband.

In this city he Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

You are a guilt'd,
Both you and I, for Rome is exil'd;
He made you for a highway to my bed;
But I, a maid, die maiden widow'd. Shakespeare.

Thy little care to mend my widow'd nights,
Has forc'd me to recourse of marriage rites,
To fill an empty side. Dryden.

2. To endow with a widow-right.

For his possessions,
Although by confiscation they are ours,
We do infate and widow you withal,
To buy you a better husband. Shakespeare.

W I E

3. To strip of any thing good.

The widow's life in mourning
Dries up her tears. Dryden.

Inclement weather and frosty blasts deface
The blithesome year, trees of their livel'd fruits
Are widow'd, dreary storms o'er all prevail. Philips.

WIDOWER. n. f. [from widow.] One who has lost his wife.

The king, sealing up all thoughts of love under the image of her memory, remained a widower
many years after. Sulmy.

The main contents are had, and here we'll stay
To see our widower's second marriage day. Shak.

They that marry, as they that shall get no child;
and they that marry not, as the widowers.
2 Ezdras, xvi. 44.

WIDOWHOOD. n. f. [from widow.]

1. The state of a widow.

Cecropia, having in her widowhood taken this young Arctia into her charge, had taught her to think that there is no widow but in including both heaven and earth in one's self. Sidney.

Ne wren my right with strength adown to tread,
Through weakness of my widowhood or woe,
For truth is strong. Spenser.

She employed her last widowhood to works less bountiful than charitable. Garrick's Survey of Cornwall.

It is of greater merit wholly to abstain from things defensible, than after fruition to be content to leave them, as they who magnify single life prefer virginity much before widowhood. Wotton.

Cherish thy hasten'd widowhood with the gold
Of matrimonial treasure: to idol. Milton.

2. Estate settled on a widow. Not in use.

For that dowry, I'll assure her of Her widowhood, be it that she gives me,
In all my lands. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

WIDOWHUNTER. n. f. [widow and hunter.] One who courts widows for a jointure.

The widowhunters about town often afford them great diversion. Addison.

WIDOWMAKER. n. f. [widow and maker.] One who deprives women of their husbands.

It grieves my soul
That I must be a widowmaker. Shakespeare's King John.

WIDOW-WAIL. n. f. [widow and wail.] A plant.

Miller.

WIDTH. n. f. [from wide.] Breadth; wideness. A low word.

For the width of the inmates gage this side, then for the tenant wage on that end of the quarter
you intend the tenant shall be made. Moxon.

Let thy vines in intervals be set;
Indulge their width, and add a roomy space,
That their extreme lines may scarce embrace. Dryden.

To WIELD. v. a. [pealban, Saxon, to manage in the hand.]

1. To use with full command, as a thing not too heavy for the holder.

His looks are full of peaceful majesty,
His head by nature fram'd to wear a crown,
His hand to wield a scepter, and himself likely in time to bless a regal throne. Shakespeare.

Mongst forests, hills, and floods, was ne'er such have and shew,
Since Altion wielded arms against the son of Jove. Drayton.

There is that hand bolden'd to blood and war,
That must the sword in wondrous actions wield. Daniel.

They are in the dark before they are aware, and then they make a noise only with terms; which,
like too heavy weapons that they cannot wield, carry their strokes beyond their aim. Digby on Bedes.

W I G

The least of whom could wield

These elements, and arm him with the force
Of all their regions. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Part wield their arms, part curb the foaming steed. Milton.

If Rome's great senate could not wield that sword,
Which of the conquer'd world had made them lord;
What hope had ours, while yet their power was new,
To rule victorious armies, but by you? Waller.

He worthiest, after him, his sword to wield,
Or wear his armour, or sustain his shield. Dryden.

2. To handle: in an ironical sense.

Bat Hungarian wight, wilt thou the spigot wield?
Shakespeare.

WIELDY. adj. [from wield.] Manageable.

WIRRY. adj. [from wire.]

1. Made of wire: it were better written wiry.

Your gown going off, such beauteous state reveals,
As when through flow'ry meads th' hill's shadow steals;
Off with that wiry coronet, and shew
The hazy diadem which on your head doth grow. Dennis.

2. Drawn into wire.

Polymnia shall be drawn with her hair hanging loose about her shoulders, resembling wiry gold. Farbam on Drawing.

3. [from pan, a pool.] Wet; wearish; moist. Obsolete.

Where but by chance a silver drop hath fall'n,
E'en to that drop 'er thousand wiry friends
Do glew themselves in sociable quest. Shakespeare.

WIFE. n. f. plural wives. [pif, Saxon; wif, Dutch.]

1. A woman that has a husband.

There's no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The kings of Spain have been used to say, that they loved the last Indies for their mistress only, in whose favours they could patiently enough endure a rival; but esteemed America as their wife, in whose love they could not brook a competitor without soul dishonour. Heylyn.

The wife, whose danger or dishonour lurks,
Safest and seemliest by her husband slays. Milton.

The wife her husband murders, he the wife. Dryden.

Fond of his friend, and civil to his wife. Pope.

2. It is used for a woman of low employment.

Strawberry wives lay two or three great strawberries at the mouth of their pot, and all the rest are little ones. Racine.

WIG. n. f. Wig, being a termination in the names of men, signifies war, or else a heroic; from piga, a word of that signification. Gibson's Camden.

WIG. n. f. [contracted from perwig.]

1. False hair worn on the head.

Triumphing torques and desponding whigs Forget their feuds, and join to save their wigs. Swift.

2. A sort of cake. Ansforth.

WIGHT. n. f. [piht, Saxon.] A person; a being. Now used only in irony or contempt.

Beshew the witch! with venomous wight she lays,
Tedious as hell, but flies the grasps of love,
With wings more momentary swift than thought. Shakespeare.

This world below did need one wight,
Which might thereof distinguish every part. Davies.

This meaner wights, of trust and credit bar,
Not so respected, could not look t' effect. Daniel.

A wight

A wight he was, whose very sight wou'd
Entitle him mirror of knighthood. Hudibras.
The water flies all taste of living wight. Milton.
How couldst thou suffer thy devoted knight,
On thy own day, to fall by foe oppress'd,
The wight of all the world who lov'd thee best? Dryden.

His station he yielded up to a wight as disagreeable as himself. Addison's Guardian.
In fame's full bloom lies Florio down at night,
And wakes next day a most inglorious wight;
The toad's dead. Farquhar.

WIGHT. adj. Swift; nimble. Out of use.
He was so wimble and so wight,
From bough to bough he leaped light,
And oft the pumins latched. Spenser's Pastoral.

WIGHT, an initial in the names of men, signifies strong; nimble; lusty; being purely Saxon. Gibson's Camden

WIGHTLY. adv. [from wight.] Swiftly; nimbly. Obsolete.

Her was her, while it was day-light,
But now her is a most wretched wight;
For day that was so wightily past,
And now at last the night doth last. Spenser.

WILD. adj. [publ. Saxon; wild, Dutch.]

1. Not tame; not domestick.
For I am he, and born to tame you, Kate,
And bring you from a wild cat to a kate,
Conformable as other household kates. Shakespeare.
Winter's not gone yet, if the wild geese fly that way. Shakespeare.
All beasts of the earth since wild. Milton.

2. Propagated by nature; not cultivated.
Whatever will make a wild tree a garden tree, will make a garden tree to have less care on stone. Bacon's Natural History Goose grass or wild ransy is a weed that strong clays are very subject to. Milton's Husbandry.
The wild bee breeds in the stocks or old willows, in which they first bore a canal, and furnish afterwards with higgings, made of rose leaves and, to finish their work, divide the whole into feveral rooms or nests. Grew's Museum.

3. Desert; uninhabited.
The wild beast where he wons in forest wild. Milton.
And paradise was open'd in the wild. Pope.

4. Savage; uncivilized; used of persons, or practices.
Affairs that walk,
As they say spirits do, at midnight, have
In them a wilder nature than the business
That seeks dispatch by day. Shakespeare Henry VIII.
Though the inundation destroy'd man and beast generally, yet some few wild inhabitants of the wood escaped. Bacon.
When they might not converse with any civimen without peril of their lives, whither should they fly but into the woods and mountains, and there live in a wild and barbarous manner. Davis on Ireland.
May those already curst Essexian plains,
Where hasty death and pining sickness reigns,
Prove as a desert, and none there make stay
But savage beasts, or men as wild as they. Waller.

5. Turbulent; tempestuous; irregular.
His passions and his virtues lie confus'd,
And mixt together in so wild a tumult,
That the whole man is quite disfigur'd in him. Addison.

6. Licentious; ungoverned.
The barbarous dissonance
Of that wild rout that tore the Thracian bard. Milton.
Valour grown wild by pride, and pow'r by rage,
Did the true charms of majesty impair;
Rome by degrees advancing more in age,
Show'd sad remains of what had once been fair. Prior.

7. Inconstant; mutable; fickle.
In the ruling passion, there alone,
The wild are constant, and the cunning known. Pope.

8. Inordinate; loose.

Other bars he lays before me,
My riots past, my wild societies. Shakespeare.
Besides, thou art a beau; what 's that, my child?
A top well dress'd, extravagant, and wild;
She that ences herbs has less impetuance,
And in her calling more of common sense. Dryden.

9. Uncouth; strange.

What are these,
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like the inhabitants o' th' earth,
And yet are on 't? Shakespeare's Much Ado

10. Done or made without any consistent order or plan.

With mountains as with weapons arm'd, they make Wild work in heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The sea was very necessary to the ends of providence, and it would have been a very wild world had it been without. Woodward's Nat. History

11. Merely imaginary.

As universal as these appear to be, an effectual remedy might be applied: I am not at present upon a wild speculative project, but such a one as may be easily put in execution. Swift

WILD. n. f. [from the adjective.] A desert; a tract uncultivated and uninhabited.

Whereas the scorching sky
Doth singe the sandy wilds of spacious Barbary. Dryden.

We sometimes,
Who dwell this wild, constrain'd by want come forth

To town or village nigh. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
This gentle knight
Forsook his easy couch at early day,
And to the woods and wilds pursued his way. Dryden.

Then Lybia first, of all her moisture drain'd,
Became a barren waste, a wild of land. Addison.
Is there a nation in the wilds of Afric,
Amidst the barren rocks and burning sands,
That does not tremble at the Roman name? Addison.

You rais'd these hallow'd walls; the desert
smil'd,
And paradise was open'd in the wild. Pope.

WILD Basil. n. f. [acinus, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

WILD Cucumber. n. f. [elaterium, Latin] A plant.

The branches are somewhat like those of the cucumber, but have no tendrils; the fruit is prickly, and when ripe bursts with great elasticity, and abounds with fetid juice. Miller.

WILD Olive. n. f. [oleagnus, Latin; from ilaia, oliva, and agios, vitex] This plant hath leaves like those of the chaste tree, and a fruit like an olive. Miller.

To WILDLR. v. a. [from wild.] To lose or puzzle in an unknown or path-less track.

The little courtiers, who ne'er come to know
The depth of factions, as in mazes go, Where intersect meet, and cross so oft, that they
With too much care are wild'd in the way. Dryden.

O thou! who free'st me from my doubtful state,
Long lost and wild'd in the maze of fate,
Be present still. Pope.

WILDERNESS. n. f. [from wild.]
1. A desert; a tract of solitude and savageness

He travell'd through wide wasteful ground,
That nought but desert wilderness shew'd all around. Spenser.

When as the land she saw no more appear,
But a wild wilderness of water deep,
Then 'gan she greatly to lament, and weep. Spenser.
O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blow,
When that my care could not withhold thy riots,

What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?

O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,
Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants! Shakspeare.
But who can always on the blow lie?
The warry wilderness yields no supply. Waller.
All those animals have been obliged to change their woods and wildernesses for lodgings in cities. Arnet and P. f.

2. The state of being wild or disorderly. Not in use.

The paths and bow'rs doubt not but our joint hands
Will keep from wilderness with ease. Milton.

WILDFIRE. n. f. [wild and fire.] A composition of inflammable materials, easy to take fire, and hard to be extinguished.

When thou rain'dst up Gadsill in the night to catch my horse, I did think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus, or a ball of wildfire. Shakespeare.

Though confidence, pitch, wildfire, burn easily, and are hard to quench, yet they make no such fiery wind as gunpowder. Bacon's Natural History.

Yet shall it in his boiling stomach turn
To bitter poison, and like wildfire burn;
He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd. Sandys.

No matter in the world so proper to write with as wildfire, as no characters can be more legible than those which are read by their own light. Addison's Guardian.

In flames, like Semele's, be brought to bed,
While opening hell spouts wildfire at your head. Pope.

WILD GOOSE CHASE. n. f. A pursuit of something as unlikely to be caught as the wildgoose.

If our wits run the wildgoosechase, I have done;
for thou hast more of the wildgoose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakespeare.

Let a man consider the time, money, and vexation, that this wildgoosechase has cost him, and then say, what have I gotten to answer all this expence, but giddy frolic? Leffrange.

WILDING. n. f. [wildelinghe, Dutch.] A wild four apple.

Ten ruddy wildings in the wood I found,
And stood on tip-toes, reaching from the ground. Dryden.

The redstreak, of all cyder fruit, hath obtained the preference, being but a kind of wilding, never pleasing to the palate. Mortimer.

The wilding's fibres are contriv'd
To draw th' earth's purest spirit, and resist its feculence. Philips.

WILDLY. adv. [from wild.]

1. Without cultivation.
That which grows wildly of itself, is worth nothing. Mor.

2. Without tameness; with ferity.

3. With disorder; with perturbation or distractiō.

Put your discourse into some frame, and start not so wildly from my affairs. Shakespeare.

Mrs. Page, at the door, sweating, blowing, and looking wildly, would needs speak with you. Shakespeare.

Young mothers wildly stare, with fear oppress'd,
And strain their helpless infants to their breast. Dryden.

His fever being come to a height, he grew delirious, and talk'd very wildly. Female Quixote.

4. Without attention; without judgment;
heedlessly.

As th' unthought accident is guilty
Of what we wildly do, so we profess
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and rise
Of every wind that blows. Shakespeare.

5. Capriciously; irrationally.

Who is there so wildly sceptical as to question whether the sun shall rise in the east? Wilkins.

6. Irregularly.

6. Irregularly.

She, wild y wanton, wears by night away
The sign of all our labours done by day. Dryden.
WILINESS. n. f. [from wild.]

1. Rudeness; disorder like that of uncultivated ground.

The heath, which was the third part of our plot, I wish to be framed, as much as may be, to a natural wildness. Bacon.

Vainly thou tell'st me what the woman's care Shall in the wildness of the wood prepare. Prior.

2. Inordinate vivacity; irregularity of manners.

Thus same starved justice hath done nothing but granted to me of the wildness of his youth, and the jeats he hath done about Turnbul-street; and every third word a lie. Shakespeare.

He is giv'n

To sports, to wildness, and much company. Shak.

3. Savageness; brutality.

He came in like a wild man, but such a wildness as shewed his eye-sight had tamed him; full of withered leaves, which, though they fell not, still threatened falling. Sidney.

4. Ferity; the state of an animal untamed: contrary to tameness.

5. Uncultivated state.

Their wildness lofty, and quitting nature's part,
Obey the rules and discipline of art. Dryden.

6. Deviation from a settled course; irregularity.

A delirium is but a short wildness of the imagination;
a settled irregularity of fancy is distraction and madness. Watts.

7. Alienation of mind.

Ophelia, I wish
That your good beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlet's wildness; so shall I hope your virtues
May bring him to his wonted way again. Shakespeare.

WILDSERVICE. n. f. [cratægus, Latin.] A plant. *Miller.WILE. n. f. [pile, Saxon; wiel, Islandick.] A deceit; a fraud; a trick; a stratagem; a practice artful, sly, and insidious.

Their leader by his wiles had much obtain'd,
And done much mischief on the English state. Daniel.

My sentence is for open war; of wiles,
More unexpect, I boast not; then let those Contrive who need. Milton.

Lift essay'd the forest wile,
Gilding itself with Laura's smile. Rowlandson.

So Sforza, cur'd with a too fertile brain,
Lost by his wiles the power his wit did gain. Dryden.

The heart of man is so full of wiles, artifices, and deceit, there is no guessing at what he is from his speeches. Addison.

Wisdom's above suspecting wiles,
The queen of learning gravely smiles. Swift.

WILFUL. adj. [will and full.]

1. Stubborn; contumacious; perverse; inflexible.

The willful never want woe. Proverb.

2. Done or suffered by design.

Sthenobæa herself did choke
With willful cold, for warring of her will. Spenser.

Thou to me
Art all things under willful, all p'cess thou,
Who for my willful come art banish'd hence. Milton.

The silent stranger stoas amaz'd to see Contempt of wealth, and willful poverty. Dryden.

By chance he ancient amities forgot,
Or else expung'd them with one willful blot:
Nor knew he God nor man, no faith, nor friends,
But for by-purposes and worldly ends. Harte.

WILFULLY. adv. [from willful.]

Obstinately; stubbornly.

The mother, who being determinately, least I could say of a great lady willfully, bent to marry her to Demagoras, tried all ways which a witty and hard-hearted mother could devise. Sidney.

Evil could she conceal her fire, and willfully persevered in it. Sidney.

Religion is matter of our freest choice; and if men will obstinately and willfully set themselves against it, there is no remedy. Tillotson.

2. By design; on purpose.

That will carry us, if we do not willfully betray our succours, through all difficulties. Hammond.

If you do not willfully pass over any of your greater offences, but confess particularly, and repent seriously, of them, God will more easily pass by your lesser infirmities. Bishop Taylor.

This let him know;
Left willfully offending, he pretend Surprisal. Milten.

WILFULNESS. n. f. [from willful.] Obstinacy; stubbornness; perverseness.

So full of willfulness and self-liking is our nature, that without some definitive sentence, which, being given, may stand, small hope there is that strifes will end. Hobbes.

Thy causeless ruth repels;
He that his sorrow fought through willfulness,
And his foe fetter'd would release again,
Deserves to taste his folly's fruit. Spenser.

Never hydra-headed willfulness
So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,
As in this king. Shakespeare.

Sins of presumption are such as proceed from pride, arrogance, willfulness, and haughtiness of man's heart. Perkins.

A stiff and stubborn obstinacy is not so much firmness and resolution, as willfulness. L'Estrange.

That is not hastily to be interpreted obstinacy or willfulness, which is the natural product of their age. Locke.

WILLY. adv. [from wily.] By strata-gem; fraudulently.

They did work willy, and went and made as if they had been ambassadors. Joshua.

WILINESS. n. f. [from wily.] Cunning;

guile.

The ungodly, for his own lust, doth persecute the poor: let them be taken in the crafty wilings that they have imagined. Psalms x. 2.

She supplied the weakness of force by wilings of art, and advantage of treaty. Hawell's Vocal Forest.

WILL. n. f. [pilla, Saxon; wille, Dutch.]

1. That power by which we desire and purpose; volition.

What we deem the will naturally, under this corrupt state, hath, I do not consider. Hammond.

The will cannot be constrained. Perkins.

Two principal fountains there are of human actions, knowledge and will; which will, in things tending towards any end, is termed choice. Hobbes.

2. Choice; arbitrary determination.

Will is the power which the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it, or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, and vice versa. Locke.

Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be so cruel to a humble foe?
If nature, then she may it mend with skill;
If will, then she at will may will forego. Spenser.

These things have a shew of wisdom in will,
worship and humility. Colossians, ii. 23.

Will holds the scepter in the soul,
And on the passions of the heart doth reign. Davies.

The truth is, such a man understands by his will, and believes a thing true or false, merely as it agrees or disagrees with a violent inclination; and therefore, whilst that inclination lasts in its strength, he discovers nothing of the different degrees of evidence. Atterbury.

3. Discretion; choice.

Religion was observed in the beginning of the world, before there were civil laws amongst them;
I mean any other than the mere wills of their princes and governors. Wilkins.

Go, then, the guilty at thy will chastise. Pope.

4. Command; direction.

At his first sight the mountains are shaken, and at his will the fourth wind bloweth. Ecclesi, xliii. 16.

Our prayers should be according to the will of God; they should have nothing in them but what is wise, and holy, and heavenly. Lea.

5. Disposition; inclination; desire.

I make bold to press upon you with so little preparation.—You're welcome; what's your will? Shakespeare.

He hath a will, he hath a power to perform. Drummond.

He said, and with so good a will to die
Did to his breast the fatal point apply,
It found his heart. Dryden.

6. Power; government.

Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies. Psalms.

He had his will of his maid before he could go; he had the mastery of his parents ever since he could prattle; and why, now he is grown up, must he be restrained? Locke.

7. Divine determination.

I would give a thousand fustions of sea for an acre of barren ground. The will above be done;
but I would fain die a dry death. Shakespeare.

8. Testament; disposition of a dying man's effects.

Another branch of their revenue still Remains, beyond their boundless right to kill,
Their father yet alive, empower'd to make a will. Dryden.

Do men make their last wills by word of mouth only? Stephens's Sermons.

9. Good-will. Favour; kindness.

I'll to the doctor, he hath my good will,
And none but he, to marry with Nan Page. Shak.

10. Good will. Right intention.

Some preach Christ of envy, and some of good*will*. Phil. i. 15.

11. Ill-will. Malice; malignity.

WILL with a will. n. f. Jack with a lanthorn.

Will with the will is of a round figure, in bigness like the flame of a candle; but sometimes broader, and like a bundle of twigs set on fire. It sometimes gives a brighter light than that of a wax-candle, at other times more obscure, and of a purple colour. When viewed near at hand, it shines less than at a distance. They wander about in the air, not far from the surface of the earth; and are more frequent in places that are uncluous, mouldy, marshy, and abounding with reeds. They haunt burying-places, places of execution, dunghills.
They commonly appear in summer and at the beginning of autumn, and are generally at the height of about six feet from the ground. Now they dilate themselves, and now contract; now they go on like waves, and run as it were sparks of fire, but they burn nothing. They follow those that run away, and fly from those that follow them.
Some that have been caught were observed to consist of a shining, viscous, and gelatinous matter, like the spawn of frogs, not hot or burning, but only shining; so that the matter seems to be phosphorus, prepared and raised from putrified plants or carcases by the heat of the sun, which is condensed by the cold of the evening, and then shines. Maschenboeck.

Will-a-will miscasts night-faring clowns
O'er hills and sinking bogs. Gay.

TO WILL. v. a. [willan, Gothick; pillan,

Saxon; willen, Dutch.]

1. To desire that any thing should be, or be done; or not be, or not be done.

To will, is to bend our souls to the having or doing of that which they see to be good. Hobbes.

Let Richard be restored to his blood,
As will the rest; so *will*eth Winchester. Shakespeare.

I speak not of God's determining his own will, but his predetermining the acts of our will. There is a great difference betwixt these two, as betwixt my

my willing a lawful thing myself, and my inducing another man to do that which is unlawful.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

Whoever wills the doing of a thing, it the doing of it be in his power, he will certainly do it; and whoever does not do that thing which he has in his power to do, does not properly will it. South.
A man that sits still is said to be at liberty, because he can walk if he wills it. Locke.

2. To be inclined or resolved to have.

She's too rough for me;

There, there, Hortensio, will you any wife? Shak.

3. To command; to direct.

St. Paul did will them of Corinth, every man to lay up somewhat on the Sunday, and to reserve it in store for the church of Jerusalem, for the relief of the poor there. Hooker.

How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was would to love his enemies? Shak.
Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armour's all as strong, our cause the best;
Then reason wills our hearts should be a good.

Shakespeare.

He willed him to be of good comfort, promising to bestow upon him whatsoever he should win.

Kneller.

If they had any business, his majesty willed that they should attend.

Clarendon.

'Tis yours, O queen! to will

The work, which duty binds me to fulfil. Dryden.

4. It has a loose and slight signification.

Let the circumstances of life be what or where they will, a man should never neglect improvement.

Harris.

5. It is one of the signs of the future tense, of which it is difficult to shew or limit the signification.

I will come. I am determined to come: importing choice.

Thou wilt come. It must be so that thou must come, importing necessity; or, it shall be that thou shalt come, importing choice.

W'lt thou come? Hast thou determined to come? importing choice.

He will come. He is resolved to come; or, it must be that he must come: importing either choice or necessity.

It will come. It must be that it must come: importing necessity.

The plural follows the analogy of the singular.

WILL and Vili, among the English Saxons, as viele at this day among the Germans, signified many. So willhelmus is the defender of many; willfrad, peace to many; which are answered in sense and signification by Polmachus, Polycrates, and Polyphilus. Gibson's Camden.

WILLING, adj. [from will.]

1. Inclined to any thing; consenting; not disposed to refuse.

Some other able, and as willing, pays

The rigid satisfaction. Milton.

Can any man trust a better support, under affliction, than the friendship of Omnipotence, who is both able and willing, and knows how to relieve him? Bentley.

2. Pleased; desirous.

He, willing to please one in authority, forc'd all his skill to make the resemblance of the best fashion.

Wisd.

He stoop'd with weary wings and willing feet. Mit.

3. Favourable; well disposed to any thing.

As many as were willing-heart'd brought bracelets and earrings. Exodus, xxxv. 22.

4. Ready; complying.

Religion hath force to qualify all sorts of men, to make governors the apter to rule with conscience, inferiors for conscience sake the *willing*er to obey.

VOL. II.

Hooker.

We've willing dames enough. Shakespeare.

5. Chosen.

They're held with his melodious harmony

In willing chains, and sweet captivity. Milton.

6. Spontaneous.

Forbear, if thou hast pity;

These groans proceed not from a senseless plant,
No sprouts of blood run willing from a tree. Dryd.

7. Consenting.

How can hearts not free serve will us? Milton.

WILLINGLY, adv. [from will.]

1. With one's own consent; without dislike; without reluctance.

That preservation of peace and unity amongst Christian churches should be by all good means procured, we join most willingly and gladly with them. Hooker.

I dare not make myself so guilty,

To give up willingly that noble title

Your master wed me to. Shakespeare.

'Tis ransom, if my whole inheritance

May compass it, shall willingly be paid. Milton.

2. By one's own desire.

The condition of that people is not so much to be envied, as some would willingly represent it. Addis.

WILLINGNESS, n. f. [from willing.]

Consent; freedom from reluctance; ready compliance.

We praise the things we hear with much more willingness than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and overlaid by the other. Ben Jonson.

It is not doing good after that same wonderful manner, that Christ's example obligeth us unto, but to a like willingness and readiness to do good, as far as our power reacheth. Calvary.

Fear never yet a generous mind did gain;
We yield on palsy, but are storm'd in vain;
Constraint, in all things, makes the pleasant less,
Sweet is the love which comes with willingness, Dryden.

WILLOW, n. f. [pelic, Sax. salix, Latin; gawilou, Welsh.] A tree worn by forlorn lovers.

It hath amentaceous flowers, consisting of several stamina, which are collected into a spike, but are barren. The embryos are produced upon different tiers from the male flowers, and afterwards become a fruit or husk, shaped like a cone, opening in two parts, and containing downy seeds. Miller.

I offered him my company to a willow tree, to make him a garland, as being forsaken; to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipt. Shak.

In such a night

Stood Dido with a willow in her hand
Upon the wild sea banks. Shakespeare.

Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
I wear the willow garland for his sake. Shakel.

When heaven's burning eye the fields invades,
To marshes he resorts obscur'd with reeds,
And hoary willows which the moisture feeds. Sandys.

Afflicted Israel shall sit weeping down,
Their harp upon the neighbouring willows hung,
No joyous hymn encouraging their tongue. Prior.

WILLOWISH, adj. [from willow] Resembling the colour of willow.

Make his body with greenish coloured crewel, or willowish colour. Walton.

WILLOWWEED, n. f. [from willow and weed; lysmachia, Latin.] A plant.

Ansforth.

WILLOWWORT, n. f. A plant. Miller.

WILY, adj. [from wile.] Cunning; sly; full of stratagem; fraudulent; insidious; subtle; mischievously artful.

They are so cautious and wily headed, especially being men of small practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and shifts. Spenser.

In the wily snake

Whatever flights, none would suspicious mark,
As from his wit and native subtilty Proceeding. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Since this false, wily, doubling disposition of mind is so intolerably mischievous to society, God is sometimes pleased, in mere compassion to men, to give them warning of it, by setting some odd mark upon such Cains. South.

My wily nurse by long experience found,
And first discover'd to my soul its wound;
'Tis love, said she. Dryden.

WIMBLE, n. f. [wimpel, old Dutch, from wemelen, to bore.] An instrument with which holes are bored.

At harvest-home, trembling to approach
The little barrel which he fears to broach,
He flays the wimble, often draws it back,
And deals to thirsty servants but a smock. Dryd.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble, force huge beams to bore;
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
'Tis the grim deep piercing till it scoops it out. Pope.
The tripan is like a wimble used by joiners. Sharp.

WIMBLE, adj. Active; nimble; shifting to and fro. Such seems to be the meaning here.

He was so wimble and so wight,
From bough to bough he leaped light,
And oft the pumies latched;
Therewith afraid I ran away;
But he, that carst seem'd but to play,
A shaft in earnest snatched. Spenser.

WIMPLE, n. f. [gumple, Fr.] A hood; a veil. It is printed in Spenser, perhaps by mistake, wimble.

So fair and fresh, as fairest flower in May,
For she had laid her mournful stole aside,
And widow-like sad wimple thrown away. Spenser.
The Lord will take away the changeable fuits of apparel, and the wimples, and the crisping pins. Habb, ii. 22.

WIMPLE, n. f. [peplion, Lat.] A plant.

To WIMPLE, v. a. To draw down as a hood or veil.

The same did hide

Under a veil that wimpled was full low. Spenser.

WIN, whether initial or final, in the names of men, may either denote a masculine temper, from pin, which signifies in Saxon, war, strength, &c. or else the general love and esteem he hath among the people, from the Saxon pine, i. e. dear, beloved. In the names of places it implies a battle fought there. Gibson.

To WIN, v. a. pret. wan and won; part. pass. won. [pinna, Sax. winnen, Dutch.]

1. To gain by conquest.

The town of Gura, where the enemy lay encamped, was not so strong but it might be won.

Knollys.

He gave him a command in his navy, and under his good conduct won many islands. Hylyn.
His whole descent, who thus shall Canaan won. Milton.

Follow cheerful to the trembling town;
Precis but an entrance, and prelusive it won. Dryd.

2. To gain the victory in a contest.

Loyalty is still the same,
Whether it win or lose the game;
True as the dial to the sun,
Altho' it be not shin'd upon. Hudibras.

I five years at Tarantum won
The questorship, and then our love began. Dent.

Thy well-breath'd horse

Impels the flying car, and wins the course. Dryd.

3. To gain something withheld, or something valuable.

W I N

When you see my son, tell him, that his sword can never win the honour that he loses. Shakspeare.
Refus'd to win, he meditates the way
By force to ravish, or by fraud betray. Pope.

4 To obtain; to allure to kindness or compliance.

Thy virtue can me; with virtue preserve me.
Dost thou love me? Keep me then still worthy to be beloved. Sidney.

My many of these traits I have sought to win me.
Shakspeare.

5 To gain by play.

He had given a disagreeable vote in parliament, for which reason not a man would have so much correspondence with him as to win his money. Addison.

6 To gain by persuasion.

They were great numbers to receive
With joy the tidings brought from heav'n. Milton.

7 To gain by courtship.

She's beautiful, and therefore to be woo'd;
She is a woman, therefore to be won. Shakspeare.
No tears, Celia, now shall win
My resolv'd heart to return;
I have search'd thy soul within,
And find nought but pride and scorn. Carver.
That stout witness'd his inconstant flame,
When thus he swore, and soon the yielding dame. Gay.

To WIN. v. n.

1. To gain the victory.

Nor is it aught but just,
That he, who in debate of truth hath won,
Should win in arms. Milton.

2. To gain influence or favour.

You express yourself very desirous to win upon the judgment of your master, and not upon his affections only. Bacon.
You have a softness and beneficence winning on the hearts of others. Dryden.
Thy words like musick every breast controul,
Steal thro' the air, and win upon the soul. Pope.

3. To gain ground.

The rabble will in time win upon power. Shak.

4. To be conqueror or gainer at play.

Charles, I will play no more to-night:
My mind's not on't; you are too hard for me.
—Sir, I did never win of you before.
—But little, Charles;
Nor shall not, when my fancy's on my play. Shakspeare.

To WINCE. v. n. [guingo, Welsh.] To kick, as impatient of a rider, or of pain.

I will sit as quiet as a lamb,
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word. Shak.
Room, room, for my horse will wince,
If he came within so many yards of a prince. Ben Jonson.

The angry beast did straight resent
The wrong done to his fundament,
Begin to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if he had been beside his sense. Hudibras.

WINCE. n. f. [from wince.] A kicking beast.

WINCH. n. f. [guincher, French, to twist.]
A windlass; something held in the hand by which a wheel or cylinder is turned.

Put a winch with one wheel. Motimer.

To WINCH. v. a. [The same with wince; or perhaps from guincher, French, to twist; winch signifying sometimes to writhe or contort the body.] To kick with impatience; to shrink from any uneasiness.

We who have free souls
It touches not, let the gall'd jade wince;
Our withers are unwrung. Shakspeare's Hamlet
Have these bones rattled, and this head
So often in thy quarrel bled?
Nor did I ever wince or grudge it. Hudibras.

W I N

This last allusion gaul'd the painter more;
Yet seem'd she not to wince, though shrewdly pain'd. Dryden.

Their consciences are galled;—and this makes them wince and fling, as if they had some mottle.
Tillotson.

WINCOPIPE. n. f.

There is a small red flower in the stubble-fields, which country people call the wincope; which if it opens in the morning, you may be sure a fair day will follow. Bacon.

WIND. n. f. [wind, Saxon; wind, Dutch;
gwynt, Welsh.]

1. Wind is when any tract of air moves from the place it is in, to any other, with an impetus that is sensible to us: wherefore it was not ill called by the ancients a swifter course of air; a flowing wave of air; a flux, effusion, or stream of air.

Muschenbroek.

The worthy fellow is our general. He's the rock, the oak, not to be wind-shaken.

Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Love's heralds should be thoughts
Which ten times faster glide than the sun-beams,
Driving back shadows over lowering hills.
Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love;
And therefore hath the wind swift Cupid wings.

Shakspeare.

Falmouth lieth farther out in the trade way, and so offereth a sooner opportunity to wind-driven ships than Plymouth. Carver.

Wind is nothing but a violent motion of the air, produced by its rarefaction more in one place than another, by the sun-beams, the attractions of the moon, and the combinations of the earth's motion. Clement.

2. Direction of the blast from a particular point; as eastward, westward.

I'll give thee a wind,
I myself have all the other,
And the very points they blow;
All the quarters that they know
I'th' shipman's card. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

In the year 1300, one Flavio of Malpica, in the realm of Naples, found out the compass, or pinus nauticus, consisting of eight winds only, the four principal, and four collateral; and not long after, the people of Bruges and Antwerp perfected that excellent invention, adding twenty-four other subordinate winds or points. Heylyn.

3. Breath; power or act of respiration.

If my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent. Shakspeare.
His wind he never took whilst the cup was at his mouth, but justly observed the rule of drinking with one breath. Hale.

The perfume of the flowers, and their virtues to cure shortness of wind in purly old men, seem to agree most with the orange. Temple.
It stopp'd at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to sitting air resign'd. Dryden.

4. Air caused by any action.

On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids, With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shakspeare.

In an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the sound-board breathes. Milton.

5. Breath modulated by an instrument.

Where the air is pent, there breath or other blowing, which carries but a gentle percussion, suffices to create sound; as in pipes and wind instruments. Bacon.

These instruments were various in their kind;
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind. Dryden.

6. Air impregnated with scent.

A hare had long escap'd pursuing hounds,
By often shifting into distant grounds,

W I N

Till finding all his artifices vain,
To save his life, he leap'd into the main.
But there, alas! he could no safety find,
A pack of dog-fish had him in the wind. Swift.

7. Flatulence; windiness.

It turns

Wisdom to folly, as nourishment to wind. Milton.

8. Any thing insignificant or light as wind.

Think not with wind of airy threats to awe. Milton.

9. Down the WIND. To decay.

A man that had a great veneration for an image in his house, found that the more he prayed to it to prosper him in the world, the more he went down the wind still. L'Estrange.

10. To take or have the WIND. To gain or have the upper hand.

Let a king, in council beware how he opens his own inclinations too much; for else counsellors will but take the wind of him, instead of giving free counsel. Bacon.

To WIND. v. a. preter. wound, in Pope
winded; part wound. [windan, Saxon;
winden, Dutch; from the noun.]

1. To blow; to sound by inflation.

The squire gan nigher so approach,
And wind his horn under the castle wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall. Spenser.

Every Triton's horn is winding,
Welcome to the wat'ry plain. Dryden.

Ye vigorous swans! while youth ferments your blood,
Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net. Pope.

2. To turn round; to twist.

Nero could touch and time the harp well; but in government sometimes he used to wind the spindle too high, and sometimes let them down too low. Bacon.

The figure of a sturdy woman, done by Michael Angelo, washing and winding of linen cloaths, in which act she wrings out the water that made the fountain. Wotton.

Wind the wood-bine round this arbour. Milton.

3. To regulate in motion; to turn to this or that direction.

He vaulted with such ease into his fear,
As if an angel dropt down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,
And witch the world with noble horsemanship. Shakspeare.

In a commonwealth or realm,
The government is called the helm;
With which, like vessels under sail,
They're turn'd and winded by the tail. Hudib.

4. To nose; to follow by scent.

5. To turn by shifts or expedients.

Whence turning of religion's made
The means to turn and wind a trade. Hudibras.
Mr. Whiston did not care to give more than short, general hints of this famous challenge, and the issue of it; but he endeavours to wind and turn himself every way to evade its force. Waterland.

6. To introduce by insinuation.

You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd offices, and to wind Yourself into a power tyrannical. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.
Edmund, seek him out, wind me into him, frame the business after your own wisdom. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Little arts and dexterities they have to wind in such things into discourse. Govern. of the Tongue.

7. To change.

Were our legislature vested in the prince, he might wind and turn our constitution at his pleasure, and shape our government to his fancy. Addison.

8. To entwine; to enfold; to encircle.

Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms. Shakspeare.
You know me well, and herein spend but time
To wind about my love with circumstance. Shak.

Sometime am I

All wound with adders, who with cloven tongues
Do hiss me into madness. Shakespeare.

9. To WIND out. To extricate.

When he found himself dangerously embarked,
he bethought himself of all possible ways to disentangle himself, and to wind himself out of the labyrinth he was in. Clarendon.

10. To WIND up. To bring to a small compass, as a bottom of thread.

Without solemnly winding up one argument, and lamenting that he began another, he lets his thoughts, which were fully possessed of the matter, run in one continued strain. Locke.

11. To WIND up. [used of a watch.] To convolve the spring.

I frown the while, and perchance wind up my watch, or play with some rich jewel. Shakespeare.

12. To put into a state of renovated or continued motion.

Far seem'd to wind him up for fourscore years,
Yet freshly ran he on ten winters more :
Till, like a clock worn out with caking time,
The wheels of weary life at last stood still. Dryden.

Will not the author of the universe, having made an automaton which can wind up itself, see whether it hath stood still or gone true? Grew.

Is there a tongue, like Delia's o'er her cup,
That runs for ages without winding up? Young.

13. To WIND up. To raise by degrees.

These he did so wind up to his purpose, that they withdrew from the court. Hayward.

When they could not coolly convince him, they railed, and called him an heretick : thus they wound up his temper to a pitch, and treacherously made use of that infirmity. Atterbury.

14. To WIND up. To straiten a string by turning that on which it is rolled ; to put in tune.

Hylis ! why sit we mute,
Now that each bird fainteth the spring?

Wind up the slacken'd strings of thy lute,
Never canst thou want matter to sing. Waller.

Your lute may wind its strings but little higher,
To tune their notes to that immortal quire. Prior.

15. To WIND up. To put in order for regular action : from a watch.

O you kind gods !
Cure this great breach of his abated nature ;
Th' untun'd and jarring senses O wind up
Of this child-changed father. Shakespeare.

The weyrd sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again, to make up nine :
Peace ! the charm's wound up. Shak. Macbeth.

To WIND. v. n.

1. To turn ; to change.

So swift your judgments turn and wind,
You cast our steepest wits a mile behind. Dryden.

2. To turn ; to be convolved.

Some plants can support themselves ; and some others creep along the ground, or wind about other trees, and cannot support themselves.

Bacon's Natural History.

Stairs of a solid newel spread only upon one small newel, as the several folds of fans spread about their centre, but these, because they sometimes wind, and sometimes fly off from that winding, take more room up in the staircase. Mason.

3. To move round.

If aught obstruct thy course, yet stand not still,
But wind about till thou hast topp'd the hill. Drom.

4. To proceed in flexures.

It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
As rob me of so rich a bottom here. Shakespeare.

Ever more did wind
About his bosome a most crafty minde. Chapman.

He winds with ease
Through the pure marble air his oblique way, Amongst innumerable stars. Milt. Paradise Lost.

It was a rock winding with one ascent. Milton.

The silver Thames, her own domestick flood,
Shall bear her vessels, like a sweeping train ;

And often wind, as of his mistress proud,
With longing eyes to meet her face again. Dryd.

You that can search those many-corner'd minds,
Where woman's crooked fancy turns and winds. Dryden.

Still fix thy eyes intent upon the throng,
And, as the pulses open, wind along. Gay.

Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

WINDER. n. f. [from wind.]

1. An instrument or person by which any thing is turned round.

The winder shows his workmanship so rare
As doth the fleece excel, and mock her looser clew ;
As neatly bottom'd up as nature forth it drew. Dryden.

To keep troublesome servants out of the kitchen, leave the winder sticking on the jack, to fall on their heads. Swift.

2. A plant that twists itself round others.

Plants that put forth their sap hastily, have their bodies not proportionable to their length ; and therefore they are winders and creepers, as ivy and bryony. Bacon's Natural History.

WINDFALL. n. f. [wind and fall.]

1. Fruit blown down from the tree.

Gather now, it ripe, your winter fruits, as apples, to prevent their falling by the great winds ;

WINDFLOWER. n. f. The anemone. A flower.

WINDGALL. n. f. [wind and gall.]

Windgalls are soft, yielding, statulent tumours or bladders, full of corrupt jelly, which grow upon each side of the fetlock joints, and are so painful in hot weather and hard ways, that they make a horse to halt. They are caused by violent straining, or by a horse's standing on a sloping floor, or from extreme labour and heat, or by blows. Farris's Dictionary.

His horse infected with the fashions, full of windgalls, and sped with spavins. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

WINDGUN. n. f. [wind and gun.] Gun which discharges the bullet by means of wind compressed.

The windgun is charged by the forcible compression of air, being injected through a syringe ;
the strike and distention of the imprisoned air serving, by the help of little falls or shuttles within, to stop and keep close the vents by which it was ad-

Forc'd from windguns, head itself can fly,
And pond'rous slug cut swiftly through the sky. Pope.

WINDINESS. n. f. [from windy.]

1. Fulness of wind ; flatulence.

A windiness and puffing up of your stomach after dinner, and in the morning. Hartley on Confluxions.

rarified spirits in rustles, or windiness, the common effects of all fermented liquors. Floyer on the Humour.

2. Tendency to generate wind.

Seneca loath somewhat of its windiness by decoct-ing, and, generally, subtle or windy spirits are taken off by incension or evaporation. Bacon's Natural History.

3. Tumour ; puffiness.

From this his modest and humble charity, virtues which rarely cohabit with the swelling wind- ness of much knowledge, issued this. Breviary on Language.

WINDING. *n. f. [from wind.] Flexure ;
meander.*

It was the pleasantest voyage in the world to follow the winding of this river Inn, through such a variety of pleasing scenes as the course of it naturally led us. Addison on Italy.

The ways of heaven are dark and intricate ;
Our understanding traces them in vain,
Nor sees with how much art the windings run,
Nor where the regular confusion ends. Addison's Essay.

WINDINGSHEET. n. f. [wind and sheet.]

A sheet in which the dead are enwrapped.

These arms of mine shall be thy windingsheet ;
My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre,
For from my heart thine image ne'er shall go. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The great windingsheets, that bury all things in oblivion, are deluges and earthquakes. Bacon.

The chaste Penelope having, as she thought, lost Ulysses, at last, employed her time in preparing a windingsheet for Laertes, the father of her husband. Spectator.

WINDLASS. n. f. [wind and lace.]

1. A handle by which a rope or lace is wrapped together round a cylinder.

By undirectious and directions out. Shak. Hamlet.

WINDLE. n. f. [from To wind.] A spindle.

WINDMILL. n. f. [wind and mill.] A mill turned by the wind.

We, like Don Quixote, do advance Against a windmill our vain lance. Waller.

Such a sailing chariot might be more conveniently framed with moveable sails, whose force may be impressed from their motion, equivalent to those in a windmill. Wilkins.

Windmills grind twice the quantity in an hour that watermills do. Motimer's Husbandry.

His fancy has made a giant of a windmill, and he's now engaging it. F. Atterbury.

WINDOW. n. f. [windue, Danish. Skinner thinks it originally wind-door.]

1. An aperture in a building by which air and light are intromitted.

Being one day at my window all alone,
Many strange things happened me to see. Spenser.

A fair view her window yields,
The town, the river, and the fields. Waller.

He through a little window cast his sight,
Though thick of bars that gave a scanty light ;
But ev'n that glimmering serv'd him to defy Th' inevitable charms of Emily. Dryden.

When you leave the windows open for air, leave books on the window-seat, that they may get air too. Scufl.

2. The frame of glass or any other materials that cover the aperture.

To thee I do commend my watchful soul
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes !
Sleeping or waking, oh defend me still !
Shakespeare's Richard III.

With pert fluting eyes the window'd well its head,
A brain of feather, and a heart of lead. Pope's Dunciad.

2. To place at a window.

Wouldst thou be window'd in great Rome, and see Thy master thus with pleach't arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face subdued
To penetrative shame? Shak. Antony and Cleopatra.

3. To break into openings.

Poor naked wretches, whoso'er you are,
That bid the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, discover you
From seasons such as these? Shakesp. King Lear.

WINDPIPE. n. f. [wind and pipe.] The passage for the breath; the aspera arteria.

Let gallows gape for dogs, let man go free,
And let not hump his windpipe suffocate. Shakespeare's Henry V.

The wezzon, rough artery, or windpipe, is a part inservient to voice and respiration; thereby the air descendeth unto the lungs, and is communicated unto the heart. Brown.

The quacks of government, who sat
At th' unregarded helm of state,
Consider'd timely how t' withdraw,
And save their windpipes from the law. Hudib.
Because continual respiration is necessary for the support of our lives, the windpipe is made with annular cartilages. Ray.

The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches, called bronchia; these end in small air-bladders, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it. Arbutnot on Aliments.

WINDWARD. adv. [from wind.] Towards the wind.

WINDY. adj. [from wind.]

To WINK v. n. [punctan, Saxon; winc- ken, Dutch.]

1. To shut the eyes.

Let's see thine eyes; wink now, now open them:
In my opinion yet thou see'st not well.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.
They're fairies; he that speaks to them shall die.
I'll wink and cough; no man their sports must eye.
Shakespeare.

His false cunning
Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance,
And grow a twenty years removed thing,
While one would wink. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

He, with great imagination,
Proper to madness, led his powers to death,
And, winking, leap'd into destruction.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.
In despite of all this, he runs foolishly into his sin and ruin, merely because he winks hard and rushes violently like a horse into the battle.

The Scripture represents wicked men as without understanding: not that they are destitute of the natural faculty, they are not blind, but they wink
Tillotson.

If any about them should make them think there is any difference between being in the dark and winking, get it out of their minds. Locke.

2. To hint, or direct, by the motion of the eyelids.

You saw my master wink and laugh upon you.
Shakespeare.

Send him a spoon when he wants a knife: wink
at the footman to leave him without a plate. Swift.

3. To close, and exclude the light.

While Hercules pip'd and sung, and told his tale,
The keeper's winking eyes began to fail,
And drowsily slumber on the beds to creep,
Till all the watchman was at length asleep. Dryden.

When you shoot, and shut one eye,
You cannot think he would deny
To lend the t'other friendly aid,
Or wink, as coward and afraid. Prior.

4. To connive; to seem not to see; to tolerate.

They be better content with one that will wink at their faults, than with him that will reprove them. Whitgift.

I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
Let not night see my black and deep desires;
The eye wink at the hand! Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The king gave him great gifts, and winked at the great spoil of Bosworth-field, which came almost wholly to this man's hands.

Bacon's Henry VII.
Let us not write at a loose rambling rate,
In hope the world will wink at all our faults.

Obstinacy cannot be winked at, but must be subdued. Locke.

Cato is stern, and awful as a god:
He knows not how to wink at human frailty,
Or pardon weakness that he never felt.

Addison's Cato.

5. To be dim.

The sullen tyrant slept not all the night,
But lonely walking by a winking light,
Sob'd, wept, and groan'd, and beat his wither'd breast. Dryden.

WINK n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Act of closing the eye.

You doing thus,
To the perpetual wink for ay might put
This ancient moral. Shakespeare's Tempest.

At every wink of an eye some new grace will be born. Shakespeare.

Since I receiv'd command to do this business,
I have not slept one wink. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

WIN

The beams so reverend and strong,
Dost thou not think
I could eclipse and cloud them with a wink,
But that I would not lose her sight so long? Donne.
It raged so all night, that I could not sleep a wink. Temple.

Not write! but then I think;
And for my soul I cannot sleep a wink. Pope.

2. A hint given by motion of the eye.

Her wink each bold attempt forbids. Dryden.
The stockjobber thus from Change-alley goes down,
And tips you the t'otherman a wink;
Let me have but your vote to serve for the town,
And here is a guinea to drink. Swift.

WINNER n. f. [from wink.] One who winks.

A set of nodders, winkers, and whisperers, whose business is to strangle all others offspring of wit in their birth. Pope.

WINKINGLY adv. [from winking.] With the eye almost closed.

If one beholdeth the light, he vieweth it wink- ingly, as those do that are purblind; but if any thing that is black, he looketh upon it with a broad and full eye. Pemham on Drusung.

WINNER n. f. [from win.] One who wins.

A gamester, having lost all, borroweth of his next fellow-gamester somewhat to maintain play, which he setting upon him again, shortly winneth all from the winner. Spenser.

Go together,
You precious winkers all, your exultation Partake to every one. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Behew the winkers, for they play'd me false.
Shakespeare.

Whether the winner laughs or no, the loser will complain; and rather than quarrel with his own skill, will do it at the dice. Temple.

WINNING participial adj. [from win.]
Attractive; charming.

Yet let's fair,
Let's winning soft, let's amiably mild,
Than that smooth watery image. Milt. Par. Lost.

On her, as queen,
A pomp of winning graces waited still;
And from about her shot darts of desire
Into all eyes, to wither her still in fight.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Cato's soul
Shines out in every thing she acts or speaks,
While winning mildness and attractive smiles
Dwell in her looks, and with becoming grace
Softens the rigour of her father's virtues. Addison.

WINNING n. f. [from win.] The sum won.

A simile in one of Congreve's prologues compares a writer to a buttering ginseller, that stakes all his winnings upon every cast; so that if he loses the last throw, he is sure to be undone.

Addison's Freeholder.

To WINNOW v. a. [pinduan, Saxon;
evanno, Lat.]

1. To separate by means of the wind;
to part the grain from the chaff.

We are royal faith martyrs in love,
We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.
In the sun your golden grain display,
And thrash it out and winnow it by day.

Dryden's Virgil.

2. To fan; to beat as with wings.

Now on the polar winds, then with quick fan
Winnows the buxom air. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. To sift; to examine.

Winnows well this thought, and you shall find
'Tis light as chaff that flies before the wind. Dryden.

4. To separate; to part.

Bitter torture shall Winnows the truth from falsehood. Sh. Cymbeline.

WIN

To WINNOW v. n. To part corn from chaff.

Winnows not with every wind, and go on into every way. Lucan's 9.

WINNOWER n. f. [from winnows.] He who winnows.

WINTER n. f. [wintr, Saxon; winter, Danish, German, and Dutch.] The cold season of the year.

Though he were already slept into the winter of his age, he found himself warm in those deluges, which were in his soul far more excusable. Sidney.

A fir summer evermore succeeds
The barren winter with his rapping cold.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.
A woman's story at a winter's fire. Shak. Much.

He hath bought a pair of castles of Diana; a nun of winter's interhood kisses not more religiously; the very ice of charity is in them.

Shakespeare's A. you like it.

The two beneath the dark pole complain
Of endless winter and perpetual rain. Dryden.

Lieth thou asleep beneath those hills of snow?
Stretch out thy lily limbs, awake, awake,
And winter from thy tarry mantle shake. Dryden.

Suppose our poet was your toe before,
Yet now the business of the field is o'er:
'Tis time to let your civil wars alone,

When troops are into winter-quarters gone. Dryden.

He that makes no reflection on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fits in winter-nights for the entertainment of others.

Locke.

Stern winter smiles on that auspicious clime,
'The fields are staid with unfading prime. Pope.

To define winter, I consider first wherein it agrees with summer, spring, autumn, and I find they are all seasons of the year; therefore a season of the year is a genus then I observe wherein it differs from them, and that is in the shortness of the days; therefore this may be called its special nature, or difference: then, by joining these together, I make a definition. Winter is that season of the year wherein the days are shortest.

Watts's Logic.

To WINTER v. n. [from the noun.] To pass the winter.

The fowls shall summer upon them, and all the beasts of the earth shall winter upon them.

Isa. xviii. 6.

Because the haven was not commodious to winter
in, the more part advised to depart.

Acts. xxvii. 12.

To WINTER v. a. To feed or manage in the winter.

The cattle generally sold for slaughter within, or exportation abroad, had never been handled or wintered at hand-meat. Temple.

Young lean cattle may by their growth pay for their wintering, and so be ready to fat next summer. Mortimer.

WINTER is often used in composition.

The king sat in the winter-house, and there was a fire burning before him. Jer. xxxvi. 12.

If in November and December they fallow, 'tis called a winter-fallowing. Mortimer.

Shred it very small with thyme, sweet marjoram, and a little winter-savory. Wolton's Angler.

WINTERBEATEN adj. [winter and beat.]
Harassed by severe weather.

He compareth his careful case to the sad season of the year, to the frosty ground, to the frozen trees, and to his own winterbeaten flock. Spenser.

WINTERCHERRY n. f. [alkakenge.] A plant. The fruit is about the bigness of a cherry, and inclosed in the cup of the flower, which swells over it in form of a bladder. Miller.

WINTERCITRON n. f. A sort of pear.

WINTERGREEN n. f. [pyrola, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

WINTERLY

WINTERLY. adj. [winter and like.] Such as is suitable to winter; of a wintry kind.

If't be summer news,
Smile to't before; if winterly, thou need'st
But keep that count'nance still. Shak. Cymbeline.

WINT'RY. adj. [from winter.] Brumal; hyemal; suitable to winter.

He saw the Trojan fleet dispers'd, distress'd,
By stormy winds and wint'ry heaven oppress'd. Dryden.

Set cucumbers among muskmelons, and see whether the melons will not be more winy, and better tasted. Bacon.

TO WIPE. v. a. [pipan, Saxon.]

1. To cleanse by rubbing with something soft.

Such a handkerchief,
I'm sure it was your wife's, did I to-day
See Cassio wipe his beard with. Shaksp. Othello.
She a gentle tear let fall
From either eye, and wip'd them with her hair. Milton.

Then with her vest the wound the wipes and dries. Denham.

2. To take away by friction.

Calumniate stoutly; for though we wipe away with never to much care the dirt thrown at us, there will be left some fullage behind. Decay of Piety.

3. To strike off gently.

Let me wipe off this honourable dew,
That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks. Shaksp.
Some natural tears they dropp'd, but wip'd them soon. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A young man, having suffered many tortures, escaped with life, and told his fellow Christians, that the pain of them had been rendered tolerable by the presence of an angel, who stood by him and wiped off the tears and sweat. Addison.

4. To clear away.

Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples; reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Shaksp. Macbeth.

5. [emungo.] To cheat; to defraud.

The next bordering lords commonly encroach one upon another, as one is stronger, or lie still in wait to wipe them out of their lands. Spenser on Ireland.

6. To WIPE out. To efface.

This blot, that they object against your house,
Shall be wip'd out in the next parliament.

Shakspere's Henry VI.
As thou lov'st me, Camillo, wipe not out the rest of thy services by leaving me now.

Shakspere's Winter's Tale.
Take one in whom decaying old age has blotted out the memory of his past knowledge, and clearly wiped out the ideas his mind was formerly stored with, and stopp'd up all the passages for new ones to enter; or, if there be some of the latter yet left open, the impressions made are scarce perceived. Locke.

WIFE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Act of cleansing.

2. A blow; a stroke; a jeer; a gybe; a sarcasm.

To statesmen would you give a wipe,
You print it in Italick type:
When letters are in vulgar shapes,
'Tis ten to one the wit escapes;
But when in capitals express'd,
The dullest reader smokes the jest. Swift.

3. [vanellus.] A bird. Amisworth.

WIPE. n. f. [from wipe.] An instrument or person by which any thing is wiped.

The maids and their makes,
At dancing and wakes,
Had their napkins and posies,
And the wipers for their noses. Ben Jonson.

WIRE. n. f. [wirer, Fr. to draw round. Skinner.] Metal drawn into slender threads.

Tane was the damsel; and without remorse
The king condemn'd her, guiltless, to the fire:
Her veil and mantle pluckt they off by force,
And bound her tender arms in twisted wire. Fairfax.

Thou shalt be whipt with wire, and strew'd in brine,
Smarting in ling'ring pickle. Shakspere's Antony and Cleopatra.

The soldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of honor all environ,
That's strong with wire instead of veins,
In whose embraces you're in chains. Beaumont and Fletcher.

And the cherubick host, in thousand quires,
Touch their immortal harps of golden wires. Milton.

Some roll a mighty stone, some laid along,
And, bound with burning wires, on spokes of wheels are hung. Dryden's Fœnix.

TO WIREDRAW. v. a. [wire and draw.]

1. To spin into wire.

2. To draw out into length.

A fluid moving through a flexible canal, when small, by its friction will naturally lengthen and wiredraw the sides of the canal, according to the direction of its axis. Arbutnot.

3. To draw by art or violence.

I have been wrongfully accused, and my sense
wiredrawn into blasphemy. Dryden.

WIREDRAWER. n. f. [wire and draw.]

1. One who spins wire.

Those who have need of unmix'd silver, as gilders and wiredrawers, must, besides an equal weight of silver mixed with other metals, give an overplus to reward the refiner's skill. Locke.

TO WISE. v. a. pret. and part. pass. wisft.
[wisfen, German; wyfen, Dutch.] To think; to imagine. Obsolete.

I was proud and fierce, unto the heart he stept
Of them poor souls; and cutting reason's reins,
Made them wis on her as they had it wisft. Sidney.

When Mammon saw his purpose mist,
Him to entrap unawares, another way he wisft. Spenser.

This book, advisedly read, and diligently followed but one year at home, would do a young gentleman more good, I wisft, than three years' travel abroad. Afcham's Schoolmaster.

There be fools alive, I wisft,
Silver'd o'er, and so was this. Shakspere.

Marry with a king,
A bachelor, a handsome stripling too,
I wisft your grandam had a worse match. Shakspere's Richard III.

When for more worlds the Macedonian child,
He wisft not Thely in her lap did hide
Another yet, a world reserv'd for you,
To make more great than that he did subdue. Waller.

WISDOM. n. f. [wisdom, Saxon; wissdom, Danish.]

1. Sapience; the power of judging rightly; the knowledge of divine and human things.

That which moveth God to work is goodness, and that which ordereth his work is wisdom, and that which perfecteth his work is power. Hooker.

As from senses reason's work doth spring,
So many reasons understanding gain,
And many understandings knowledge bring,
And by much knowledge wisdom we obtain. Davies.
Wisdom is that which makes men judge what are the best ends, and what the best means to attain them, and gives a man advantage of counsel and direction. Temple.

As science is properly that knowledge which re-latheth to the essences of things, so wisdom to their operations. Græc. Cosmologia.

O sacred solitude! divine retreat!
Choice of the prudent, envy of the great!
By thy pure stream, or in the waving shade,
We court fair wisdom, that celestial maid. Young.

2. Prudence; skill in affairs; judicious conduct.

'Tis much he dares,
And to that dauntless temper of his mind,
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour
To act in safety. Shakspere's Macbeth.
Wisdom and fortune combating together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

WISE. adj. [wis, Saxon; wiss, Dutch and Danish.]

1. Sapient; judging rightly; having much knowledge.

Heav'n is for thee too high; be lowly wis. Milton.

All the writings of the ancient Goths were composed in verse, which were called runes, or wisps, and from thence the term of wispe came. Temple.

Since the floods demand
For their descent a prone and sinking land,
Does not this due declivity declare
A wise director's providential care? Blackmore.

The wisest and best men, in all ages, have lived up to the religion of their country, when they saw nothing in it opposite to morality. Addison.

2. Judicious; prudent; practically knowing.

To WIT. v. n. [piscan, Saxon.] To know.

This word is now only used in the phrase to wit, that is to say.

There is an officer, to wit, the thief of the shire, whose office it is to walk up and down his bailiwick. Spenser.

Yet are these feet, whose strengthless stay is numb, Unable to support this lump of clay, Swift-winged with desire to get a grave; A witting I no other comfort have. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

WIT. n. f. [wigept, Saxon; from wit, to know]

1. The powers of the mind; the mental faculties; the intellects. 'This is the original signification.

Who would set his wit to so foolish a bird? Shakespeare.

The king your father was reputed for A prince most prudent, of an excellent And unmatched wit and judgment. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Will puts in practice what the wit deviseth; Will ever act, and wit contemplates still; And as from wit the power of wisdom riseth, All other virtues daughters are of will.

Will is the prince, and wit the counsellor Which doth for common good in council sit; And when wit is resolv'd, will lends her power To execute what is advis'd by wit. Davies. For wit and pow'r their last endeavours bend To outline each other. Dryden.

2. Imagination; quickness of fancy.

They never meet, but there's a likeness of wit between them.—Alas, in our last conflict, four of his five wits went halting off, and now is the whole man govern'd by one. Shakespeare.

Lewd, shallow, hurr-buried huffs make atheism, and contempt of religion, the only badge and character of wit. South.

And though a tun in thy large bulk be writ, Yet thou art but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.

Wit lying most in the assemblage of ideas, and putting those together with quickness and variety, wherein can be found any resemblance or congruity, thereby to make up pleasant pictures in the fancy. Judgment, on the contrary, lies in separating carefully one from another ideas wherein can be found the least difference, thereby to avoid being misled by similitude. Locke.

Could any but a knowing prudent cause Begin such motions, and assign such laws? If the great mind had form'd a different frame, Might not your wanton wit the system blame? Blackmore.

3. Sentiments produced by quickness of fancy, or by genius; the effect of wit.

All sorts of men take a pleasure to gird at me. The brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends more to laughter than what I invent, and is invented, on me. I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakespeare.

His works become the frippery of wit. Ben Jonson.

The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdued the world. Sparr.

The definition of wit is only this, that it is a propriety of thoughts and words; or, in other terms, thoughts and words elegantly adapted to the subject. Dryden.

Let a lord once but own the happy lines, How the wit brightens, and the style refines! Pope.

4. A man of fancy.

Intemperate wits will spare neither friend nor foe, and make themselves the common enemies of mankind. L'Estrange.

A poet, being too witty himself, could draw nothing but wits in a comedy: even his fools were infected with the disease of their author. Dryden.

To tell them would a hundred tongues require; Or one vain wit's, that might a hundred tire. Pope.

5. A man of genius.

Hence 'tis, a wit, the greatest word of fame, Grows such a common name; And wits by our creation they become, Just so as titular bishops made at Rome: 'Tis not a role, 'tis not a jest Admir'd with laughter at a feast, Non

Nor florid talk, which can that title gain;
The proofs of wit for ever must remain. Corioly.
searching wits, of more mechanic parts;
Who grac'd their age with new-invented arts;
Those who to worth their bounty did extend,
And those who knew that bounty to commend. Dryden.

How vain that second life in others breath,
Th' estate which wits inherit after death!
In health, and life for this they must resign;
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine!
The great man's wife will out the gain endure,
Be envy'd, wretched; and be flatter'd, poor. Pope.

Nought but a genius can a genius fit,
A wit himself, Amelia wed a wit. Young.

6. Sense; judgment.

Strong was their plot,
Their practice clost, their faith suspected not;
Their states far off, and they of wary wit. Daniel.
Come, leave the loathed stage,
And this more loathsome age,
Where pride and impudence, in faction knit,
Usurp the chair of wit. Ben Jonson.
Through his youthful blood be fit with wine,
He wants not wit the danger to decline. Dryden.

7. Faculty of the mind.

If our wits run the wildgoose-chace, I have done, for thou hast more of the wildgoose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

8. [In the plural.] Soundness of understanding; intellect not crazed; sound mind.

I had a son,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he fought my life:
The grief hath craz'd my wits. Shak. King Lear.
Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain? Shakespeare.

Sound sleep cometh of moderate eating, he sleeth early, and his wits are with him; but the pun of watching, and choler, and pangs of the belly, are with an unsatiable man. Ecclus. xxxi. 20.

No man in his wits can make any doubt, whether there be such things as motion, and sensation, and continuity of bodies. Wilkins.

Wickedness is voluntary frenzy, and every sinner does more extravagant thing than any man that is craz'd, and out of his wits, only that he knows better what he does. Shakespeare.

No man in his wits can possibly think that his own soul hath exist'd from all eternity. Ben Jonson.

9. Contivance; stratagem; power of expedients; invention; ingenuity.

How can it chuse but bring the simple to their wits end? how can it chuse but vex and amaze them? Hooker.

I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brainford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, countervailing the action of an old woman, delivered me. Shakespeare.

Sleights from his wit and subtlety proceed. Milton.

The neighbourhood were at their wits end, to consider what would be the issue. L'Estrange.

WITCRAFT. n. f. [wit and craft.] Contrivance; invention. Obsolete.

He was no body that could not hammer out of his name an invention by this witcraft, and picture it accordingly. Camden's Remains.

WITCRACKER. n. f. [wit and cracker.]

A joker; one who breaks a jest.

A college of wits cannot flout me out of my humour; dost thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? Shakespeare.

WITWORM. n. f. [wit and worm.] One that feeds on wit; a canker of wit.

Thus to come forth so suddenly a witworm. Ben Jonson.

WITCH. n. f. [wicce, Saxon.]

A woman given to unlawful arts.
Wise judges have prescribed, that men may not rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor the evidence against them. For the witches themselves are imaginative; and people are credulous, and ready to impute accidents to witchcraft. Bacon.

View the ruder wits; the conjurer by roots, and has the not store of ignorance, and zeal of mischief? Holyday.

The night-hag comes to dance
With Lapland witches, while the lab'ring moon
Eclipses at their charms. Milton.

When I consider whether there are such persons as witches, my mind is divided: I believe in general that there is such a thing as witchcraft, but can give no credit to any particular instance of it.

A. Wilson's Spectator.

2. [from wic, Saxon.] A winding sinuous bank.

Leave me those hills where he brought his to see;
Nor holy bush, nor briar, nor winding wit h. Spenser.

TO WITCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To bewitch; to enchant.

Me ill befits, that in deriding arms,
And honour's suit, my vows I days do spend,
Unto thy bounteous baits, and pleasing charms,
With which weak men thou witch'st, to attend. Spenser.

'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When church-yards yaw. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
I'll witch sweet ladies with my words and looks. Shakespeare.

WITCHCRAFT. n. f. [witch and craft.]

1. The practices of witches.

People are credulous, and ready to impute accidents and natural operations to witchcraft. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Power more than natural.

Urania name, whose force he knew so well,
He quickly knew what witchcraft gave the blow. Sidney.

Have not some of learning and gravity thought themselves wise, in thinking witchcraft rather a mistake than a crime? Holyday.

If you cannot
But his access to the king, never attempt
Any thing on him, for he hath a witchcraft
Over the king in 's tongue. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

What subtle witchcraft man constrains
To change his pleasure into pains? Denham.

WITCHERY. n. f. [from witch.] Enchantment.

Another sort of party witchery, if it be not altogether denied, the all charming of beasts and birds. Raleigh.

Great Cornus!
Deep skill'd in all his mother's witcheries. Milton.

TO WITTE. v. a. [witan, Sax.] To blame; to reproach.

The palmer gan most bitterly
Him to rebuke, for being loose and light;
Which not abiding, but more scornfully
Scoffing at him, that did her justly wite,
She turn'd her head about. Spenser.

WITE. n. f. [from the verb.] Blame; reproach.

WITH. preposit. [wið, Saxon]

1. By: noting the cause.

Truth, try'd with steel and stone,
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon. Shak.

With thy powerful blast,
Heat apace, and cool as fast. Curew.

They adhered to John, their deprived bishop; and could not be charmed with the faintship of any second bishop, during his life. Lesley.

With ev'ry stab her bleeding heart was torn,
With wounds much harder to be seen than born. Roscoe.

2. Noting the means.

Rude and unpolished are all operations of the soul in their beginnings, before they are cultivated with art and study. Dryden.

3. Noting the instrument.

Boreas through the lacy vapour flies,
And sweeps, with healthy wings, the rank polluted skies. Roscoe.

By perforations with large bellows, miners give motion to the air. Woodward.

4. On the side of; for: noting confederacy or favour.

Fear not, for I am with thee. Genesi.

5. In opposition to; in competition or contest.

I do contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love.
As ever 'gainst thy valour. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
He shall lye with any friar in Spain. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

6. Noting comparison.

Can blazing carbuncles with her compare? Sandys.

7. In society: noting connection.

God gave man a soul that should live for ever, although the body be destroyed; and those who were good should be with him. Stillinger's fleet.
In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow,
Thou'rt such a touchy, testy, pleasing fellow,
Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about
thee,
There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Tatler.

8. In company of.

At the instant that your messenger came, in loving visitation was with me a young doctor from Rome. Shakespeare.

9. In appendage: noting consequence or concomitance.

Men might know the persons who had a right to regal power, and with it to their obedience. Locke.

10. In mutual dealing.

I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following, but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. Shakespeare.

11. Noting confidence: as, I trust you with all my secrets; or, I trust all my secrets with you.

12. In partnership.

Though love himself no less content would be,
To part his throne and share his heaven with thee. Pope.

13. Noting connection.

Pity your own, or pity our estate,
Nor twist our fortunes with your sinking fate. Dryden.

14. Immediately after.

With that she told me, that, though she spake of her father Cressida, she would hide no truth from me. Sidney.

With that, he crawled out of his nest,
Forth creeping on his castif hands and thigh. Fairy Queen.

In falling, both an equal fortune tried,
Would fortune for my fall to well provide!
With this he pointed to his face, and show'd
His hands and all his habit smear'd with blood. Dryden.

With that the god his darling phantom calls,
And from his tair'ring lips this message falls. Garth.

15. Amongst.

Jasper duke of Bedford; whom the king us'd to employ with the first in his wars, was then sick. Bacon.

Tragedy was originally, with the ancients, a piece of religious worship. Rymer's Tragedies of the Last Age.

Immortal powers the term of Conscience know,
But Interest is her name with men below. Dryden.

16. Upon.

Such arguments had invincible force with those Pagan philosophers who became Christians. Addis.

17. In consent: noting parity of state.

See where on earth the flow'ry glories lie!
With her they flourish'd, and with her they die. Pope.

18. This preposition might perhaps be exemplified in many more relations, for its use is very frequent, and therefore very lax and various. With and by it is not always easy to distinguish, nor perhaps is any distinction always observed. With seems rather to denote an instrument, and by a cause: thus, he killed his enemy with a sword, but he died by an arrow. The arrow is considered rather as a cause, as there is no mention of an agent. If the agent be more remote, by is used; as, the vermin which he could not kill with his gun, he killed by poison. If these two prepositions be transposed, the sentence, though equally intelligible, will be less agreeable to the common modes of speech.

19. With, in composition, signifies opposition or privation; except withal.

A precept natural and may be put with, up on a profitable exaltation of a future moral good.

Withal, adv. [with and all.]

1. Along with the rest; likewise; at the same time.

Yet must be withal considered, that the greatest part of the world are they which be farthest from perfection.

How well supplied with noble countenance!

It is much in exception in withal.

How terrible in constant resolution! Stak. Hen. V.

The one contains my picture, mine;

If you chide that, then I am your rival.

Thus that piece did not treat him as a person, to make conquest, but as a man for his son; and a rival, to enable him to recover some part of it.

The river being wholly of fresh water, and a large withal, which the air.

And when he gave me strength, to show to the flow flight the gift was hung in my hand. Milt.

'Tis necessary men should be out of their nonage before they can attain to an actual use of this principle; and, withal, that they should be ready to exert and exercise their faculties.

I cannot, cannot bear, 'tis past, 'tis done;

Perish this impious, this detested son!

Perish his life, and perish I withal.

And let the house's heir and the hop'd kingdom fall.

Christ had not only an infinite power to work miracles, but also an equal wisdom to know the just force and measure of every argument to persuade, and withal to look through and through all the dark corners of the soul of man, and to discern what prevails upon them, and what does not.

2. It is sometimes used by writers where we now use with, but I think improperly.

Time brings means to furnish him withal;

Let him but wait the occasions as they fall. Daniel.

It is to know what God loves and delights in, and is pleased withal, and would have us do in order to our happiness.

We owe to Christianity the discovery of the most perfect rule of life that ever the world was acquainted withal.

To WITHDRAW, v. a. [with and draw; from prō, or prōen, Saxon, against, and draw.]

1. To take back; to bereave.

It is not possible they should observe the one, who from the other withdraw unnecessarily obedience.

Impossible it is that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite.

To call away; to make to retire.

Nauicaa is withdrawn, and a whole nation introduced, for a more general praise of Ulysses.

To WITHDRAW, v. n. To retire; to retreat.

She from her husband soft withdrew. Milton.

At this exact of courage all amaz'd,

The foremost of his foes awhile withdraw;

With such respect in enter'd Rome they gaz'd,

Who on high chairs the godlike fathers saw. Dryd.

Dunmoy has pulled the room of life, but cannot withdraw from entertainments which are pardonable only before that stage of our being.

WITHDRAWING ROOM, n. f. [withdraw and room.] Room behind another room, for retirement.

For an ordinary gentleman, a hall, a great parlour, with a withdrawing room, with a kitchen, but-teries, and other conveniences, is sufficient.

With, n. f.

1. A willow twig.

An Irish rebel put up a petition, that he might be hanged in a with, and not a halter, because it had been so used with former rebels.

There let him lie

Till I, of cut-up offers, did imply

A with, a farthing long, with which his feet

I made together in a sure league meet. Chapman.

2. A band, properly a band of twigs. [with signifies a band.]

These cords and withes will hold men's consciences, when force attends and twists them.

Rich is of use for ox-yokes, hoop, &c. with, for rigging.

To WITHER, v. n. [gripshenob, Saxon, dry, faded.]

1. To fade; to grow sapless; to dry up.

The which is, of the three, the most of that ability which he hath given; that which is otherwise, but it withers even in the root from whence it hath sprung.

When I have pluck'd a thy rose,

I can't give it vital growth again.

It needs must with.

It shall with in all the leaves of her spring.

The soul may sooner leave off to fulfill than to love, and, like the vine, it withers and dies, if it has nothing to embrace.

2. To waste, or pine away.

Are there so many left of your own family that you should draw wholly to reduce it, by suffering the last branch of it to with away before its time?

3. To lose or want animal moisture.

Vain men, how vanishing a bliss we crave,

Now warm in love, now with'ring in the grave!

To WITHER, v. a.

1. To make to fade.

The sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withers the plants, and the flower thereof witheth.

2. To make to shrink, decay, or wrinkle, for want of animal moisture.

Age cannot with her, nor custom stale her infinite variety.

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine aim is, like a blasted sapling, with'd up.

So with'd, and so wild in their attire,

That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,

And yet are on't?

Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change

To with'd, weak, and gilly

In Spain our springs, like old men's children, be decay'd and with'd from their infancy;

No kindly showers fall on our barren earth,

To hatch the seasons in a timely birth.

WITHERBAND, n. f. A piece of iron which is laid under a saddle, about four fingers above the horse's withers, to keep the two pieces of wood tight that form the bow.

WITHEREDNESS, n. f. [from withered.] The state of being withered; marcidness.

Water them as soon as let, till they have covered their withers.

WITHERS, n. f. Is the joining of the shoulder-bones at the bottom of the neck and mane, towards the upper part of the shoulder.

Let the gall'd beast wince;

We are unwilling in the withers.

Rather than let your master take long journeys, continue that the saddle may pinch the beast in his withers.

WITHERWRUNG. The hurt expressed by witherswring (sometimes is caused by a bite of a horse, or by a saddle being unfit, especially when the bows are too wide; for, when they are so, they bruise the flesh against the spines of the second and third vertebrae of the back, which forms that prominence that rises above their shoulders.

To WITHHOLD, v. a. [with and hold.] Withheld, or withholden, pret. and part. Spenser has, for the sake of rhyme, very licentiously written withbault.

1. To restrain; to keep from action; to hold back.

That hand, which as no kind of imminent danger could cause at first to withhold itself, so neither have any practices, so many, so bloody, following since, been ever able to make weary.

Sith mine he is, or free or bound.

Withhold, O sovereign prince, your hasty hand

From limiting leagues with him.

Would fain have come with me to meet your grace;

And by his mother was performed withheld.

A great number of faults are for abative words, or a box on the ear, or other trivial injuries, which leave no permanent ill effects, but, if our passions may be withheld from estimating them, pass off without making us the worse, or doing us any prejudice.

Be careful to withhold

Your talons from the wretched and the bold;

Tempt not the brave and needy to despair;

For, though your violence should leave them bare

Or gold and silver, swords and darts remain. Dryd.

Withhold is an act of the mind, knowingly exerting that dominion it takes itself to have over any part of man, by employing it in, or withholding it from, any particular action.

2. To hinder; to obstruct.

What difficulties there are which as yet withhold our assent, till we be further and better satisfied, I hope no indifferent amongst them will scorn or refuse to hear.

3. To take away; to refuse.

Soon as Titan gain his head exault,

And soon again as he his light withbault,

Their wicked engines they against it bent.

WITHHOLDEN, part. pass. of withhold.

The word keep back, sheweth that it was: thing formerly due unto God; for we cannot say that any thing is kept back, or withholden, that was not due before.

WITHHOLDER, n. f. [from withhold.] He who withholds.

WITHIN, prep. [pridinun, Saxon.]

1. In the inner part of.

Who then shall blame

His peevish senses to recoil and start,

3 U

When all that is within him does condemn
 Is it not being there? Shakspeare's Macbeth.
 By this mean, not only many helpless persons will be provided for, but a generation of men will be healed, without medicines, not prevented by any other way. Spurr.

Till this be cured by me, it is as impossible for a man to be happy, than it is for a sick man to be cured. Till.

The more I am inward, wholly lost within the world of the inner, that one discovers nothing like a man, but within about a quarter of a mile from the city. Addison.

2. In the compass of; not beyond - used both of time and time.

Next day a new, and for a knowing before us,
 the clouds, which had been in the tops of land. Bacon.
 As he is a man, and a death-root, which had all the leaves and close to the roots, within six weeks had out leaves. Bacon.

Most birds come to their growth within a fortnight.
Bacon.

Within some while the king had taken up such liking of his person, that he resolved to make him a masterpiece. Wotton.

The invention of arts necessary or useful to human life, hath been within the knowledge of men. Bacon.

As to infinite space, a man can no more have a positive idea of the greater, than he has of the less. For in this latter, which is more within our comprehension, we are capable only of a comparative idea of smallness, which will always be less than any one whereof we have the positive idea. Locke.

This, with the green hills and naked rocks,
within the neighbourhood, make the most agreeable confusion. Addison.

Boundaries of cities within the line which birth and fortune have marked out, is an indispensable duty of man. Atterbury.

3. Not reaching to any thing external.

With every action concluded within itself, and drew no consequences after it, we should undoubtedly never err in our choice of good. Locke.

4. Not longer ago than.

Within these five hours Hastings liv'd Untaken, unconquered, free at liberty. Shakspeare.

Within these three hours, Tullus,
 About I taught in your Coriolanus walls,
 And more what work I pleas'd. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

5. Into the reach of.

When on the bank the foaming boar I met,
 The deep voice rous'd my soul to my force,
 And with me headlong with him down the rock.
Gray.

6. In the reach of.

Secure of outward force, within himself
 The daring hero, yet lies within his power;
 Against him will he can receive no harm. Milton.
 I have suffer'd in your love;
 Nor shall my winning sighs at your my power
 For your sake. Dryden.

Though I am a conqueror,
 Both he and she are still within my power. Dryden.

7. Into the heart of; confidence of.

When by such insinuation, they have once got within him, and are able to drive him on from one lewdness to another, no wonder if they rejoice to be him guilty of all villainy. South.

8. Not exceeding.

Be inform'd how much your husband's revenue amounts to, and be so good a computer as to keep it. South.

9. In the inclosure of.

No man is so close a garden made,
 To hide his brows within the vulgar shade;
 But his wretchedness round his temples spreads. Addison.
 So many and within doors arts, and delicate artifices, that require rather the finger than the arm, have a contrivance to a military disposition.
Bacon's Natural History.

WITHIN. adv.

1. In the inner parts; inwardly; internally.

This is yet the outward, fairest side
 Of our design. Within rests more of fear,
 More dread of sad event yet undescried. Danby.

Yet sure, tho' the skin
 Be clos'd without, the wound festers within. Carew.

Death thou hast seen
 In his first shape on man; but many shapes
 Of death, and many are the ways that lead
 To his grim cave; all dismal; yet to sense
 More terrible at th' entrance than within. Milton.

2. In the mind.

Language seems too low a thing to express your excellence, and our souls are speaking so much within, that they despite all foreign conversation.
Dryden's State of Innocence.

These as thy guards from outward harms are sent;
 Ills from within thy reason must prevent. Dryden.

WITHINSIDE. adv. [within and side.]

 inclosed by the Romish church, without any meritable ground to hold it on. Hanmer.

If the ideas be not innate, there was a time when the mind was without those principles, and then they will not be innate, but be derived from some other source. Locke.

4. Beyond; not within the compass of.

Eternity, both the world and after, is without our reach; but that little spot of ground that lies betwixt those two great oceans, this we are to cultivate. Burton's Theory.

5. Supposing the negation or omission of.

Without the formation of the two most armies, the most advantageous terms from the French multitude in our destruction. Addison.

6. Not by; not by the use of; not by the help of.

Excess of diet, in costly meats and drinks fetch'd from beyond the sea, would be avoided; wife men will do it without a law, I would there might be a law to restrain fools. Bacon.

There is in a manner two sorts of virgin mercury, the one running out and discovering itself without labour; the other requiring some way of extraction and separation, though not so high in one as by fire. Brown's Travels.

7. On the outside of.

Without the gate
 Some drive the cars, and some the couriers rein. Dryden.

8. Not within.

 ing was very prompt from without and from within.
Wotton.

Their doors are barr'd against a bitter frost;
 Snarl, if you please, but you shall snarl without.
Dryden.

3. Externally; not in the mind.

Without, conjunct. Unless; if not;
 except. Not in use, except in conversation.

I find my love shall be proved no love, without
 I leave to love, being too unfit a vessel in whom so high thoughts should be engrav'd. Sidney.

You will never live to my age, without you keep yourselves in breath with exercise, and in heart with joyfulness. Sidney.

WITHOUTEN. prep. [pißutan, Saxon.]

Without. Obsolete.

Her face so fair as flesh it seem'd not,
 But heavenly portrait of bright angel's hue,
 Clear as the sky, withouten blame or blot,
 Through goodly mixture of complexion's dew. Spenser.

TO WITHSTAND. v. a. [with and stand.]

To gainstand; to oppose; to resist.

The violence of sorrow is not at the first to be sin withal; being, like a mighty beast, sooner tamed with following, than overthrown by with- standing. Locke.

The wonderful zeal and fervour which ye have withstood the sacred orders of this church, was the first thing which caused me to enter into consideration, whether every christian man, fearing God, should be bound to join with you. Hooker.

It is our frailty that in many things we all do amiss, but a virtue that we would do amiss in no thing, and a testimony of that virtue, that when we pray that what occasion of sin forever do offend itself, we may be strengthened from above to withstand
 it. Hooker.

They soon set sail; nor now the fates withstand;
 Then forces trusted with a foreign hand. Dryden.

When Lyons withstood Paul and Barnabas, and when Paul, of Alexander, he hath greatly with- stood our words, do we think the withstanding there was without speaking? Atterbury.

WITHSTANDER. n. f. [from withstand.]

An opponent; resisting power.

War may be defined the exercise of violence under sovereign command against withstanders; force, authority, and resistance being the essential parts thereof. Raleigh.

WITHWIND. n. f. [convolvulus, Latin.]

An herb.

WIT. n. f. [pißig, Saxon.] Willow.

A tree.

WITLESS. adj. [from wit.] Wanting under- standing; inconsiderate; wanting thought.

Why then should witless man so much misween
 That nothing is but that which he hath seen? Spenser.

I have ever lov'd the life remov'd;
 And hid in idle peace to hunt assemblies,
 Where youth, and cost, and witless bravery keeps. Shakspeare.

So 't pleas'd my destiny,
Guilt of my sin of going, to think me
As vain, as witless, and as false as they
Which dwell in court. Donne.

He kept us slaves, by which we fitly prove That witless pity breeds the witless love. Fairfax.

The apple's outward form,
Delectable, the witless twain beguiles,
Till with a withen mouth and spattering noise
He cast the bitter morsel and rejects. Philips.

WITLING. n. f. [diminutive of wit.] A pretender to wit; a man of petty smartness.

You have taken off the senseless ridicule which for many years the witlings of the town have turned upon their fathers and mothers. Add. Spect.
These half-baked witlings, numerous in our life
As half-formed ducks on the banks of Nile. Pope.
A brain and witling perished in the throng;
One died in metaphor, and one in song. Pope.

WITNESS. n. f. [from wit, Saxon.]

1. Testimony; attestation.

pairs of animals at their creation; and it had effect with a witless. Woodward.

Now all is bitter with a witless;
And love is all deceit and sweet. Prior.

To WITNESS. v. a. [from the noun.] To attest; to tell with affirmation.

There ran a rumour
Of many witless fellows that were out,
Which was to my belief witless the rather,
For that I saw the tyrant's power a-foot. Shakespeare.
Though by the father he were wife'd to this,
He never could see witless any touch of kiss. Donne.
There be those discourses of God, whose effects those that live witless in themselves; the sensible in their sensible natures, the reasonable in their reasonable souls. Raleigh.

To WITNESS. v. n. To bear testimony.

The sea have with the words which should be louder, and the sounds of the ship, with a ghostly noise, to tell me that we in it were witless that their rum was the water of the others contention. Sidney.
Mine eye doth his ethereal witless
Most truly hand'd and living in your face. Shakespeare.
Witless, you ever burning lights above!
You elements that clip us round about!
Witless that here I go now doth give
The execution of his wit, hands, and heart
To Othello's service. Shakespeare.

Lorenzo

some. Sidney.
The old hermit, that never saw pen and ink, very wittrily said to a niece of king Goodoback, that that is, is. Shakespeare.

Obscure contempters of all helps and aids, such as, presuming on their natural parts, do divide all dignity, and sit to mock at the terms when they understand not the things, think that way to get off wittrily with their ignorance. Ben Jonson.

WITTRINESS. n. f. [from wittrily.] The quality of being witty.

No less wittriness his wittriness in devising, his patience in uttering, his pastoral tenderness, and his moral wisdom. Sidney.

WITTRING. a. j. [from wittriness, knowing; pizant, Saxon, to weet or know.]
Knowingly; not ignorantly; with knowledge; by design.

Whatsoever we work at men, the same we do wittringly work and freely, neither are we, according to the manner of natural agents, any way so-tied, but that it is in our power to leave things we do undone. Hobbes.

Withhold revenge, 'tis not my fault,
Nor wittringly have I infring'd my vow.

During that dreadful siege, every particular accident for brevity I wittringly pass over.

He knowingly and wittringly brought evil into the world. Alph.

No forger of lies willingly and wittringly furnished out the means of his own detection.

Wit on the Resurrection.

WITTOL. n. f. [from wit, Saxon, from pi-tan, to know.] A man who knows the falsehood of his wife, and seems contented; a tame cuckold.

O Mrs, for what dost thou have thy arm'd as?
To let that wittol bear comfort in his bed?
Thy Venus child.
Anamion founds well, Lucius well, yet they are the names of friends, but wittol, wittol, the devil himself hath not such a name.

The Wittol, when he once d' wittol s
To let that wittol bear comfort in his bed?

ular, as the part of picture of a woman's wifely, and wifely faithful. Sidney.

WIFES. n. f. The plural of wife.

A man of his learning should not so lightly have been carried away with old wifery tales, from approbation of his own story. Shakespeare's Friend.

WIZARD. n. f. [from wife.] A conjurer; an inchanter; a he witch. It had probably at first a laudable meaning.

Patience, good lady, wizards know their times.
Shakespeare.

He heard ens after prophecies and dreams,
And from the cross-row plucks the letter G;
And says, a wizard told him that by G
His issue disinherited should be. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

3 U 2 That

That dam'd wizard, hid in fly disguise,
For so by certain signs I knew, had met Already, ere my best speed could prevent,
The archer's innocent lady, his wish'd piny. Milton.
The prophecies of wizards old Increas'd her terror, and her tall foretold. Waller.
The wily wizard must be caught,
For, unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for nought. Dryden.

WO. n. f. [pa, Saxon.]

1. Grief; sorrow; misery; calamity.

The king is mad; how stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up and have ingenious feeling
Of my huge sorrows! better I were distract;
So should my thoughts be never from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shak. King Lear.
So many miseries have craz'd my voice,
That my wearied tongue is still. Shakespeare.
Her rash hand in evil hour
Forth reaching to the trait, Eve pluck'd, the eat
Earth felt the wound; and nature from her seat
Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe
That all was lost. Milton's Paradise Lost.
O'er dreary wastes they weep each other's woe. Pope.

2. It is often used in denunciations, wo be; or in exclamations of sorrow, wo is; anciently wo warin; pa, puið, Saxon.

All is but lip wisdom which wants experience:
I now, wo is me! do try what love can do. Sidney.
Woe is my heart!

That poor soldier, that so richly fought,
Whose rags than'd gilded arms, whose naked breast
Stept before shields of proof, cannot be found. Shakespeare.

Many of our prince's, woe the while Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood. Shak.
Happy are they which have been my friends, and woe to my lord chief-justice. Shak. Henry IV.
How! ye, wo worth the day. Exekul, xxx. 2.
Wo be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves. Ez.
Wo is me for my hurt, my wound is grievous. Jer. x. 19.

He took and laid it by, and wept for woe.

If God be such a being as I have described, wo to the world if it were without him: this would be a thousand times greater loss to mankind than the extinguishing of the sun. T. Wilson.
Wo to the vanquish'd, woe! Dryden's Albion

3. A denunciation of calamity; a curse.

Can there be a wo or curse in all the stores of vengeance equal to the malignity of such a practice, of which one single instance could involve all mankind in one confusion? South.

4. Wo seems in phrases of denunciation or imprecation to be a substantive, and in exclamation an adjective; as particularly in the following lines, which seem improper and ungrammatical:

We are we, Sir! you may not live to wear
All your true followers out. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

WOAN. n. f. [pab, Saxon; glastum, Lat.] A plant.

In times of old, when Pithy nymphs were known
To lo: no foreign fictions like their own;
When dress was modest, and the leaves the mode,
And quality put on ne: at but woan. Garth.

WO'BEGONE. adj. [a and begone.] Lost in wo; distracted in wo; overwhelmed with sorrow.

Such a man,
So full, so dead in look, to woebegone,
Drew Priam's curtain in the dew of night,
And would have told him half his Troy was burn'd,
But Priam found the fire, ere he his tongue. Shak.

Who for woebegone
For Oche, as the title of ancient Avalon? Drayton.
Tancred he saw his life's joy set at naught,
So woebegone was he with pains of love. Lairfax.

WOFF. The obsolete participle passive from To woff.

A braver choice of dauntless spirits
Than now the English bottoms have woff, Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakespeare.

WO'FUL. adj. [wo and full]

The wo'ful Gynecia, to whom rest was no ease, had left her loathed lodging, and gotten her self into the solitary places those deserts were full of. Swin.
How many wo'ful widows left to bow
To sad disgrace! Daniel's Civil War.
In a town, and never to be loos'd,
The wo'ful captive kinsmen are inclus'd. Dryden.

2. Calamitous; afflictive.

Woful extravagance ends in wo'ful want. Prov.
O wo'ful day! O day of woe! Phillips.

3. Wretched; paltry; sorry.

What wo'ful stuff this marriage would be,
In some slav'd hackney-fornice, or me!
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens! how the style refines! Pope.

WO'FULLY. adv. [from wo'ful]

1. Sorrowfully; mournfully.

He who would pass such a judgment upon his condition, as shall be confirmed at that great tribunal, from which there is no appeal, will find himself wo'fully deceived, if he judges of his spiritual estate by any of these measures. South.

WO'RUIFNESS. n. f. [from wo'ful.] Mifery; calamity.

WO'LD. n. f. Wold, whether singly or jointly, in the names of places, signifies a plain open country; from the Saxon polb, a plain and a place without wood.

Wold on Wald with the Saxon, signified a ruler or governor, from whence herwald is a famous governor, aribald a noble governor; herwald, and by invention waldber, a general of an army.

WOLF. [pals, Saxon; wolf, Dutch.]

1. A kind of wild dog that devours sheep:
thence any thing ravenous or destructive.

No, rather I align all roofs, and chuse
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl, Necessity's sharp pinch. Shakespeare's King Lear.
It wolves had it they care now'd that stern rum,
Thou shouldst have seen, O, porter, turn the key,
All cruis's else subsiding. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. An eating ulcer.

How dangerous it is in sensible things to use metaphorical expressions, and what absurd conceits the vulgar will swallow in the literals, an example we have in our profession, who having called an eating ulcer by the name of wolf, common apprehension conceive a reality therein. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

WO'LFDOG. n. f. [wolf and dog.]

Wom n are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible,
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, unworkable. Shakespeare.

And Abimelech took men servants and women servants. Genesis.
O woman, lovely woman, nature so m'd thee
To temper man: we had been brutes without thee. Orway.

Census a woman once, and once a man;
But ending in the sex the first began. Dryd. F. & A.
Wom n are made as thy theme: they would chide,
Too proud to ask, too humble to refuse. Garth.
Wom n in their nature are much more gay and joyous than men, whether it be that their blood is more refined, their fibres more delicate, and their animal spirits more light; vivacity is the gift of women, gravity that of men. Addison.

2. A female attendant on a person of rank.

I could not personally deliver to her
What you commanded me, but by her woman
I sent your message. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
To WO'MAN. v. a. [from the noun.] To

To have him see me woman'd. Shakespeare's Othello.

WOMANHATER. n. f. [woman and bater.]
One that has an aversion from the female sex.

How could it come into your mind,
To pitch on me, of all mankind,
Against the sex to write a satire,
And brand me for a womanbater? Swift.

WO'MANHEAD. } n. f. [from woman.] The character and collective qualities of a woman. Obsolete.

No in her speech, no in her haviour,
Was lightness seen, or looser vanity,
But gracious womanhood and gravity. Spenser.
There dwells sweet love and constant chastity,
Unspotted faith, and comely womanhead,
Regard of honour, and mild modesty. Spenser.
'Tis present death I beg; and one thing more,
That womanhood denies my tongue to tell:
O keep me from their worse than killing lust. Shakespeare.

When my grave is broke up again,
Some second guest to entertain;
For graves have learn'd that womanhead,
To be to more than one a bed. Donne.

You a world of curses undergo,
 Being the agents, or base second means. Shakespeare.
 Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company;
 For you in my respect are all the world. Shakespeare.
 I leave to the world of other attempts turn-nish'd by kings. Raleigh's Apology.
 Garments richly woven
 And worlds of prize. Chapman.
 In double histie fable barks: with him a world of men
 Most strong and full of valure went. Chapman.
 What a world of contradictions would follow upon the contrary opinion, and what a world of confusions upon the contrary practice! Bishop Sanderson.

Just so romances are, for what else
 Is in them all but love and battles?
 O'th' first of these we've no great matter
 To treat of, but a world o'th' latter. Hudibras.
 It brought into this world a world of war. Milton.

There were a world of paintings, and among the rest the picture of a lion.

 hands, subjects us to law-suits, and loans us with domestic cares. Dryden.

From thy corporeal prison freed,
 Soon hast thou reach'd the goal with mended pace;
 A world of woes dispatch'd in little space. Dryden.
 Why will you fight against so sweet a passion,
 And steel your heart to such a world of charms? Addison.

9. Mankind; an hyperbolical expression for many: all the world is a favourite phrase, in French, for many.

This hath bred high terms of separation between such and the rest of the world, whereby the one sort are named the brethren, the godly; the other, worldlings, time-servers, pleasers of men more than
 of God. Hooker.

'Tis the duke's pleasure,
 Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
 Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd. Shakespeare. King Lear.
 Thus the world may see what 'tis to innovate! Drayton.

 Love lost poor Antony the world. Priest.

12. The manners of men; the practice of life.

Children should not know any wickedness. Old folks have discretion, and know the world. Slack.
 What, start at this! when sixty years have spread
 Their grey experience o'er thy hoary head?
 Is this the all observing age could gain?
 O! hast thou known the world to long in vain? Dryden.

If knowledge of the world makes man perfidious,
 May Juba ever live in ignorance. Addison's Cato.

The girl might pass, if we could get her
 To know the world a little better;
 To know the world! a modern phrase
 For visits, ombre, balls, and plays. Swift.

13. Every thing that the world contains.

Had I now a thousand worlds, I would give them all for one year more, that I might present to God one year of such devotion and good works, as I never before so much as intended. Law.

14. A large tract of country; a wide compass of things.

'Tis I who love's Columbus am, 'tis I
 That must new worlds in it descry. Cowley.

15. A collection of wonders; a wonder.
 Obsolete.

The buffa having recommended Barbarossa, it was a world to see, how the court was changed upon him. Knotch.

16. Time. A sense originally Saxon;
 now only used in world without end.

17. In the world. In possibility.

All the precautions in the world were taken for the marriage of his younger brother. Addison.

18. For all the world. Exactly. A ludicrous sense, now little used.

He had a pair of horns like a bull, his feet cloven, as many eyes upon his body as my grey mare hath dapples, and for all the world so plac'd. Shakespeare.

WORLDLINESS. n. f. [from worldly.] Covetousness; additiveness to gain.

WORLDLING. n. f. [from world.] A mortal set upon profit.

Base minded wretches! are your thoughts so deeply berr'd in the trade of ordinary worldling, as for respect of gain to let so much time pass? Sidney.

The one sort are named the brethren, the godly;
 the other worldlings, time-servers, and pleasers of men more than pleasers of God. Hooker.

God of the world and worldlings,
 Great Mammon! greatest god below the sky. Spenser.

For his weeping in the needless stream;
 Poor dear, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
 As worldlings do, giving thy sum of money
 To that which had too much. Shakespeare's As you like it.

That other on his friends his thoughts bestows:
 The covetous worldling, in his anxious mind,
 Thinks only on the wealth he left behind. Dryden.

WOR

If we consider the expectations of futurity, the worldling gives up the argument. Rogers.

WORLDLY. adj. [from world.]

1. Secular; relating to this life, in contradistinction to the life to come.

He is divinely bent to meditation;
And in no worldly suits would he be moved,
To draw him from his holy exercise.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

Ha! thou not worldly pleasure at command?

Shakespeare.

The fortitude of a christian consists in patience; not in enterprizes which the poets call heroic, and which are commonly the effects of interest, pride, and worldly honour.

Dryden.

Compare the happiness of men and beasts no farther than it results from worldly advantages.

Atterbury.

As to worldly affairs, which my friends thought too heavy upon me, they are most of them of our own making, and fall away as soon as we know ourselves.

Law.

tion, trial would be made by clarifying by adhesion, with milk put into new beer, and stirred with it.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

8. It has the signification of I wish, or I pray. This, I believe, is improper, and formed by a gradual corruption of the phrase, would God; which originally imported, that God would, might God will, might God decree. From this phrase, it understood, came would to God, thence

I would to God, and thence I would, or elliptically would, came to signify I wish: and so it is used even in good authors, but ought not to be imitated.

With such a strength, as made me then held fit
To lead men with Ulysses.

Chapman.

This is yet the outward, fairest side

Of our design: within rests more of fear

Than, my most worthy lords, I would there were.

Daniel.

Would thou hadst hearken'd to my words, and

Ray'd

With me, as I brought thee, when that strange Desire of wand'ring, this unhappy morn, Possess'd thee.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Would God we might prevent the need of such unkindly expedients, and, by a thankful sense of what we have, provide to conserve it. Dec. of Pity
I scarce am pleas'd, I timely mount the throne,
Would Aurengzebe had all their souls in one. Dry
And would to heav'n the storm you felt would bring

On Cirrhanian coasts your wand'ring king. Dry

Wound. n. f. [from would.] Motion of detine; disposition to any thing; pro-pension; inclination; incipient purpose

Hammors.

Wound. n. f. [pund, Saxon; wunde,
Dutch.] A hurt given by violence.

I am taint, my goddess cry for help.

—So well thy words become thee as thy count's,

They smack of honour both.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Now show the wound mine eyes have made in
thee;

Scratch thee here, and there remains
Some tear of it.

Shakespeare.

He, stooping, open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib: wide was the wound,

But suddenly fill'd up and heal'd.

Milton

Not poison, but a wound, the soldier flew. Kenne.

The aliment of such as have fresh wounds should be mild, without stimulating or saline substances.

Arbutnot on Animals

They feel the smart and see the fear of their former wounds, and know that they must be made a sacrifice to the least attempt towards a change.

Swift.

To WOUND. v. a. [from the noun.] To hurt by violence.

The untoward woundings of a father's curse

Pierc'd ev'ry sense about thee.

Wrack. n. f. [wrack, Dutch; præce, Saxon, a wreck. The poets use wrack or wreck indifferently, as rhyme requires; the later writers of prose commonly wreck. See Wreck.]

1. Destruction of a ship by winds or rocks.

Now with full sail into the port I move,

And safely can unlade my breast of love,

Quiet and calm: why should I then go back,

To tempt the second hazard of a wrack?

Dryden.

2. Ruin; destruction. This is the true Saxon meaning.

With use of evil, growing more and more evil, they took delight in slaughter, and pleased themselves in making others wrack the effect of their power.

Sidney.

A world devote to universal wrack.

Milton.

Dutch. Min/brow, wrong, Skinner.] To dispute peevishly; to quarrel perversely;
to altercation; to squabble.

Yet, for a score of kingdoms you should wrangle,

And I would call it fair play.

Shakespeare's Temp.

Some unhatch'd practice

Hath puddled his clear spirit; and in such cases

Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,

Though great ones are their object.

Shakespeare's Othello.

How wounding a spectacle is it to see those, who were by Christ designed for fishers of men, picking up shells on the shore, and unmanly wrangling about them too.

Decay of Pity.

in

In incomplete ideas we impose on ourselves, and wrangle with others. Locke.

Amongst unthinking men, who examine not scrupulously ideas, but confound them with words, there must be endless dispute and wrangling. Locke.

His great application to the law had not infected his temper with any thing litigious, he did not know what it was to wrangle on indifferent points. Addison's Freeholder.

Full'd with the sense of age, the fire of youth, A scorn of wrangling, yet a zeal for truth. Pope.
And all the question, wrangle e'er so long,
Is only this, if God has plac'd him wrong? Pope.

1. Revenge; vengeance. Obsolete.

Fortune, mine avowed foe,
Her wrathful wreaks themselves do now ally. Spenser.

Join with the Goths, and with revengeful war
Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the wretched Saturnine. Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

Some ill's behind, rude swaine, for thee to beare;
That fear'd not to devour thy guests, and break
All laws of humane; Jove sends therefore wreaks. Chapman.

2. Passion; furious fit. Obsolete.

What and if
His sorrows have so overwhelm'd his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wreaks,
His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness? Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

WRE'AKFUL. adj. [from wreak.] Revengeful; angry. Not in use.

Call the creatures
Whose naked natures live in all the spite
Of wreakful heaven. Shakespeare.

She in Olympus' top Must visit Vulcan for new arms, to drive her wrathful son. Chapman's Iliad.

WRE'AKLESS. adj. [I know not whether this word be miswritten for reckless, careless; or comes from wreak, revenge, and means unrevenging.]

So flies the wreakless shepherd from the wolf;
So fitt the harmless flock doth yield his fleece,
And next his throat unto the butcher's knife. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

WREATH. n. f. [pnæð, Saxon.]

1. Any thing curled or twilled.

The wreath of three was made a wreath of five:
to these three first titles of the two houses were added the authorities parliamentary and papal. Bacon's Henry VII.

Clouds began
To darken all the hill, and smoke to roll
In dusky wreaths reluctant flames. Milt. Par. Lost.

He of his tortuous train
Curl'd many a wanton wreath. Milton.

Let alta's smoke,
And richest gums, and spice, and incense roll
Their fragrant wreaths to heav'n. Smith's Phœdra and Hippolitus.

2. A garland; a chaplet.

Now we our brow bound with victorious wreaths,
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Drop'd from his head, a wreath lay on the ground.

The boughs of Lotos, form'd into a wreath,
This monument, thy maiden beauty's due,
High on a plane-tree shall be hung to view. Dryden.

That which I most speak
Must either punish me, not being believ'd,
Or bring redress from you.

Shakspeare. Measure for Measure.

Thirty years,

Threatening cruel death, constrain'd the bride
To swing from me, and toil to turn, my licet

Milton

7. To harass; to distress; to torture.

He dives into the king's soul, and there teatters
Doubtful dangers, wringing of the conscience,
Fear and despair, and all these for his marriage.

Shakspeare.

Pleasure enchants, impetuous rage transports,
And grief depicts and wrings the tortur'd soul.

Roy. on on

I'll tell thee taste but half the griefs
That wring my soul, thou couldst not talk thus Coldly.

Addison.

8. To distort; to turn to a wrong purpose.

To wring this sentence, to twist thereby out of men's hands the knowledge of God's doctrine, is without all reason.

Alkan's Schoolmaster.

Lord, how dare these men thus wring the scriptures?

Whigfite.

9. To persecute with extortion.

The merchant adventurers have been often wringed and wringed to the quick; but were never quick and lively in thanks to those by whose endeavours they were freed.

Hayward.

To WRING. v. n. To writhe with anguish.

'Tis all men's office to speak patience
To those that wring under the load of sorrow;
But no man's virtue nor sufficiency
To be so moral, when he shall endure
The like himself.

Shak. Much ado about Nothing.

WRINGER. n. f. [from wring.] One who squeezes the water out of clothes.

One Mrs. Quickly is in the manner of his nurse, his laundress, his washer, and his wringer.

Shakspeare.

WRINKLE. n. f. [puncle, Saxon; wrinkel, Dutch.]

1. Corrugation or furrow of the skin or the face.

Give me that glass, and therein will I read:
No deeper wrinkles yet! Hath sorrow struck
So many blows upon this face of mine,
And made no deeper wounds? Shak. Richard II.
She hath continued a virgin without any visible token, or least wrinkle, of old age.

Howel's Vocal Forest.

To see a beggar's brat in riches flow,
Adds not a wrinkle to my even brow.

Dryden.

Though you, and all your senseless tribe,
Could art, or time, or nature bribe,
To make you look like beauty's queen,
And hold for ever at sixteen;
No bloom of youth can ever blind
The cracks and wrinkles of your mind:
All men of sense will pass your door,
And crowd to Stella's at fourscore.

Swift.

2. Rump of cloth.

3. Any roughness.

Our British heaven was all serene;
No threatening cloud was nigh,
Not the least wrinkle to deform the sky.

Dryden.

To WRINKLE. v. n. [puncian, Saxon.]

1. To corrugate; to contract into furrows.

It is still fortune's eye
To let the wretched man outlive his wealth,
To live with hollow eye and wrinkled brow
An age of poverty.

Shakspeare. Merchant of Venice.

Scan and be us wrinkle up the eye, and stretch the web of it, at the same time drawing up the upper lip.

Here some ascend,

That in madd'ning turns the wrinkled nose offend.
Here it is all up, like an ancient maid,
Her wrinkled town in black and white array'd.

Pope.

WRIT. n. f. [from write.]

1. Any thing written; scripture. This sense is now chiefly used in speaking of the Bible.

The church, as a witness, preacheth his mere revealed truth, by reading publicly the sacred scripture; that a second kind of preaching is the reading of holy writ.

Hook.

Divine Eliza, faced empress,
Live the for ever, and her royal places
Be fill'd with praises of divinest wits,
That her eternize with their heavenly writ.

Spenser.

Bagdat rises out of the ruins of the old city of Babylon, so much spoken of in holy writ.

Knight's History of the Turks.

Others famous after known,
Although in holy writ not nam'd. Par. Regained.
He cannot keep his fingers from meddling with holy writ.

More's Divine Dialogues.

Sacred writ our reason does exceed. Waller.
His story, filled with so many surprising incidents, bears so close an analogy with what is delivered in holy writ, that it is capable of pleasing the most delicate reader, without giving offence to the most scrupulous.

Addison's Spectator.

Of ancient writ unlocks the learned store,
Consults the dead, and lives past ages o'er.

Pope.

2. A judicial process, by which any one is summoned as an offender.

Hold up your head, hold up your hand:
Would it were not my lot to shew ye
This cruel writ, wherein you stand Indicted by the name of Chloë.

as delinquents; and all three famous writers.

Bacon.

Peaceable times are the best to live in, though not so proper to furnish materials for a writer.

Addison's Freeholders

Writers are often more influenced by a desire of fame, than a regard to the public good.

Addison's Freeholder.

Would a writer know how to behave himself with relation to posterity, let him consider in old books what he finds that he is glad to know, and what omissions he most laments.

Swift.

To WRITE. v. a. [pwrán, Saxon.]

1. To distort; to deform with distortion.

It cannot be this weak and writted shrimp
Should strike such terror in his enemies.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Hatefullest distrelsh writb'd their jaws
With foot and cinders.

Milton.

Her mouth she writb'd, her forehead taught to frown,

Her eyes to sparkle fires to love unknown;
Her tallow cheeks her envious mind did shew,
And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the curstness of a shew.

Dryden.

2. To twist with violence.

Then Satan first knew pain,
And writb'd him to and fro convolv'd.

Milton's Par. Lost.

Amid the plaited scales it took its course,
And in the spinal marrow spent its force;
The monster hush'd aloud, and rag'd in vain,
And writb'd his body to and fro with pain;
He bit the dart.

Addison.

3. To wrest; to force by violence; to torture; to distort.

The reason which he yieldeth, sheweth the least part of his meaning to be that whereunto his words are writted.

Hooker.

4. To twist.

The king of heav'n
Baid his red arm, and launching from the sky
His written bolts, not shaking empty smoke,
Down to the deep abyss the flaming telon strook.

Dryden.

TO WRITHE. v. n. To be convolved with agony or torture.

Let each be broken on the rack;
Then, with what life remains, impal'd, and left
To writhe at leisure round the bloody stake.

Add.

TO WRITTLE. v. a. [from writhe.] To winkle; to corrugate. Obsolete.

Her writtled skin, as rough as maple rind,
So feebly was, that 'twould have loath'd all wr- mark'd.

Spenser.

WRITING. n. f. [from writ.]

1. A legal instrument; as, the writings of an estate.

Gentlemen keep writings in their closets, ladies medicines.

Seller.

2. A compofure; a book.

They thought no other writings in the world should be studied; inasmuch as, one of their great prophets, exhorting them to cast away all respects unto human writings, to his motion they condescended.

Hooker.

Such arguments had an invincible force with those pagan philosophers who became Christians, as we find in most of their writings.

Addison.

3. A written paper of any kind.

In at his windows throw
Writings, all tending to the great opinion That Rome holds of his name.

Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

WRITINGMASTER. n. f. One who teaches to write.

The facility of which I spoke consists not in bold strokes, if it makes not a great effect at a distance: that sort of freedom belongs rather to a writingmaster than a painter.

Dryden.

WRITTEN. The participle passive of write.

Their doctrine and their story written left,
They die.

Milton.

Language is a connexion of audible signs, the most apt in nature for communication of our thoughts: written language is a delineation of the said audible signs by signs visible.

Holder.

WROKEN. The part. pass. of To wreck.

Spenser.

WRONG. n. f. [pnange, Saxon.].

1. An injury; a designed or known detriment; not right; not justice.

It is a harm, and no wrong, which he hath received.

Sidney.

She resolv'd to spend all her years, which he youth promised should be marry, in bewailing the wrong, and yet praying for the wrongdoer.

Sidney.

If he may not command them, then that law doth wrong that bindeth him to bring them forth to be justified.

Spenser.

They ever do pretend

To have receiv'd a wrong, who wring intend.

Daniel.

One spake much of right and wrong.
Imitation of an author is the most advantageous way for a translator to shew himself, but the greatest wrong which can be done to the reputation of the dead.

Dryden.

Cowley preferred a garden and a friend to those whom, in our own wrong, we call the great.

Dryden.

Expecting more in my own wrong,
Protracting life, I've liv'd a day too long.
In the judgment of right and wrong, every man has a felt.

Watts's Logic.

2. Error; not sight; not truth.

Be not blindly guided by the throng;
The multitude is always in the wrong.
Here was wrong on both sides, and what would follow but confusion?

Lesley.

Proceed, quoth Dick, Sir, I aver
You have already gone too far;
When people once are in the wrong,
Each line they add is much too long;
Who saitheth walks, but walks astray,
Is only farthest from his way.

Prior.

WRONG. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Not morally right; not just; not agreeable to propriety or truth; not true.

I find you are an invincible Amazon, since you will overcome, though in a wrong matter.
If it be right to comply with the wrong, then it is wrong to comply with the right.

Lesley.

When the dictates of honour are contrary to those of religion and equity, they give wrong, ambitious, and false ideas of what is good and laudable.

Addison's Spectator.

Their hearts are constantly employed, perverted, and kept in a wrong state, by the indistinct use of such things as are lawful to be used.

Law.

2. Not physically right; unfit; unsuitable.

Of Gloster's teacher,
And of the loyal service of his son,
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me for,
And told me I had ruin'd the wrong side out.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

We never think of the main business of life, till a vain repentance minds us of it at the wrong end.

L'Estrange.

Dividing a living of five hundred pounds a year into ten parts, is a contrivance, the meaning whereof hath got on the wrong side of my comprehension.

Swift.

Singularity shews something wrong in the mind.

Clarke.

3. Acting improperly.

Who want, while thro' black life they dream along,

Sense to be right, and passion to be wrong.

Taung.

WRONG. adv. Not rightly; amiss.

If he go wrong, she will give him over to his own ruin.

Fech.

A thousand odd caprices men's minds are acted by, may make one man quote another man's words wrong.

Locke.

Ten venture wrong, for one that wires amiss.

Pope.

TO WRONG. v. a. [from the noun.] To injure; to use unjustly, either by doing injury, or imputing evil without justice.

So worthy a part of divine service we should greatly wrong, if we did not esteem preaching as the blessed ordinance of God.

Hester.

For fear the stones beneath their feet should wrong,
Be strew'd with fragrant flowers all along.

Spenser.

Judge me, you gods! wrong I mine enemy.

Shakespeare.

Once more farewell!

And know thou wrong'st me, if thou think'st
Ever was love or ever grief like mine.

Addison.

WRONGDOER. n. f. [from wrong and do.] An injurious person.

She resolv'd to spend all her years in bewailing the wrong, and yet paying for the wrongdoer.

Sidney.

If any state be taken away by a wrongdoer, the churchwarden may have action against the wrong- doer.

Addison.

WRONGER. n. f. [from wrong.] He that injuries; he that does wrong.

That cuckold lives in bliss,

Who, certain of his fate, loves not his wronger.

Shakespeare's Othello.

Many times a prince is driven to spend far more of his treasure in punishing by war the wrongers of his people, than the loss of his people did amount unto.

Raleigh.

WRONGFUL. adj. [from wrong and ful.] Injurious; unjust.

I am far from granting thy request,
That I despise thee for thy wrongful suit.
He that hath wronged to in daily trade, that he knows not in what measure he hath done it, must redeem his fault by deeds, according to the value of his wrongful dealing.

Taylor.

Those whom forms of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause,
Not want their lots, nor judges to review
The wrongful sentence, and award a new.

Dryden.

WRONGFULLY. adv. [from wrongful.] Unjustly.

Dorus, said Pamela, you blame your fortune very wrongfully, since the fault is not in fortune, but in you, that cannot frame yourself to your fortune; and as wrongfully do require Mopla-to to great a disparagement as to her father's servant.

Sidney.

This poor fellow

He had thought to murder wrongfully.

Shakespeare.

Salus then, exclaiming loud,
Urges his cause may in the court be heard,
And pleads, the prize is wrongfully conferr'd.

Dryden.

I cry thee mercy, for suspecting a friar of the least good-nature: what, would you accuse him
wrongfully?

Dryden.

He who suffers wrongfully in a man's opinion, refuses to give him reason for his suspicion.

Spectator.

WRO'NHEAD. } adj. [from wrong and WRONGHEADED. } head. Having a perverse understanding.

Much do I suffer, much, to keep in place
This jealous, watpish, wronghead, thyming race.

Pope.

WRONGLESSLY. adv. [from wronglessly.] Without injury to any.

Dearly esteem'd of her for his exceeding good parts, being honourably courteous, and wronglessly valiant; considerably pleasant in conversation, and an excellent counsellor, without uncharitableness.

Sidney.

WRONGLY. adv. [from wrong.] Unjustly; amiss.

What thou wouldst highly,
That wouldst thou holily; wouldst not play false,
And yet wouldst wrongly win.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Magmen having join'd together some ideas very wrongly, e. g. we men do that argue right from wrong principles.

Locke.

WROTH. pret. and part. of write.

No man has the share of his soul drawn upon his face, nor the degree of his election wroth upon his forehead. He who would know a man thoroughly, must follow him into the cloist of his heart; the inspection of which is only the privi-legiate of omniscience.

South.

WROTH. adj. [pnab, Saxon; wrod, Dan.]

Angry. Out of use.

W R O

The Lord said unto Cain, Why art thou wroth?
Gen. iv.

WROUGHT. [pnogb, Saxon. The preter. and part. pass. as it seems, of work; as the Dutch verwerken makes gemaakt; or, more analogically, of the old word werak.]

1. Affected; performed.

Why troublest thou the woman, for she hath wrought a good work upon me. Mat. xxvi. 10.

The Jews wanted it power and ability to have convinced the world of the futility of these miracles, had they never been wrought.

Supper's Sermons.

. Influenced; prevailed on.

Had I thought the light of my poor image would thus have wrought you, for the stone is in me,

I'd not have flawed it. Shakesp. son.

It may be said that first, by the help of God's grace, he was wrought upon by these calls, and brought from a prophane, or worldly, to a Christian course of life, thou art surely in the highest degree tied to magnify and praise his goodness.

Duty of Man.

Not number nor example with him wrought to swerve from truth.

Addison.

Do not I know how? could his brutish mind be wrought upon? could he be just or kind?

Dryden.

This Artemis by her charms, And all her sex's charms, wrought the king.

Rowe.

3. Produced; caused.

All his good prov'd ill in me, And wrought but mischief.

Milton.

Thy wrought by them to thine self the publick safety.

Dryden.

This wrought the greatest confusion in the unbelieving Jews, and the greatest conviction in the Gentiles, who every where speak with astonishment of these truths they met with in this new magazine of learning which was opened.

Addison.

His too eager love Has made him busy to his own destruction,

His threats have wrought this change of mind in Pyrrhus.

Philips's Dismissal Mithras.

4. Worked; laboured.

They that wrought in silver, and whose work is unsearchable, are gone down to the grave.

Bar. iii. 18.

Moses and Elazar took the gold, even all wrought jewels.

Numbers, xvi. 22.

W R O

Celestiall panoply, divinely wrought.

Milton.

What might be wrought

Milton.

Futil, or graven in metal.

5. Gained; attained.

We ventur'd in such dangerous seas, That if we wrought out life, 'twas ten to one.

Shakespeare.

6. Operated.

Such another field They did not waste thine hell: so much the fear Of thund'rs, and the sword of Michael, Wrought still within them.

Milton.

7. Used in labour.

Take an heifer which hath not been wrought with, and which hath not drawn in the yoke.

8. Worked; driven.

A infection from body to body is received many times by the body passive, yet is it by the good disposition thereof repulsed and wrought out, before it be formed in a disease.

Bacon.

9. Acquainted.

Vain Morat, by his own rashness wrought, Too soon discover'd his ambitious thought; Believ'd me his before I took him fair, And pitch'd his head into the ready snare.

Dryden.

10. Manufactured.

It had been no less a breach of peace to have wrought any mine of his, than it is now a breach of peace to take a town of his in Guiana, and burn it.

Kaligh.

11. Formed.

He that hath wrought us for the same thing, is God.

2 Cor.

12. Excited by degrees, produced by degrees.

The spirit is wrought, To dare things high, set up an end my thought.

Chapman.

The two friends had wrought themselves to such an habitual tenderness for the children under their direction, that each of them had the real passion of a father.

Addison.

Advantage was taken of the sanguine temper which so many successives had wrought the nation up to.

Swift.

Whichever littleness and vanity is to be observed in the minds of women, it is, like the cruelty of butchers, a trait which is wrought into them by that life which they are taught and accustomed to lead.

Lewis.

W R Y

13. Guided; managed.

A ship by skilful steersman wrought.

Milton.

14. Agitated; disturbed.

We stay upon your leisure—

—Give me your favour; my dull brain was wrought

With things forgot.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

WRUNG. The preter. and part. passive of wring.

He first cald to me; then my hand he wrung.

Chapman.

No mortal was ever so much at ease, but his shoe wrung him somewhere.

Leffrange.

The tender anguish nature shoots

Through the wrung bosom of the dying man.

Thomson.

WRY. adj. [from writhe.]

1. Crooked; deviating from the right direction.

Sometimes to her news of myself to tell

I go about, but then is all my best

Wry words, and stammering, or else doltish dumb;

Say then, can this but of enchantment come?

Sidney.

2. Distorted.

It is but a kick with thy heels, and a wry mouth, and Sir Roger will be with thee.

Southey.

Instructive work! whose wry-mouth'd portraiture

Display'd the fates her confessors endure.

Pope.

Cutting the wry neck is never to be practised but when the disorder is a contraction of the mastoid muscle.

Stark.

3. Wrung; perverted; wrested.

He mangles and puts a wry sense upon protestant writers.

Southey.

To WRY. v. n. [from the adjective.] To be contorted and writhed; to deviate from the right direction.

These wry too much on the right hand, ascribing to the holy scripture such kind of perfection as it cannot have.

Sardys.

To WRY. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make to deviate; to distort.

To what pass are our minds brought, that from the right line of virtue are wryed to their crooked shifts?

Sidney.

WRY'NECK. n. f. [torquilla, Latin.] A bird.

X.

X

Is a letter, which, though found in Saxon words, begins no word in the English language.

Y.

Y A R

Y At the beginning of words, is commonly taken, though I think erroneously, for a consonant; at the end, and when it follows a consonant, is a vowel, and has the sound of i. It is used at the end of words, and whenever two i's would come together; and in words derived from the Greek, to express the u. Y was much used by the Saxons, whence y is found for i in the old English writers.

Y is, in old English, sometimes prefixed as an increasing syllable to preterites and passive participles of verbs. It seems borrowed from ge, the Saxon augmentum of the preterite. It is sometimes put before present tenses, but I think erroneously.

YACHT. n. f. [a Dutch word.] A small ship for carrying passengers.

YARD. n. f. [geard, Saxon.]

1. Inclosed ground adjoining to an house.

One of the lions leaped down into a neighbour's yard, where, nothing regarding the crowing of the cocks, he eat them up. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Xanthus one day sent Atrop into the yard, and bade him look well about him. L'Estrange.
His wanton kids, with building horns prepar'd,
Fight harmless battles in his homely yard. Dryden.

2. [geard, Saxon.] A measure of three feet.

A jester, a counsellor, and a judge, are not to be measured by the common yard, but by the pole of special grace. Bacon.

The arms, spread cross in a straight line, and measured from one end of the long finger on one hand to that of the other, made a measure equal to the stature, and is named a fathom. Half of that, viz. from the end of the long finger of either arm, so spread, to the middle of the breast, is with us called a yard. Holder on Time.

An aqueduct of a Gothick structure, that conveys water from Mount St. Francis to Spoleto, from the foundation of the lowest arch to the top, is two hundred and thirty yards. Addison.

3. The supports of the sails.

A breeze from shore began to blow;
The failors ship their oars, and cease to row;
Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails
Let fall to court the wind. Dryden.

YARDWAND. n. f. [yard and wand.] A measure of a yard.

All the revolutions in nature can give it nothing more than different degrees of dimensions. What affinity has thinking with such attributes? no more than there is between a syllogism and a yardwand. Collier.

YARE. adj. [geapre, Sax.] Ready; dexterous; eager.

Tare, yare, good Iros, quick.—Methinks I hear Antony call. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

I do desire to learn, Sir; and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your turn, you shall find me yare. Shakespeare.

YARELY. adv. [from yare.] Dexterously; skilfully.

The filken tickles
Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands,
That yarely frame the other. Shakespeare.

YARN. n. f. [gearn, Saxon.] Spun wool; woollen thread.

You would be another Penelope; yet they fry, all the yarn she spun in Ulysses's absence did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Shakespeare's Ovidianus.

The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together; our virtues would be proud, if our faults whipt them not; and our crimes would despair, if they were not cherished by our virtues. Shakespeare.

Yarn is a commodity very proper to this country, which of all others ought to be most encouraged. Temple.

It may be useful for the reeling of yarn. Withins
The fate, but only spin the coarser clue,
The finest of the wool is left for you.
Spare me but one small portion of the twine,
And let the spurs cut below your line
The rest among the rubbish may they sweep,
Or add it to the yarn of some old miser's heap. Dryden.

To YARR. v. n. [from the sound; birrio, Lat.] To growl or snarl like a dog. Ansforth.

YARROW. n. f. [milesfahum, Lat.] A plant.

YAWL. n. f. A little vessel belonging to a ship, for convenience of passing to and from it.

To YAWN. v. n. [geonan, Saxon.]

1. To gape; to siccitate; to have the mouth opened involuntarily by fumes, as in sleepiness.

The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pile
The lazy yawning drone. Shakespeare's Henry V.

In yawning, the inner parchment of the ear is extended. When a man yawns, he cannot hear so well. Bacon.

At length shook off himself, and ask'd the dame,
And asking yawn'd, for what intent the came? Dryden.

To whom the yawning pilot, fast asleep,
Me didst thou bid to trust the treacherous deep? Dryden.

2. To open wide.

The gashes,
That bloody did yawn upon his face. Shakespeare.
'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When churchyards yawn. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Now will I dam up this thy yawning mouth,
For swallowing up the treasure of the realm. Shakespeare.
He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd,
Like vomit from his yawning entrails pour'd. Sanctus.

Y A W

Y E A

Hell at last
Yawning receiv'd them whole, and on them clost. Milton.

The sword put't his tender side;
Down fell the beauteous youth, the yawning wound
Gush'd out a purple stream. Dryden.

High the wind her arm, and with her sceptre
Struck
The yawning chit, from it, departed he light Adown the mount the gushing torrent ran. Prior.

3. To express desire by yawning.

The chief thing at which lay reformer, yawning, is, that the clergy may, through conformity to condition, be poor as the apostles were. In which one circumstance if they imagine to great perfection, they must think that church which hath such store of mendicant friars, a church in that respect most happy. Hobbes.

YAWN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Siccitation.

There, Pandol, she mark'd thee there,
Stretch'd on the rack of a too easy chair;
And heard thy everlasting yawn conveys
The pains and penalties of idleness. Pope.

2. Gape; hiatus.

Hence to the borders of the marsh they go,
That mingles with the baleful stream, below;
And sometimes with a mighty yawn, 'tis said,
Opens a dismal passage to the dead;
Who, pale with fear, the rending earth survey,
And startle at the sudden flash of day. Addison.

YAWNING. adj. [from yawn.] Sleepy; slumbering.

Lie to black Hecate's summons
The shard-born beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

YELAN. part. for clad. Clothed.

Her sight did ravish, but her grace in speech,
Her words yelad with wisdom's majesty,
Make me from wondering fall to weeping joys. Shakespeare.

YELPED. [the participle passive of clepe, to call; clepan, Saxon; with the increasing particle y, which was used in the old English, in the preterites and participles, from the Saxon ge.] Called; termed; named.

But come, thou goddess fair and free,
In heav'n yelp'd Euphrosyne,
And by men heart-aching fair. Milton.

YER'D. The old preterite of To dread. Spenser.

Yæ. The nominative plural of clepe.
Ye are they which justify yourselves. Luke, xvii, 15.

YEA. adv. [ea, or gea, Saxon; ja, Danish, German, and Dutch.]

1. Yes. A particle of affirmation; meaning, it is so, or, is it so?

YEA

Yea, hath God said, ye shall not eat of every tree in the garden? Gen. iii. 3.

Let your conversation be yea, yea; nay, nay. Matthew.

Why do disputes in wrangling spend the day, Whilst one says only yea, and t'other nay? Danb.

2. A particle by which the sense is intended as enforced: not only so, but more than so.

I am weary; yea, my memory is tired. Shakspeare.
A rascally, yea, foolish, knave, to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security. Shakspeare.

From these Philippine are brought costly spices, yea, and gold too. Alber's Description of the World.

All the promises of God are yea, and amen, that is, are verities, which is the importance of yea; and confirmed, which is meant by amen, into an immutability. Hammond.

They durst abide

Jerah thund'ring out of Zion, thron'd
Between the cherubim; yea, often plac'd Within his sanctuary itself their shines. Milton.

Notwithstanding this great proximity of man to his Maker, yea, and notwithstanding the observations made in all ages, we still remain ignorant of many things concerning ourselves. Hale.

To YEAD, or YEDD. v. n. preterite yode.

[This word seems to have been corruptly formed from geod, the Saxon preterite of gan.] To go; to march. Obsolete.

They wander at will, and stay at pleasure,
And to their folds yeade at their own leisure. Spenser.

Then bad the knight this lady yede along,
And to a hill herself withdrew aside,
In murther she might behold that battle's proof,
And like be fate from danger far defery'd. Spenser.

Yet for the yede thereof half agill,
And Kiddy the dour spard after her fast. Spenser.

That thou mighty man of God,
That blood red frowns like a waled front,
On either side disparted with his rod,
Till that his army dy'd-foot through them yod. Spenser.

To YEAN. v. n. [eanian, Saxon.] To bring young. Used of sheep.

This I fearly drag along,
Who yeaning on the rocks has left her young. Dryden.

Twice yeane the polled lamb with the least danger. Milton.

YEANING. n. f. [from yeane.] The young of sheep.

All the yeanings which were sleek'd and pied Should fall as Jacob's lot. Shakspeare.

YEAR. n. f. [year, Saxon.]

If one by the word year meant twelve months of thirty days each, i. e. three hundred and sixty days; another intend a solar year, of three hundred sixty-five days; and a third mean a lunar year, or twelve lunar months, i. e. three hundred fifty-four days, there will be a great variation and error in their account of things, unless they are well apprized of each other's meaning. Watson's Logic.

See the moon how they run;
How many make the full complement,
How many hours bring out the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live. Shakspeare.

With the year
Seasons return, but not to me returns
Day, or the sweet approach of eve or morn. Milton.

Though we suppose that the addition of our years for every thousand years, yet long before this time we should have been a greater number than there could be in the earth. Watson.

The doctor, upon occasion, calculating his ex-

YEA

pences on himself, found them to be not above five pounds in the year. Fell.

Oviparous creatures have eggs enough at first conceived in them, to serve them for many years laying, allowing such a proportion for every year as will serve for one or two incubations. Ray on the Creation.

He accepted a curacy of thirty pounds a year. Swift.

2. It is often used plurally, without a plural termination.

I fight not once in forty year. Shakspeare.

3. In the plural, old age.

Some mumble-news,
That smiles his cheek in years, and knows the trick
To make my lady laugh when she's dispos'd, Told our intents. Shakspeare. Love's Labour Lost.

There died also Cecile, mother to king Edward IV. being of extreme years, and who had lived to see three princes of her body crowned, and four murthered. Bacon's Henry VII.

He look'd in years, yet in his years were seen
A youthful vigour, and autumnal green. Dryden.

YEARNING. adj. [from year.] Being a year old.

A yearning bullock to the name shall smoke,
Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke. Pope.

YEARLY. adj. [from year.] Annual; happening every year; lasting a year.

The yearly course that brings this day about,
Shall never see it but a holiday. Shakspeare. John.

Why the changing oak should shed
The yearly honour of his stately head;
Whilst the distinguish'd yew is ever seen,
Unhang'd his branch, and permanent his green. Prior.

YEARLY. adv. Annually; once a year.

He that outlives this day, and sees old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say, To-morrow is Saint Crispian. Shakspeare's Henry V.

For numerous blessings yearly shower'd,
And property with plenty crown'd;
For custom still maintain'd alive;
For these, and more, accept our pious praise. Dryden.

Not numerous are our joys when life is new,
And yearly some are falling of the few. Young.

To YEARN. v. n. [earnian, Saxon.] To feel great; uneasy. In Spenser it is sometimes used. It is by Spenser used for desire, or the pain of longing; it now implies tenderness or pity.

He leav'd to tend in due degree,
But chaf'd, and foam'd, with courage fierce and stern,
And to be eas'd of that base burden still did yearn. Spenser.

Make the libbard stern
Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did yearn. Spenser.

Though peeping close into the thick,
Might see the moving of some quick;
But were it fair, fiend, or snake,
My courage e'er'd it to wake,
And manfully threat shot. Spenser.

Talstiff, he is dead,
And we must yearn therefore. Shakspeare. Henry V.

Joseph must haste; for his bowels did yearn upon his brother; and he sought where to weep, and he entered into his chamber. Gen. xliii. 30.

When the fair Leuc throne he spy'd,
To check his fœd impatient Phœbus yearn'd,
Though all the world was in his course concern'd. Waller.

Yet for all the yearning pain
Y have suffer'd for their loves, in vain,
I fear they'll prove to nice and coy,
To have, and hold, and to enjoy. Hu'bert.

Where our heart does out relent, his melts;
where our eye pines, his bowels yearn. South's Sermons.

At beholding the miseries of others, they find such yearnings in their bowels, and such sensible commotions raised in their breasts, as they can by no means satisfy. Calamy.

YEL

Your mother's heart yearns towards you. Addis.

Unmov'd the mind of Athacus remain'd;
But Anticles, unable to controul,
Spoke loud the language of his yearning soul. Pope.

To YEARN. v. a. To grieve; to vex.

She laments for it, that it would Earn your heart to see it. Shakspeare.

I am not covetous of gold,
It yearns me not if men my garments wear. Shakspeare.

YEST. n. f. [yest, Saxon.]

1. The foam, spume, or flower of beer in fermentation; barm.

Yeast and outward means do fall,
And have no power to work on ale. Hu'bert.

When drays bound high, then never cross behind,
Where butling yeast is blown by gusts of wind. Gay.

2. The spume on troubled water; foam; froth.

Now the ship boring the moon with her main-mast, and anon swallowed with yeast and froth, as you'd thrust a cork into a hoghead. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

YESTRY. adj. [from yest.] Frothy; spummy; foamy.

Though you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churlches; though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

YELK. n. f. [from gealepe, yeliow, Saxon.] The yellow part of the egg. It is commonly pronounced, and often written, yolk.

The yolk of the egg conducteth little to the generation of the bird, but only to the nourishment of the same; for if a chicken be opened, when it is new-hatched, you shall find much of the yolk remaining. Bacon's Natural History.

That a chicken is formed out of the yolk of an egg, with some ancient philosophers, the people still opinion. Brown.

All the feather'd kind
From th' included yolk, not ambient white, arose. Dryden.

To YELL. v. n. To cry out with horror and agony.

Nor the night raven, that still deadly yells,
Nor grisly vultures, make us once afraid. Spenser.

Each new morn
New widows howl, new orphans cry; new sorrows
Strike heav'n on the face, that it resounds,
As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out Like syllables of dole. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Now worse than e'er he was before,
Poor Puck doth yell, poor Puck doth roar,
That wak'd queen Mab, who doubt'd fore
Some treason had been wrought her. Dryden's Nymphid.

Telling monsters, that with coolest cry Surround me. Milton.

Night-struck fancy dreams the yelling ghost. Thomson.

YELL. n. f. [from the verb.] A cry of horror.

With like tim'rous accent and dire yell,
As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spread in populous cities. Shakspeare's Othello.

Hence a heard the groans of ghosts, the pains,
Of sounding lashes, and of dragging chains,
The Trojan flood astonish'd at their cries,
And ask'd his guide from whence those yells arose. Dryden.

Others in frantic mood
Run howling through the streets; their hideous yells Rent the dark welkin. Philips.

YELLOW. adj. [yealepe, Saxon; ghelewe, Dutch; giallo, Italian.] Being of a bright glaring colour, as gold.

Only they that come to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded with yellow,
Will be deceiv'd. Shakspeare. Henry VIII. Prologue.

He brought the green ear and the yellow breast.

After a lively orange, followed an intense, bright, and copious yellow, which was all the best of all the yellow.

Negligent of foot, Scarce seen, he wades among the yellow broom.

YELLOWBOY. n. f. A gold coin. A very low word.

John did not starve the cause, then wanted not yellow to his counsel.

YELLOWHAMMER. n. f. [canobrymnus belionii.] A bird.

YELLOWISH. adj. [from yellow.] Approaching to yellow.

Although amber be commonly of a yellowish colour, yet there is found of it also black, white, brown, green, blue, and purple.

Yellowness of the skin and eyes, and a salmon-coloured urine, are signs of an inflammatory disposition of the liver.

It is used in Shakespeare for jealousy.

Lord I will possess with yellowness.

YELLOW. n. f. A disease in horses. When the gallpipe is stopped up, that matter which should be turned into gall is carried back into the blood, and tinctures it yellow; so that the eyes, inside of the lips, flaver, and all the parts of the horse that are capable of shewing the colour, appear yellow.

His horse sped with spavins, and raved with the yellow.

YELP. v. n. [zealpan, Saxon.] To bark as a beagle-hound after his prey.

A little herd of England's timorous deer, Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

YEMAN. n. f. [Of this word the original is much doubted: the true etymology seems to be that of Yanus, who derives it from geman, Frisick, a villager.]

A man of a small estate in land; a farmer; a gentleman farmer.

Gentlemen should use their children as the honest farmers and substantial yeomen do theirs.

He that has a spaniel by his side is a yeoman of about one hundred pounds a year, an honest man: he is just qualified to kill an hare.

It seems to have been anciently a kind of ceremonious title given to soldiers: whence we have still yeomen of the guard.

Tall yeomen seemed they, and of great might, And were enlarged ready still for fight.

Whose limbs were made in England, show us here the mettle of your pasture.

He instituted, for the security of his person, a band of fifty archers, under a captain, to attend him, by the name of yeomen of his guard.

Th' appointment for th' ensuing night he heard; And therefore in the even had order'd

At Windsor St. John whiffed me i' th' ear; The waters stand in rank, the yeomen cry Make room! as a duke were pining by.

3. It was probably a freeholder not advanced to the rank of a gentleman.

His grandfather was second duke of Clarence, Third son to the third Edward king of England: Spring craftless yeoman from the court.

4. It seems to have had likewise the notion of a gentleman servant.

A jolly yeoman, marshal of the hall, Whose name was Apple it, he did bestow Both guests and meat.

YEOMANRY. n. f. [from yeoman.] The collective body of yeomen.

This did amortize a great part of the lands of the kingdom unto the hold and occupation of the yeoman, or middle people, of a connection between gentlemen and cottagers.

TO YERK. v. a. [of unknown etymology.] To throw out or move with a spring.

A leaping horse is said to yerk, or strike out his hind legs, when he flings and kicks with his whole hind quarters, stretching out the two hind legs near together, and even to their full extent.

Their wounded steeds First stoock deep in gore, and with wild rage

Tak out their armed heels at their dead masters.

YERK. n. f. [from the verb.] A quick motion.

TO YERN. v. a. See YEARN.

YES. adv. [yie, Saxon.]

1. A term of affirmation; the affirmative particle opposed to no.

Pray, Madam, are you married?—Yes.

2. It is a word of enforcement; even so, not only so, but more.

This were a fit speech for a general in the head of an army, when going to battle, yet, and it is no less fit speech in the head of a council, upon a deliberation of entrance into a war.

Yes, you despise the man to books confin'd, Who from his study rails at human kind, Though what he learns he speaks.

YESTER. adj. [ghister, Dutch; hesternus, Latin.] Being next before the present day. It is not often used but in composition with another word, as day or night.

Love might as well be sow'd upon our sands, As in a breast so barren:

To love an enemy, the only one Remaining too, whom yester sun beheld Must ring her charms.

YESTERDAY. n. f. [girtandæg, Saxon.] The day last past; the day next before to-day.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow, Creeps in this petty pace from day to day, To the last syllable of recorded time; And all our yesterdays have lighted fools The way to dusty death.

We are but of yesterday, and know nothing, because our days upon earth are a shadow.

You are both fluid, chang'd since yesterday; Next day repairs but ill last day's decay,

Nor are, although the river keep the name, Yesterday's waters and to-day's the same.

If yesterday could be recall'd again, Ev'n now would I conclude my happy reign.

Yesterday was set apart as a day of publick thanksgiving for the late extraordinary successes.

Mrs. Simper sends complaint in your yesterday's Spectator.

Naked from the womb

Naked again we must to-morrow lie; Born to labour, to labour, and to die.

YESTERDAY. adv. On the day last past.

Martius gave us yesterday a representation of the empire of the Turks, with no small vigour of words.

YESTERNIGHT. n. f. The night before this night.

YESTERNIGHT. adv. On the night last past.

Eleven hours I've spent to write it over; For yesternight by Catechy was it sent me.

YET. conjunct. [yie, yet, yetra, Saxon.] Nevertheless; notwithstanding; however.

They had a king was more than him before; But yet a king, where they were nought the more.

French laws forbid the female reign, Thy love does them to slavery draw.

Though such men have lived ever so much upon the reserve, yet, if they be observed to have a particular fondness for persons noted for any sin, it is ten to one but there was a communication in the sin, before there was so in affection.

The heathens would never suffer their gods to be reviled, which yet were no gods; and shall it be allowed to any man to make a mock of him that made heaven and earth?

He is somewhat arrogant at his first entrance, and is too inquisitive through the whole tragedy; yet these imperfections being balanced by great virtues, they hinder not our compassion for his miseries.

Let virtuous men in five years be witt, Yet not one thought accuse thy toil of wit.

YET. adv. 1. Beside; over and above.

This furnishes us with yet one more reason why our Saviour lays such a particular stress on acts of mercy.

2. Still; the state still remaining the same.

They are the tasks they had heard which they were yet braver; and had they not found reason to believe them, this would still have continued heathens, and made no mention of them in their writings.

3. Once again.

Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light Indulge, dread chaos and eternal night.

4. At this time; so soon; hitherto; with a negative before it.

Thales being asked when a man should marry, said, Young men, not yet; old men, not at all.

5. At least; at all. Noting uncertainty or indetermination.

A man that would form a comparison betwixt Quintilian's declamations, if yet they be Quintilian's, and the orations of Tully, would be in danger of forfeiting his discretion.

6. It denotes continuance and extension, greater or smaller.

Shake not his hour-glass, when his hasty sand Is ebbing to the last:

A little longer, yet a little longer, And nature drops him down without your sin,

Like mellow fruit without a winter storm.

Yet a few days, and those which now appear In youth and beauty like the blooming year,

In life's swift scene shall change.

7. Still: in a new degree.

He that takes from a thief that which the thief took from an honest man, and keeps it to himself, is the wickedest thief of the two, by how much the more he is made not blacker by the thief's example.

8. Even; after all. A kind of emphatical addition to a negative.

If any man neglect his duty, his fault must not be imputed to the rule appointed, neither to the whole Church.

Men may not too rashly believe the credulity of words, nor yet the evidence against them, for the world is full of such; and people are credulous, and ready to give credit to natural operations, to witchcraft.

Not yet amidst this joy and brightest morn
Was absent, after all his mischief done,
The prince of darkness.

9. Lither: sometimes with as before.
Hope beginning here, with a tribulation, expectation of things far removed, and as yet but only heard of, made with real and actual fruition of that which no longer can express.

Yield, for given.

Wants not a fourth grace to make the other even.

Let that room to my lady be yewon,
She shall be a queen,
To sit the fourth place,
And reign with the rest in heaven.

- Yew. n. f. [up, Saxon; yew, Welsh.] This is often written yew; but the former orthography is at once nearer to the sound and the derivation. See EUCH. A tree of tough wood, used for bows, and therefore planted in church-yards.

It hath a numerous flowers, which consist of many apices, for the most part shaped like a mason's ball, and are eaten, but the embryos, which are produced at remote distances on the same tree, do afterward become hollow bell-shaped berries, which are full of juice, and include seeds somewhat like acorns, having, as it were, a little cup to each.

The slender asph., the broad-leav'd scandore,
The fair plantain, and the walnut found;
The myrtle, that her soul findeth still deplore,
Alone, the owner of all waterish ground.

Shiver'd in the moon's eclipse.

And almost join'd the horns of the tough yew.

The distinguish'd yew is ever seen,
Unchang'd his branch, and permanent his green.

Thou bright-eyed Vesta long of yore
 To solitary Saturn bore. Milton.

There liv'd, as authors tell, in days of yore,
 A widow somewhat old, and very poor. Dryden.
 In times of yore an ancient Laron liv'd,
 Great gifts bestow'd, and great respect receiv'd.
Prior.

The devil was piqued such saintship to behold,
 And long'd to tempt him, like good Jove of old;
 But Satan now is wiser than of yore,
 And tempts by making rich, not making poor.
Pope.

You. pron. [eop, iuh, Saxon; of ge, ye.]

1. The oblique case of ye.
 Ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God, which is given me to you ward.

I thought to show you
 How easy 'twas to die, by my example,
 And hanel fate before you. Dryden's Cleomenes.

2. It is used in the nominative, in common language, when the address is to persons; and though first introduced by corruption, is now established. In the following lines you and ye are used ungrammatically in the places of each other; but even this use is customary.

What gain you by forbidding it to tease ye?
 It now can neither trouble ye nor please ye. Dryd.

3. It is the ceremonial word for the second person singular, and is always used, except in solemn language.

In vain you tell your parting lover,
 You with fair winds may waft him over. Prior.
 But, Madam, if the fates withstand, and you Are destin'd Hymen's willing victim too. Pope.

4. It is used indefinitely, as the French on; any one; whosoever.

We pass'd by what was one of those rivers of burning matter: this looks, at a distance, like a new-plowed land; but as you come near it, you see nothing but a long heap of heavy disjointed clouds.
Addison on Italy.

5. You is used in the subsequent members of a sentence, as distinguished from ye.

Stand forth, ye champions, who the gauntlet wield,
 O! you the swiftest racers of the field. Pope.

YOUNG. adj. [ioeg, yeong, Saxon; jung,
 Dutch.]

1. Being in the first part of life; not old:
 used of animal life.

Guests should be interlarded, after the Persian custom, by ages young and old.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

There's not the smallest orb which thou be-hold'st,
 But in his motion like an angel sings,
 Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubims. Shak.

I firmly am resolv'd
 Not to bestow my youngest daughter,
 Before I have a husband for the elder. Shakespeare.

Thou old and true Menenius,
 Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's,
 And venomous to thine eyes. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He ordain'd a lady for his prize, Generally praiseful, fair and young, and skill'd in housewiferies. Chapman.

In timorous deer he hanfels his young paws,
 And leaves the rugged bear for firmer claws. Crowl.

Nor need'st thou by thy daughter to be told,
 Though now thy spry blood with age be cold,
 Thou hast been young. Dryden.

When we say a man is young, we mean that his age is yet but a small part of that which usually men attain to: and when we denominate him old, we mean that his duration is run out almost to the end of that which men do not usually exceed. Locke.

It will be but an ill example to prove, that dominion, by God's ordination, belonged to the eldest son; because Jacob the youngest here had it.
Locke.

From earth they rear him struggling now with death,
 And Nelson's youngest stops the vents of breath.
Pope.

2. Ignorant; weak.
 Come, elder brother, thou art too young in this.
Shakespeare's Hamlet.

3. It is sometimes applied to vegetable life.

There be trees that bear best when they begin to be old, as almonds; the cause is, for that all trees that bear must have an oily fruit, and young trees have a more watry juice, and less concoction. Bacon.

YOUNG. n. f. The offspring of animals collectively.

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
 That it had its head bit off by its young.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

So many days my ewes have been with young;
 So many weeks ere the poor fools will yearn. Shak.
 The eggs disclos'd their callow young. Milton.
 The season why birds are oviparous, and lay eggs, but do not bring forth their young alive, is because there might be more plenty.

More's Antidote against Atheism.
 Not so her young; for their unequal line
 Was heroes make, half human, half divine;
 Their earthly mold obnoxious was to fate,
 Th' immortal part assum'd immortal state. Dryd.

Those insects, for whose young nature hath not made provision of sufficient sustenance, do themselves gather and lay up in store for them.
Ray on the Creation.

YOUNGISH. adj. [from young.] Somewhat young

She let her second room to a very genteel young- ish man. Tatler.

YOUNGLING. n. f. [from young; yeong- ling, Saxon.] Any creature in the first part of life.

More dear unto their God than younglings to their dam. Fairy Queen.

Youngling, thou canst not love so dear as I.—
 —Grey-beard, thy love doth freeze. Shakespeare.

When we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer, they suckle their younglings with milk. Brown.

Encourag'd thus, she brought her younglings
 nigh. Dryden.

The stately beast the two Tyrrhæids bred,
 Scratch'd from his dam, and the tame youngling fed.
Dryden.

YOUNGLY. adv. [from young.]

1. Early in life.
 Say we read lectures to you,
 How youngly he began to leave his country,
 How long continued, and what stock he springs of.
Shakespeare.

2. Ignorantly; weakly.

YOUNGSTER. } n. f. [from young.] A YOUNKER. } young person: in contempt.

What, will you make a youngster of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, but I shall so have my pocket pick'd? Shakespeare.

See how the morning opes her golden gates,
 And takes her farewell of the glorious fun-
 Now well resembles it the prime of youth's Trim'd like a youngster prancing to his love. Shak.
 3 Z While

While Ulysses slept there, and close by
The other youngsters, he abroad would fly. Chapman.
Fame tells, by age fame reverend grown,
That Phæbus gave his chariot to his son;
And whilst the youngster from the path declines, Admiring the strange beauty of the signs,
Proud of his charge, he drove the fiery horse,
And would outdo his father in his course. Greene.
The youngster, who at nine and three Drinks with his sisters milk and tea,
From breakfast ready, till twelve o'clock,
Burnet and Heylin, Hobbes and Locke. Prior.
YOUNGTH. n. f. [from young.] Youth.
Obsolete.

The mournful muse in mirth now lift ne mask,
As the war went in young b and summer days. Spenser.
YOUNG. pronoun. [open, Saxon.]

1. Belonging to you. It is used properly when we speak to more than one, and ceremoniously and customarily when to only one.

Either your unparagoned mistress is dead, or she's surprized by a trifle. Shakespeare.

Impute your danger to our ignorance;
The bravest men are subject most to chance. Dryden.
Ye dauntless Dardani hear,

Think on the strength which once your fathers bore. Pope.

2. Your is used in an indeterminate sense.

Every true man's apparel fits your thief: if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough. If it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough, so every true man's apparel fits your thief. Shakespeare.

There is a great affinity between coins and poetry, and your medallist and critic are much nearer related than the world imagine. Addison on Medals.
A disagreement between these seldom happens, but among your antiquaries and schoolmen.

Fenton on the Glassicks.

3. Yours is used when the substantive goes before or is understood: as, this is your book, this book is yours.

Pray for this man and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

That done, our day of marriage shall be yours.
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness. Shak.

This kiss, if it durst speak,
Would stretch thy spirits up into the air:
Conceive and fare thee well.—
—Yours in the ranks of death. Shak. King Lear.

He is forsworn, if e'er those eyes of yours
Behold another day break in the east. Shakespeare.

While the sword this monarchy secures,
'Tis manag'd by an abler hand than yours. Dryden.
My wealth, my city, and myself are yours. Dryden.

It is my employment to revive the old of past ages to the present, as it is yours to transmit the young of the present to the future. Pope.

YOURSELF. n. f. [your and self.]

1. You, even you; ye, not others.

If it stand, as you yourself still do,
Within the eye of honour; be assur'd,
My purse, my person, my extremest means,
Lie all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakespeare.
O heav'n's!

If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
Allow obedience, if yourself are old,
Make it your cause. Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. In the oblique cases it has the sense of reciprocation, or reference to the same subject mentioned before: as, you love only yourself; you have betrayed yourselves by your rashness.

When ever you are more intent upon adorning your persons than upon perfecting of your souls, you are much more beside yourselves than he that had rather have a laced coat than a healthful body.
Law.

3. It is sometimes reciprocal in the nominative.

Be but yourselves. Pope.

YOUTH. [n. f. ȳeogud, Saxon.]

1. The part of life succeeding to childhood and adolescence; the time from fourteen to twenty-eight.

But could youth last, and love still breed,
Had joys no date, and age no need;
Then these delights my mind might move,
To live with thee, and be thy love. Raleigh.

His starry helm unbuckled shew'd him prime
In manhood, where youth ended. Milton.

The solidity, quantity, and strength of the aliment, is to be proportioned to the labour or quantity of muscular motion, which in youth is greater than any other age. Arbutnot.

2. A young man.

Siward's son,
And many unrough youths even now,
Protest their first of manhood. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

If this were seen,
The happiest youth viewing his progress through,
What perils past, what crosses to ensue,
Would shut the book and sit him down and die. Shakespeare.

O'er the lofty gate his art emboss'd
Androgeos' death, and oil rings to his ghost;
Sev'n youths from Athens yearly sent, to meet
The fate of his revengeful Crete. Dryden.

A hundred youths from all his train elects,
And to the Latian court their course direct. Dryden.

3. Young men. Collectively.

As it is fit to read the best authors to youth first, so let them be of the openest and clearest; as Livy before Sallust, Sidney before Donne. Ben Jonson.

About him exercis'd heroic games

Th' unarmed youth of heav'n. Milton.

The graces put not more exactly on
Th' attire of Venus, when the ball she won,
Than that young beauty by thy care is dress'd,
When all your youth prefers her to the rest. Waller.

YOUTHFUL. adj. [youth and full.]

1. Young.

Our army is dispers'd already:
Like youthful steers unyok'd they took their course,
East, west, north, south. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

There, in a heap of slain, among the rest,
Two youthful knights they found beneath a load oppress'd
Of slaughter'd foes. Dryden.

2. Suitable to the first part of life.

Here be all the pleasures
That fancy can beget on youthful thoughts,
When the fresh blood grows lively, and returns
Brisk as the April buds in primrose season. Milton.

In his years were seen
A youthful vigour and autumnal green. Dryden.
The nymph surveys him, and beholds the grace
Of charming features, and a youthful face. Pope.

3. Vigorous, as in youth.

How is a good Christian animated by a sted-fast belief of an everlasting enjoyment of perfect felicity, such as, after millions of millions of ages, is still youthful and flourishing, and inviting as at the first! no wrinkles in the face, no grey hairs on the head of eternity! Bentley.

YOUTHFULLY. adv. [from youthful.] In a youthful manner.

YOUTHLY. adj. [from youth.] Young;
early in life. Obsolete.

True be thy words, and worthy of thy praise,
That wait like feats doft highest glory,
Therein have I spent all my youthly days,
And many battles fought, and many frays. Spenser.

YOUTHY. adj. [from youth.] Young;
youthful. A bad word.

The scribbler had not genius to turn my age, as indeed I am an old maid, into rillery, for affecting a youthier turn than is consistent with my time of day. Spectator.

YPIGHT. part. [y and pight, from pitch.]
Fixed.

That same wicked wight
His dwelling has low in an hollow cave,
Far underneath a craggy cliff ypight,
Dark, doleful, dreary, like a greedy grave. Spenser.

YUCK. n. f. [jucken, Dutch.] Itch.

YULE. n. f. [ȳeol, ȳeol, ȳehul, Saxon.]
The time of Christmas.

YUX. n. f. [ȳeox, Saxon; sometimes pronounced yex.] The hiccough.

Z.

ZE A

Z Is found in the Saxon alphabets set down by grammarians, but is read in no word originally Tuetonick: its sound is uniformly that of an hard S. No word of English original begins with Z.

ZA'FIAR. } n. f.
ZA'FFIR. }

Powder the calx of cobalt fine, and mix it with three times its weight of powdered flints; this being wetted with common water, concreted into a mass called zaffre, which from its hardness has been mistaken for a native mineral. Hill.

Cobalt, being sublimed, the flowers are of a blue colour; these German mineralists called zaffre. Woodward.

The artificers in glass tinge their glass blue with that dark mineral zaffre. Boyle on Colours.

ZA'NY. n. f. [probably of zaner, the contraction of Giovanni; from fanna, a scoff, according to Skinner.] One employed to raise laughter by his gestures, actions, and speeches; a merry Andrew; a buffoon.

Some carry tale, some please in, some slight zany, Some mumble news, some tinker kni,ht, some Dick,

Told out intents before. Shakespeare.
Then write that I may follow, and so be Thy echo, thy debtor, thy fool, thy zany,
I shall be thought, if mine like thine I shape,
All the world's lion, though I be thy ape. Donne.
Oh, great restorer of the good old stage,
Preacher at once, and zany, of thy age.

ZA'RNICH. n. f. Zarnich is a substance in which orpiment is found; it approaches to the nature of orpiment, but without its lustre and foliated texture. The common kinds of zarnich are green and yellow. Hill's Materia Medica.

ZEAL. n. f. [ζῆλος; zelus, Latin.] Passionate ardour for any person or cause.

In this present age, wherein zeal hath drowned charity and skill, meekness will not now suffice any man to marvel, whatsoever he shall hear reproved by whomsoever. Hooker.

If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you; but it is no matter, this poor shew doth better, this doth infer the zeal I had to see him. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

O Cromwell, Cromwell!
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shakespeare.

The bare fervour and zeal is taken in commendation for much other piety, by many the most eager contenders. Hammond.

Among the seraphims
Abdiel, than whom none with more zeal ador'd
The Deity, and divine commands obey'd,
Stood up, and in a flame of zeal severe,
The current of his fury thus oppos'd.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

ZE A

Had zeal anciently armed itself against sovereignty, we had never heard of a calendar of saints. Holyday.

We must look our prayers be with zeal and earnestness: it is not enough that we so far attend them, as barely to know what it is we say, but we must put forth all the affection and devotion of our souls. Duty of Man.

Zeal, the blind conductor of the will. Dryden.
She with such a zeal the cause embrac'd,
As women, where they will, are all in haste,
The father, mother, and the kin betide,
Were overborne by the fury of the tide. Dryden.

The pious stand with a furious joy,
And the king seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy, Dryden.

Seriousness and zeal in religion is natural to the English. Tillotson's Sermons.

Good men often blemish the reputation of their piety by overacting some things in their religion; by an indiscreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned. Tillotson.

True zeal seems not to be any one single affection of the soul, but rather a strong mixture of many holy affections; rather a gracious constitution of the whole mind, than any one particular grace, swaying a devout heart, and filling it with all pious intentions, all not only uncounterfeited, but most fervent. Spratt's Sermons.

When the sins of a nation have provoked God to punish it, he suffers those to concur in the most pernicious counsels for enslaving conscience, who pretend to the greatest zeal for the liberty of it. Stillingfleet.

This rebellion has discovered to his majesty, who have espoused his interests with zeal or indifference. Addison's Traveller.

A scorn of flattery and a zeal for truth. Pope.
There is nothing noble in a clergyman but burning zeal for the salvation of souls, nor any thing poor in his profession, but idleness and worldly spirit. Lowe.

ZEALOT. n. f. [zeloteur, Fr. ζηλωτης.] One passionately ardent in any cause. Generally used in dispraise.

But now, whereas these zealots complain of us for jangling with the Roman church in things lawful and good, they themselves comply with the same in articles and actions which are of no good quality. White.

The fury of zealots, intestine bitterness and division, were the greatest occasion of the destruction of Jerusalem. King Charles.

Are not those men too often the great zealots who are most notoriously ignorant? true zeal should always begin with true knowledge, and thence proceed to an unwearied pursuit, for what it once knows to be worthy of such passion. Spratt.

No wonder that so many of these deluded zealots have been engaged in a cause which they at first abhorred, and have wished or acted for the success of an enterprise, that might have ended in the extirpation of the protestant religion. Addison.

ZEALOUS. adj. [from zeal.] Ardently passionate in any cause.

Our hearts are right with God, and our intentions pious, if we act our temporal affairs with a desire no greater than our necessity, and in actions of religion we be zealous, active, and operative, so far as prudence will permit. Taylor.

ZEP

This day, at height of noon, came to my sphere
A spirit zealous, as he seem'd, to know
More of the Almighty's works. Milton's Paradise Lost.

We should be not only devout towards God, but zealous towards men; endeavouring by all prudent means to recover them out of those snares of the devil, whereby they are taken captive. Dec. of Piety.

It is not at all good to be zealous against any person, but only against their crimes. It is better to be zealous for things than for persons; but then it should be only for good things: a rule that does certainly exclude all manner of zeal for ill things all manner of zeal for little things.

Spratt's Sermons

Being instructed only in the general, and zealous in the main design; and as finite beings not admitted into the secrets of government, the last sorts of providence, or capable of discovering the final purposes of God, they must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends, which alone they can oppose each other. Dryden.

Being thus saved himself, he may be zealous in the salvation of souls. Lowe.

ZEALOUSLY. adv. [from zealous.] With passionate ardour.

Thy care is fixt, and zealously attends,
To fill thy odorous lamp with deeds of light,
And hope that reaps not shame. Milton.

To enter into a party as into an order of friars with so religious an obedience to superiors, is very unbecoming with the civil and religious liberties; so zealously alert. Dow.

ZEALOUSNESS. n. f. [from zealous.] The quality of being zealous.

ZECHIN. n. f. [so named from Zeck a place in Venice, where the mint settled for coinage.] A gold coin worth about nine shillings sterling.

ZE'DOARY. n. f. [zedoaire, French.] A spicy plant, somewhat like ginger in leaves, but of a sweet scent.

ZED. n. f. The name of the letter z. Thou whoreson zed, thou unnecessary letter. Shakespeare.

ZENITH. n. f. [Arabick.] The point over head opposite to the nadir.

Fond men! if we believe that men do live Under the zenith of both frozen poles,

Though none come thence advertisement to g
Why bear we not the like faith of our souls? Dar.

Their seasons are designed by the motion of the sun; when that approaches nearest our zenith or vertical point, we call it summer.

Brown's Vulgar Err.

ZEPHYR. } n. f. [zephyrus, Lat.
ZEPHYRUS. } The west wind; a poetical, any calm soft wind.

They are as gentle
As zephyrus blowing below the violet. Shak. C.
Zephyr you shall see a youth with a merry countenance, holding in his hand a swan with a displayed, as about to sing.

North with the levant and the ponant winds,
Eurus and Zephyr.
Milton.
Milton as which Zephyrus on Flora breathes. Milton.

ZEPH n. f.

1. A peel of an orange squeezed into wine.

2. A relish; a taste added.

Almighty vanity! in thee they owe
Their rest of pleasure, and their balm of woe.

Tung.

To heighten by an additional relish.

ZEPH n. f. [from ζῆλον.] Proceeding by enquiry.

ZEPH n. f. [from ζῆλον.] A figure in grammar when a verb agreeing with divers nouns, or an adjective with divers substantives, is referred to one expressly, and to the other by supplement; as, lust overcame shame, boldness fear, and madness reason.

ZEPH n. f. [In architecture.] A small sort of stand or pedestal, being a low square piece or member, serving to support a busto, statue, or the like, that needs to be raised; also a low square member serving to support a column instead of a pedestal, base, or plinth.

DiA.

ZODIACK n. f. [zodiacus, Fr. ζωδιακός, in τῶν ζῶων, the living creatures, the figures of which are painted on it in globes.]

The track of the sun through the twelve signs; a great circle of the sphere, containing the twelve signs.

The golden sun salutes the morn,
And having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiac in his glitt'ring coach. Shak.

Years he number'd scarce thirteen,
When fates turn'd cruel:

Yet three ill'd zodiacs had he been
The stage's jewel. Ben Jonson.

It exceeds their absurdity to suppose the zodiac and planets to be efficient of, and antecedent to, themselves, or to exert any influences before they were in being.

Bentley.

Here in a skene, that cast a dazzling light,
Sat fixt in thought the mighty Stagyrite;
His sacred head a radiant zodiac crown'd,
And various animals his sides surround. Pope.

2. It is used by Milton for a girdle.

By his side,

As in a glitt'ring zodiac, hung the sword,
Satan's dire dread; and in his hand the spear. Milton.

ZONE n. f. [ζών; zona, Latin.]

1. A girdle.

The middle part

Olt like a starry zone his waist, and round
Skirted his loins and thighs with downy gold,
And colours dipp'd in heaven. Milt. Paradise Lost.

An embroider'd zone surrounds her waist. Dryd.
Thy statue, Venus, though by Phidias' hands
Design'd immortal, yet no longer stands;
The magic of thy shining zone is past,
But Salisbury's garter shall for ever last. Gray.
Scarce could the goddess from her nymphs be known.

But by the crescent and the golden zone. Pope.

2. A division of the earth.

The whole surface of the earth is divided into five zones: the first is contained between the two tropicks, and is called the torrid zone. There are two temperate zones, and two frigid zones. The northern temperate zone is terminated by the tropick of Cancer and the arctic polar circle: the southern temperate zone is contained between the tropick of Capricorn and the polar circle: the frigid zones are circumscribed by the polar circles, and the poles are in their centers.

True love is still the same: the torrid zones,
And those more frigid ones,

It must not know:
For love grown cold or hot,
Is lust or friendship, not

The thing we show:
For that's a flame would die,
Held down or up too high:
Then think I love more than I can express,
And would love more, could I but love thee less. Suckling.

And as five zones th' aetherial regions bind,
Five correspondent are to earth assign'd:
The sun, with rays directly darting down,
Fires all beneath, and fires the middle zone. Dryd.

3. Circuit; circumference.

Scarce the sun

Hath finish'd half his journey, and scarce begins
His other half in the great zone of heaven. Milton.

ZOO'GRAPHER n. f. [ζῷον and γράφω.]

One who describes the nature, properties, and forms of animals.

One kind of locust stands not prone, or a little inclining upward; but in a large erectness, elevating the two fore legs, and sustaining itself in the middle of the other four, by zoographers called the prophet and praying locust. Brown.

ZOOGRAPHY [of ζῷον and γράφω.] A description of the forms, natures, and properties of animals.

If we contemplate the end, its principal final cause being the glory of its Maker, this leads us into divinity; and for its subordinate, as it is designed for alimental subsistence to living creatures, and medicinal utes to man, we are thereby conducted into zoography. Glanville's Scopsis.

ZOOLOGY n. f. [of ζῷον and λογία.] A treatise concerning living creatures.

ZOOPHYTE n. f. [ζῷοφυτον, of ζῷον and φυτον.] Certain vegetables, or substances which partake of the nature both of vegetables and animals.
